"(aa) in the case of an exemption granted under sub-section (1A), with any of the conditions imposed under that sub-section; and"

(c) for sub-section (5), the following sub-sections shall be substituted, namely:—

"(5) Where any exemption granted under sub-section (1), sub-section (1A) or sub-section (2) is cancelled, the amount of accumulations to the credit of every employee to whom such exemption applied, in the provident fund or the family pension fund of the establishment in which he is employed, shall be transferred within such time and in such manner as may be specified in the Scheme or the Family Pension Scheme to the credit of his account in the Fund or the Family Pension Fund, as the case may be.

(6) Subject to the provisions of sub-section (1A), the employer of an exempted establishment or of an exempted employee of an establishment to which the provisions of the Family Pension Scheme apply, shall, notwithstanding any exemption granted under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2), pay to the Family Pension Fund such portion of the employer's contribution as well as the employee's contribution to its provident fund within such time and in such manner as may be specified in the Family Pension Scheme."

28. Amendment of Section 18.— In Section 18 of the Provident Funds Act, for the words "or under any Scheme", the words "the Scheme or the Family Pension Scheme" shall be substituted.

29. Amendment of Section 19.— In Section 19 of the Provident Funds Act, for the words "or any Scheme", the words "the Scheme or the Family Pension Scheme" shall be substituted.

30. Insertion of new Schedule III.— After Schedule II to the Provident Funds Act, the following Schedule shall be inserted, namely:—

"SCHEDULE III

(See Section 6A (4).)

MATTERS FOR WHICH PROVISION MAY BE MADE IN THE FAMILY PENSION SCHEME

1. The employees or class of employees to whom the Family Pension Scheme shall apply and the time within which option to join that Scheme shall be exercised by those employees to whom the said Scheme does not apply.

2. Subject to the provisions of Section 6A (2), the portion of employer's and employee's contribution which may be credited to the Family Pension Fund and the manner in which it may be credited.

3. The contribution by the Central Government to the Family Pension Fund and the manner in which such contribution is to be made.

4. The manner in which the accounts of the Family Pension Fund shall be kept and the investment of moneys belonging to the Family Pension Fund with the Central Government at a rate of interest which shall not be less than five and a half per centum per annum.

5. The form in which an employee shall furnish particulars about himself and his family whenever required.

6. The nomination of a person to receive the assurance amount due to the employee after his death and the cancellation or variation of such nomination.

7. The registers and records to be maintained in respect of employees, the form or design of any identity card, token or disc for the purpose of identifying any employee, or his nominee or a member of his family entitled to receive the pension.

8. The scales of family pension and the assurance amount.

9. The manner in which the exempted establishments have to pay the contributions (both employer's and employee's shares) towards the Family Pension Fund and the submission of returns relating thereto.

10. The mode of disbursement of family pension and the arrangements to be entered into with such disbursing agencies as may be specified for the purpose.

11. The manner in which the expenses incurred in connection with the administration of the Family Pension Scheme may be paid by the Central Government to the Central Board.

12. Any other matter which is to be provided for in the Family Pension Scheme or which may be necessary or proper for the purpose of implementing the Family Pension Scheme."

31. Consequential amendment of Act 31 of 1956.— In Section 44 of the Life Insurance Corporation Act, 1956, after clause (f), the following clause shall be inserted, namely:—

"(g) any Family Pension Scheme framed under the Coal Mines Provident Fund, Family Pension and Bonus Schemes Act, 1948 or the Employees' Provident Funds and Family Pension Fund Act, 1952 for the purpose of providing family pension and life assurance benefits to the employees covered by the said Scheme."

32. Repeal and savings.— (1) The Labour Provident Fund Laws (Amendment) Ordinance, 1971, is hereby repealed.

(2) Notwithstanding such repeal, anything done or any action taken under the Coal Mines Act or the Provident Funds Act, as amended by the said Ordinance, shall be deemed to have been done or taken under the Coal Mines Act or the Provident Funds Act as amended by this Act, as the case may be, as if this Act had come into force on the 13th day of February, 1971.

THE GENERAL INSURANCE (EMERGENCY PROVISIONS) ACT, 1971

(17th June, 1971)

An Act to provide for the taking over, in the public interest, of the management of general insurance business pending nationalisation of such business.

WHEREAS it is expedient in the public interest that general insurance business should be nationalised;

AND WHEREAS it is expedient that pending such nationalisation, adequate steps should be taken to protect the interest of the policy-holders;

BE it enacted by Parliament in the Twenty-second Year of the Republic of India as follows:—

1. Short title and commencement.—

(1) This Act may be called THE GENERAL INSURANCE (EMERGENCY PROVISIONS) ACT, 1971.

(2) It shall be deemed to have come into force on the 13th day of May, 1971.

2. Definitions.— In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires,—

(a) "appointed day" means the 13th day of May, 1971;

(b) "Custodian" means the person appointed under Section 4 to take over the management of the undertaking of any insurer;

(c) "general insurance business" means fire, marine or miscellaneous insurance business, whether carried on singly or in combination with one or more of them, but does not include capital redemption business and annuity certain business;

(d) "Insurance Act" means the Insurance Act, 1938;

(e) "insurer" means an insurer, as defined in the Insurance Act, who carries on general insurance business in India, and includes an insurer whose registration under that Act has not remained wholly cancelled for a period of six months immediately before the appointed day, but does not include the Life Insurance Corporation of India established under the Life Insurance Corporation Act, 1956, or any State Government which carries on general insurance business;

(f) "notified order" means an order notified in the Official Gazette;

(g) "prescribed" means prescribed by rules made under this Act;

(h) "undertaking", in relation to an insurer incorporated outside India, means the undertaking of that insurer in India;

(i) words and expressions used herein but not defined, and defined in the Insurance Act, have the meanings respectively assigned to them in that Act.

3. Management of undertakings to vest in Government on commencement of this Act.—

(1) On and from the appointed day, management of the undertakings of all insurers shall vest in the Central Government, and, pending the appointment of a Custodian for the undertaking of any insurer, the persons in charge of the management of such undertaking immediately before the appointed day shall on and from the appointed day, be in charge of the management of the undertaking for and on behalf of the Central Government; and the management of the undertaking of the insurer shall be carried on by them subject to the provisions contained in sub-sections (3) and (5) and to such further directions, if any, as the Central Government may give to them by notice addressed and sent to the principal officer of the insurer.

(2) Any contract, whether express or implied, providing for the management of the undertaking of an insurer, made before the appointed day between the insurer and any person in charge of the management of such undertaking immediately before the appointed day, shall be deemed to have terminated on the appointed day.

(3) No insurer shall, without the previous approval of the person specified by the Central Government in this behalf in respect of that insurer (hereinafter referred to as the "authorised person"),—

(a) make any payment or grant any loan otherwise than in accordance with the normal practice observed by him in respect of such matters immediately before the appointed day;

(b) incur any expenditure from the assets appertaining to the undertaking otherwise than for the purpose of making routine payments of salaries or commissions to employees; insurance agents or for the purpose of meeting the routine day to day expenditure;

(c) transfer or otherwise dispose of any such assets or create any charge, hypothecation, lien or other encumbrance thereon;

(d) invest in any manner any moneys forming part of such assets;

(e) acquire any immovable property out of any moneys forming part of such assets;

(f) enter into any contract of service or agency, whether expressly or by implication, for purposes connected wholly or partly with the undertaking or vary the terms and conditions of any such contract subsisting on the appointed day;

(g) enter into any other transaction relating to the undertaking of the insurer other than a contract relating to the transaction of general insurance business or vary the terms and conditions of any agreement relating to any such transaction subsisting at the commencement of this Act.

(4) The approval of the authorised person may be given either generally in relation to certain classes of transactions of the insurer or specially in relation to any of his transactions.

(5) Every insurer shall deposit all securities and documents of title to any assets appertaining to the undertaking in any Scheduled Bank or Nationalised Bank in which the insurer had an account immediately before the appointed day or in any branch of the State Bank in the place where the head office or the principal office of the insurer is situated or, where there is no branch of the State Bank in such place, the nearest branch of the State Bank; and no such security or document shall be withdrawn from the Scheduled Bank, the Nationalised Bank or the State Bank, as the case may be, except with the permission of the authorised person:

Provided that nothing contained in this sub-section shall apply to any security or document of title kept in trust with an Official Trustee in pursuance of the articles of association of an insurer unless the Central Government, by notified order, otherwise directs.

Explanation.— In this sub-section,—

(a) "Scheduled Bank" means a bank included for the time being in the Second Schedule to the Reserve Bank of India Act, 1934;

(b) "State Bank" means the State Bank of India constituted under the State Bank of India Act, 1955;

(c) "Nationalised Bank" means a corresponding new bank as defined in the Banking Companies (Acquisition and Transfer of Undertakings) Act, 1970.

(6) Every insurer shall deliver forthwith to the person specified in this behalf by the Central Government in respect of that insurer the following documents, namely:—

(a) the minutes book or any other book in India containing all resolutions up to the appointed day of the persons in charge of the management of the undertaking before the appointed day;

(b) the current cheque books relating to the undertaking which are at the head office or the principal office of the insurer;

(c) all registers or other books containing particulars relating to the investment of any moneys appertaining to the undertaking including investments on mortgaged properties and all loans granted and advances made;

(d) all brokers' notes or certificates in the possession of the insurer in respect of any orders for the investment of any moneys appertaining to the undertaking.

(7) Without prejudice to the generality of the powers conferred by sub-section (1) and to the provisions contained in sub-sections (3), (5) and (6), any direction issued under sub-section (1) may require the persons in charge of the management of the undertaking of an insurer under this Act to furnish to the Central Government or to the authorised person such returns, statements and other information relating to the undertaking as may be mentioned in the direction.

(8) The persons in charge of the management of the undertaking of an insurer under this Act shall be entitled to such remuneration, whether by way of allowance or salary or perquisites as the Central Government may fix; and any such person may, by giving one month's notice in writing to the Central Government of his intention so to do, relinquish charge of the management of the undertaking.

4. Power of Central Government to appoint Custodians to take over the management of the undertaking of the insurer.—

(1) The Central Government may, as soon as it is convenient administratively so to do, appoint any person as Custodian for the purpose of taking over the management of the undertaking of an insurer and the person so appointed shall carry on the management of the undertaking of the insurer for and on behalf of the Central Government.

(2) On the appointment of a Custodian under sub-section (1), the charge of management of the undertaking of the insurer shall vest in him and all persons in charge of the management of such undertaking immediately before such appointment shall cease to be in charge of such management and shall be bound to deliver to the Custodian all books of account, registers or other documents in their custody relating to the undertaking of the insurer.

(3) Nothing contained in sub-sections (3), (5) and (6) of Section 3 shall apply to any insurer the charge of management of whose undertaking has been taken over by the Custodian, but the Central Government may issue such directions to the Custodian as to his powers and duties as it deems desirable in the circumstances of the case, and the Custodian may apply to the Central Government at any time for instructions as to the manner in which he shall conduct the management of the undertaking of the insurer or in relation to any matter arising in the course of such management.

(4) The Custodian shall receive from the funds of the undertaking for the charge of management of which he is appointed under sub-section (1) such remuneration as the Central Government may fix.

(5) The Custodian shall hold office during the pleasure of the Central Government.

5. Power of Custodian to institute proceedings, etc.— The Custodian may, in relation to the undertaking of any insurer the charge of management of which has been taken over by him, exercise—

(a) all or any of the powers which the Controller of Insurance may exercise under Section 106 or Section 107 of the Insurance Act;

(b) all or any of the powers under Section 52B, Section 52BB, Section 52C or Section 52D of the Insurance Act which an Administrator appointed under Section 52A of that Act could have exercised in relation to life insurance business of an insurer.

6. Payment of compensation.— (1) Every insurer shall be given by the Central Government compensation for the vesting in it, under Section 3, of the management of the undertaking of the insurer.

(2) For every month during which the management of the undertaking of the insurer remains vested in the Central Government, the amount of compensation referred to in sub-section (1) shall be—

(A) in the case of an insurer referred to in clause (b) of sub-section (9) of Section 2 of the Insurance Act,—

(i) where the insurer has declared a dividend during at least one of the three calendar years 1967, 1968 and 1969,—

(a) a sum equal to one-twelfth of the annual average (for the three years) of the amount distributed to shareholders as dividend; or

(b) a sum equal to two-and-a-half rupees for every thousand rupees or part thereof of the net premium income of the undertaking of insurer during the year 1969, whichever is greater;

(ii) in any other case, a sum equal to two-and-a-half rupees for every thousand rupees or part thereof of the net premium income of the undertaking of the insurer during the year 1969;

(B) in the case of an insurer referred to in clause (a) of sub-section (9) of Sec. 2 of the Insurance Act, a sum equal to two-and-a-half rupees for every thousand rupees or part thereof of the net premium income of the undertaking of the insurer in India during the year 1969.

7. Compensation how to be paid.—

(1) The compensation referred to in Section 6 shall be paid by the Central Government in cash to every insurer.

(2) The compensation received by an insurer under Section 6 shall be dealt with by him in such manner as may be prescribed.

8. Penalties.— If any person—

(a) fails to deliver to the Custodian any books of account, registers or any other documents in his custody relating to the undertaking of an insurer in respect of the management of which the Custodian has been appointed, or

(b) retains any property of such insurer appertaining to the undertaking of the insurer, or

(c) fails to comply with the provisions contained in sub-section (3) or sub-section (5) or sub-section (6) of Section 3, or

(d) fails to comply with any directions issued under sub-section (1) or sub-section (7) of Section 3, he shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

9. Insurer not to be wound up by Court.— No proceeding for the winding up of an insurer, the management of whose undertaking has vested in the Central Government, under this Act, or for the appointment of a Receiver in respect of such business, shall lie in any Court.

10. Exclusion of time of Act for computing period of limitation.— In computing the period of limitation prescribed by any law for the time being in force for any suit or application against any person by an insurer in respect of any matter arising out of his undertaking, the time during which this Act is in force shall be excluded.

11. Effect of Act on other laws.— The provisions of this Act shall have effect notwithstanding anything inconsistent therewith contained in any other law for the time being in force or in any instrument having effect by virtue of any law other than this Act.

12. Delegation of powers.— The Central Government may, by notified order, direct that all or any of the powers exercisable by it under this Act may also be exercised by any such person as may be specified in the order.

13. Protection of action taken under this Act.— (1) No suit, prosecution or other legal proceeding shall lie against any Custodian or authorised person in respect of anything which is in good faith done or intended to be done under this Act.

(2) No suit or other legal proceeding shall lie against the Central Government or any Custodian or authorised person for any damage caused or likely to be caused by anything which is in good faith done or intended to be done under this Act.

14. New certificate of registration not to be issued.— Notwithstanding the provisions of Section 3 of the Insurance Act, the Controller of Insurance shall not, after the appointed day, issue any new certificate of registration under that section to any person.

15. Act where not to apply.— Nothing contained in this Act shall apply to—

(a) any insurer whose business is being voluntarily wound up or is being wound up by a Court;

(b) any insurer to whom the Insurance Act does not apply by reason of the provisions contained in Section 2E thereof;

(c) the Calcutta Hospital and Nursing Home Benefit Association, Limited;

(d) the Export Credit Guarantee Corporation;

(e) the Deposit Insurance Scheme;

(f) any scheme of insurance which might be exempted by the Central Government relating to—

(i) crop and cattle,

(ii) war risks,

(iii) emergency risks;

(g) general insurance business carried on by a State Government or by the Life Insurance Corporation of India.

16. Power to make rules.— (1) The Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, make rules to carry out the provisions of this Act.

(2) In particular, and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, such rules may provide for all or any of the following matters, namely:—

(a) the form and manner in which books of account appertaining to undertakings shall be maintained by insurers;

(b) the manner in which any compensation payable under this Act shall be dealt with by an insurer;

(c) the circumstances in which the remuneration payable to persons in charge of the management of the undertaking of an insurer under this Act or to Custodians shall be met by the Central Government, whether wholly or in part;

(d) any other matter which is required to be, or may be, prescribed.

17. Repeal and savings.— (1) The General Insurance (Emergency Provisions) Ordinance, 1971, is hereby repealed.

(2) Notwithstanding such repeal, anything done or any action taken (including any direction given and orders and rules made) under the said Ordinance shall be deemed to have been done or taken under the corresponding provisions of this Act.

THE BENGAL FINANCE (SALES TAX) (DELHI VALIDATION OF APPOINT-MENTS AND PROCEEDINGS)
ACT, 1971

(23rd June, 1971)

An Act to validate appointments of certain officers under the Bengal Finance (Sales Tax) Act, 1941, as in force in the union territory of Delhi and to validate proceedings taken by such officers under that Act and the Central Sales Tax Act, 1956.

BE it enacted by Parliament in the Twenty-second Year of the Republic of India as follows:—

1. Short title.— This Act may be called THE BENGAL FINANCE (SALES TAX) (DELHI VALIDATION OF APPOINTMENTS AND PROCEEDINGS) ACT, 1971.

2. Definitions.— In this Act,—

(a) “Administrator” means the administrator of the Union Territory of Delhi appointed by the President under Article 239 of the Constitution;

(b) “appointment” means appointment as—

(a) Commissioner of Sales Tax; or
(b) Additional Commissioner of Sales Tax; or

(c) Deputy Commissioner of Sales Tax; or

(d) Assistant Commissioner of Sales Tax; or

(e) Sales Tax Officer; or

(f) Assistant Sales Tax Officer; or

(g) Inspector.

3. Validation of appointments, assessments, etc.— Notwithstanding anything contained in any judgment, decree or order of any court, tribunal or other authority,—

(a) no appointment of any person made or purporting to have been made under or for the purposes of the Bengal Finance (Sales Tax) Act, 1941, as in force in the Union Territory of Delhi (hereinafter referred to as the principal Act) before the commencement of this Act shall be deemed to be illegal or invalid or ever to have been illegal or invalid merely on the ground that such appointment was not made in accordance with the provisions of Section 3 of the principal Act or on the ground that such appointment was not made under that section or on both those grounds; and

(b) no assessment, re-assessment, levy or collection of any tax made or purporting to have been made under the principal Act or under the Central Sales Tax Act, 1956, as the case may be, before the commencement of this Act and no jurisdiction exercised, no order made and no other act or proceeding or thing done or taken by, or before, a person referred to in cl. (a) in relation to such assessment, re-assessment, levy or collection shall be deemed to be illegal or invalid or ever to have been illegal or invalid merely on the ground that such jurisdiction was exercised or such order had been made or such other act or proceeding or thing had been done or taken by, or before, a person whose appointment was not made in accordance with or under the provisions of Section 3 of the principal Act, and accordingly—

(i) all appointments made or purporting to have been made under or for the purposes of the principal Act before the commencement of this Act shall, for all purposes, be deemed to be, and to have been, made in accordance with law;

(ii) the jurisdiction exercised, orders made and all other acts, proceedings or things done or taken by the Administrator or by a person whose appointment had been made as aforesaid or by any other officer of Government or by any tribunal or other authority in connection with the said appointments or in connection with the assessment, re-assessment, levy or collection of tax under the principal Act or under the Central Sales Tax Act, 1956, as the case may be, shall, for all purposes, be deemed to be and to have been exercised, made, done or taken in accordance with law; and

(iii) no suit or other proceedings shall be maintained or continued in any Court or before any tribunal or other authority whatsoever on the ground that any such appointment was illegal or invalid or any such jurisdiction, order or other act, proceeding or thing was not exercised, made, done or taken in accordance with law.

4. Repeal and saving.— (1) The Bengal Finance (Sales Tax) (Delhi Validation of Appointments and Proceedings) Ordinance, 1971, is hereby repealed.

(2) Notwithstanding such repeal, anything done or any action taken under the said Ordinance shall be deemed to have been done or taken under this Act, as if this Act had commenced on the 18th day of May, 1971.

*Received the assent of the President on 23-6-1971. Act published in Gaz. of India; 24-6-1971, Pt. II-Sec. 1, Ext., P. 169. For the Statement of Objects and Reasons, see Gaz. of India; 3-6-1971, Pt. II-S.2, Ext. P. 268.

THE GOLD (CONTROL) AMENDMENT ACT, 1971

(24th June, 1971)

An Act further to amend the Gold (Control) Act, 1968.

BE it enacted by Parliament in the Twenty-second Year of the Republic of India as follows:—

1. Short title and commencement.—

(1) This Act may be called THE GOLD (CONTROL) AMENDMENT ACT, 1971.

(2) It shall be deemed to have come into force on the 20th day of May, 1971.

2. Amendment of Section 71.— In Section 71 of the Gold (Control) Act, 1968 (hereinafter referred to as the principal Act),—

(i) for sub-section (1), the following sub-section shall be, and shall be deemed always to have been substituted, namely:—

“(1) Any gold in respect of which any provision of this Act or any rule or order made thereunder has been, or is being, or is attempted to be, contravened, together with any package, covering or receptacle in which such gold is found, shall be liable to confiscation:

Provided that where it is established to the satisfaction of the officer adjudging the confiscation that such gold or other thing belongs to a person other than the person who has, by any act or omission, rendered it liable to confiscation, and such act or omission was without the knowledge or connivance of the person to whom it belongs, it shall not be ordered to be confiscated but such other action, as is authorised by this Act, may be taken against the person who has, by such act or omission, rendered it liable to confiscation.”;

“(2) Where any package, covering or receptacle referred to in sub-section (1) contains any goods, such contents shall also be liable to confiscation.

(3) Where any gold is liable to confiscation under sub-section (1), it shall be so liable notwithstanding any change in its form, and where such gold is mixed with other goods in such manner that it cannot be separated from those other goods, the whole of such goods, including the gold, shall be liable to confiscation.

*Received the assent of the President on 24-6-1971. Act published in Gaz. of India; 25-6-1971, Pt. II-Sec. 1, Ext. P. 175. For Statement of Objects and Reasons, see Gaz. of India; 1-6-1971,—Pt. II-S. 2, Ext. P. 262.

(4) On and from the commencement of the Gold (Control) Amendment Act, 1971, the proviso to sub-section (1) shall also apply to any gold or other thing which is liable to confiscation under sub-section (2) or sub-section (3).”.

3. Amendment of Section 73.— In Section 73 of the principal Act, the word “twice” shall be, and shall be deemed always to have been, omitted.

4. Reopening of past confiscations.—

(1) Where any order made, before the commencement of this Act, for the confiscation of any gold or other thing or giving option to pay fine in lieu thereof is such that it could not have been made if the principal Act, as amended by this Act, were in force on the date on which the said order was made, the officer competent under Sec. 73 to adjudge such confiscation shall, on an application made to him by the person aggrieved by such order, set aside the order of confiscation or, as the case may be, the order giving option to pay fine in lieu of confiscation, and also any order imposing penalty in addition to confiscation or giving option to pay fine in lieu thereof, and make a fresh adjudication in accordance with the provisions of the principal Act, as amended by this Act.

(2) The power referred to in sub-section (1) shall be exercised by the officer specified therein in relation to the final order of adjudication of confiscation or giving option to pay fine in lieu thereof or imposing any penalty, whether or not such final order was made in appeal under S. 80 or in revision under Section 81 or Section 82.

(3) Every application referred to in sub-section (1) shall be made within ninety days from the commencement of this Act or within such further time, not exceeding ninety days, as the officer specified in that sub-section may, on sufficient cause being shown, allow.

(4) Where, and in so far as, any order for the confiscation of any gold or other thing, or any option given to pay fine in lieu of confiscation or imposing any penalty is modified or reversed, the officer specified in sub-section (1) shall make an order for such refund or restitution as the circumstances of the case may require:

Provided that where the restitution of any gold or other thing is not practicable, the said authority shall make an order for the payment to the person to whom such restitution is to be made, the market value of such gold or other thing, as on the date on which the fresh adjudication is made.

(5) Nothing in this section shall apply to any confiscation made, option given to pay fine in lieu of confiscation, or penalty imposed under Part XII-A of the Defence of India Rules, 1962.

5. Validation.— Notwithstanding any judgment, decree or order of any Court, any confiscation made, penalty imposed or fine levied under the Gold (Control) Act, 1968, before the commencement of this Act shall, in so far as it is not inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, be deemed to have been made, imposed or levied in accordance with the provisions of the Gold (Control) Act, 1968, as amended by this Act.

6. Repeal and savings.— (1) The Gold (Control) Amendment Ordinance, 1971 is hereby repealed.

(2) Notwithstanding such repeal, anything done, any action taken or any order made under the said Ordinance shall be deemed to have been done, taken or made under the corresponding provisions of the Gold (Control) Act, 1968, as amended by this Act.

THE SALARIES AND ALLOWANCES OF OFFICERS OF PARLIAMENT (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1971

(24th June, 1971)

An Act further to amend the Salaries and Allowances of Officers of Parliament Act, 1953.

BE it enacted by Parliament in the Twenty-second Year of the Republic of India as follows:—

1. Short title.— This Act may be called THE SALARIES AND ALLOWANCES OF OFFICERS OF PARLIAMENT (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1971.

2. Substitution of new section for Section 3.— For Section 3 of the Salaries and Allowances of Officers of Parliament Act, 1953 (hereinafter referred to as the principal Act), the following section shall be substituted, namely:—

“3. Salaries of officers of Parliament.— There shall be paid to each officer of Parliament a salary of two thousand, two hundred and fifty rupees per mensem.”

3. Amendment of Section 5.— In Section 5 of the principal Act, the words “and to the Deputy Chairman and the Deputy Speaker a sumptuary allowance of two hundred and fifty rupees per mensem” shall be added at the end.

*Received the assent of the President on 24-6-1971. Act published in Gaz. of India; 25-6-1971, Pt. II-S. 1, Ext. P. 178. For Statement of Objects and Reasons, see Gaz. of India; 4-6-1971, Pt. II-S. 2, Ext. P. 280.

THE MYSORE STATE LEGISLATURE (DELEGATION OF POWERS) ACT, 1971

(26th June, 1971)

An Act to confer on the President the power of the Legislature of the State of Mysore to make laws.

BE it enacted by Parliament in the Twenty-second year of the Republic of India as follows:—

1. Short title.— This Act may be called THE MYSORE STATE LEGISLATURE (DELEGATION OF POWERS) ACT, 1971.

2. Definition.— In this Act, “Proclamation” means the Proclamation issued on the 27th day of March, 1971, under Article 356 of the Constitution, by the President, and published with the notification of the Government of India in the Ministry of Home Affairs No. G.S.R. 457 of the said date.

3. Conferment on the President of the power of the State Legislature to make laws.— (1) The power of the Legislature of the State of Mysore to make laws, which has been declared by the Proclamation to be exercisable by or under the authority of Parliament, is hereby conferred on the President.

(2) In the exercise of the said power, the President may, from time to time, whether Parliament is or is not in session, enact, as a President's Act a Bill containing such provisions as he considers necessary:

Provided that before enacting any such Act, the President shall, whenever he considers it practicable to do so, consult a Committee constituted for the purpose, consisting of forty members of the House of the People nominated by the Speaker and twenty members of the Council of States nominated by the Chairman.

(3) Every Act enacted by the President under sub-section (2) shall, as soon as may be after enactment, be laid before each House of Parliament.

(4) Either House of Parliament may, by resolution, passed within thirty days from the date on which the Act has been laid before it under sub-section (3), which period may be comprised in one session or in two successive sessions, direct any modifications to be made in the Act and if the modifications are agreed to by the other House of Parliament during the session in which the Act has been so laid before it or the session succeeding, such modifications shall be given effect to by the President by enacting an amending Act under sub-section (2):

THE MAINTENANCE OF INTERNAL SECURITY ACT, 1971

(2nd July, 1971)

An Act to provide for detention in certain cases for the purpose of maintenance of internal security and matters connected therewith.

BE it enacted by Parliament in the Twenty-second Year of the Republic of India as follows:—

1. Short title and extent.—(1) This Act may be called THE MAINTENANCE OF INTERNAL SECURITY ACT, 1971.

(2) It extends to the whole of India except the State of Jammu and Kashmir.

2. Definitions.—In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires,—

(a) "appropriate Government" means, as respects a detention order made by the Central Government or a person detained under such order, the Central Government, and as respects a detention order made by a State Government or by an officer subordinate to a State Government or as respects a person detained under such order, the State Government;

1971 Acts/2

(b) "detention order" means an order made under Section 3;

(c) "Foreigner" has the same meaning as in the Foreigners Act, 1946;

(d) "State Government" in relation to a Union Territory, means the administrator thereof.

3. Power to make orders detaining certain persons.—(1) The Central Government or the State Government may,—

(a) if satisfied with respect to any person (including a foreigner) that with a view to preventing him from acting in any manner prejudicial to—

(i) the defence of India, the relations of India with foreign powers, or the security of India, or

(ii) the security of the State or the maintenance of public order, or

(iii) the maintenance of supplies and services essential to the community, or

(b) if satisfied with respect to any foreigner that with a view to regulating his continued presence in India or with a view to making arrangements for his expulsion from India, it is necessary so to do, make an order directing that such person be detained.

(2) Any of the following officers, namely:—

(a) district magistrates,

(b) additional district magistrates specially empowered in this behalf by the State Government,

(c) Commissioners of Police, wherever they have been appointed, may, if satisfied as provided in sub-cl. (ii) and (iii) of clause (a) of sub-section (1), exercise the power conferred by the said sub-section.

(3) When any order is made under this section by an officer mentioned in sub-section (2), he shall forthwith report the fact to the State Government to which he is subordinate together with the grounds on which the order has been made and such other particulars as in his opinion have a bearing on the matter, and no such order shall remain in force for more than twelve days after the making thereof unless in the meantime it has been approved by the State Government:

Provided that where under Section 8 the grounds of detention are communicated by the authority making the order after five days but not later than fifteen days from the date of detention, this sub-section shall apply subject to the modification that for the words "twelve days", the words "twenty-two days" shall be substituted.

(4) When any order is made or approved by the State Government under this section, the State Government shall, within seven days, report the fact to the Central Government together with the grounds on which the order has been made and such other particulars as in the opinion of the State Government have a bearing on the necessity for the order.

4. Execution of detention orders.—

A detention order may be executed at any place in India in the manner provided for the execution of warrants of arrest under the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898.

5. Power to regulate place and conditions of detention.— Every person in respect of whom a detention order has been made shall be liable—

(a) to be detained in such place and under such conditions, including conditions as to maintenance, discipline and punishment for breaches of discipline, as the appropriate Government may, by general or special order, specify; and

(b) to be removed from one place of detention to another place of detention, whether within the same State or in another State, by order of the appropriate Government;

Provided that no order shall be made by a State Government under clause (b) for the removal of a person from one State to another State except with the consent of the Government of that other State.

6. Detention orders not to be invalid or inoperative on certain grounds.— No detention order shall be invalid or inoperative merely by reason—

(a) that the person to be detained thereunder is outside the limits of the territorial jurisdiction of the Government or officer making the order; or

(b) that the place of detention of such person is outside the said limits.

7. Powers in relation to absconding persons.— (1) If the Central Government or the State Government or an officer specified in sub-section (2) of Section 3, as the case may be, has reason to believe that a person in respect of whom a detention order has been made has absconded or is concealing himself so that the order cannot be executed, that Government or officer may—

(a) make a report in writing of the fact to a Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class having jurisdiction in the place where the said person ordinarily resides; and thereupon the provisions of Sections 87, 88 and 89 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, shall apply in respect of the said person and his property as if the order directing that he be detained were a warrant issued by the Magistrate;

(b) by order notified in the Official Gazette direct the said person to appear before such officer, at such place and within such period as may be specified in the order; and if the said person fails to comply with such direction he shall, unless he proves that it was not possible for him to comply therewith and that he had, within the period specified in the order, informed the officer mentioned in the order of the reason which rendered compliance therewith impossible and of his whereabouts, be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to one year or with fine or with both.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, every offence under clause (b) of sub-section (1) shall be cognizable.

8. Grounds of order of detention to be disclosed to persons affected by the order.— (1) When a person is detained in pursuance of a detention order, the authority making the order shall, as soon as may be, but ordinarily not later than five days and in exceptional circumstances and for reasons to be recorded in writing, not later than fifteen days, from the date of detention, communicate to him the grounds on which the order has been made and shall afford him the earliest opportunity of making a representation against the order to the appropriate Government.

(2) Nothing in sub-section (1) shall require the authority to disclose facts which it considers to be against the public interest to disclose.

9. Constitution of Advisory Boards.—

(1) The Central Government and each State Government shall, whenever necessary, constitute one or more Advisory Boards for the purposes of this Act.

(2) Every such Board shall consist of three persons who are, or have been, or are qualified to be appointed as, Judges of a High Court, and such persons shall be appointed by the Central Government or the State Government, as the case may be.

(3) The appropriate Government shall appoint one of the members of the Advisory Board who is, or has been, a Judge of a High Court to be its Chairman, and in the case of a Union Territory the appointment to the Advisory Board, of any person who is a Judge of the High Court of a State shall be with the previous approval of the State Government concerned.

10. Reference to Advisory Boards.—

Save as otherwise expressly provided in this Act, in every case where a detention order has been made under this Act, the appropriate Government shall, within thirty days from the date of detention under the order, place before the Advisory Board constituted by it under Section 9 the grounds on which the order has been made and the representation, if any, made by the person affected by the order, and in case where the order has been made by an officer, also the report by such officer under sub-section (3) of Section 3.

11. Procedure of Advisory Boards.—

(1) The Advisory Board shall, after considering the materials placed before it and, after calling for such further information as it may deem necessary from the appropriate Government or from any person called for the purpose through the appropriate Government or from the person concerned, and if, in any particular case, it considers it essential so to do or if the person concerned desires to be heard, after hearing him in person, submit its report to the appropriate Government within ten weeks from the date of detention.

(2) The report of the Advisory Board shall specify in a separate part thereof the opinion of the Advisory Board as to whether or not there is sufficient cause for the detention of the person concerned.

(3) When there is a difference of opinion among the members forming the Advisory Board, the opinion of the majority of such members shall be deemed to be the opinion of the Board.

(4) Nothing in this section shall entitle any person against whom a detention order has been made to appear by any legal practitioner in any matter connected with the reference to the Advisory Board, and the proceedings of the Advisory Board and its report, excepting that part of the report in which the opinion of the Advisory Board is specified, shall be confidential.

12. Action upon the report of Advisory Board.—(1) In any case where the Advisory Board has reported that there is in its opinion sufficient cause for the detention of a person, the appropriate Government may confirm the detention order and continue the detention of the person concerned for such period as it thinks fit.

(2) In any case where the Advisory Board has reported that there is in its opinion no sufficient cause for the detention of the person concerned, the appropriate Government shall revoke the detention order and cause the person to be released forthwith.

13. Maximum period of detention.—The maximum period for which any person may be detained in pursuance of any detention order which has been confirmed under Section 12 shall be twelve months from the date of detention:

Provided that nothing contained in this section shall affect the power of the appropriate Government to revoke or modify the detention order at any earlier time.

14. Revocation of detention orders.—

(1) Without prejudice to the provisions of Section 21 of the General Clauses Act, 1897, a detention order may, at any time, be revoked or modified—

(a) notwithstanding that the order has been made by an officer mentioned in sub-section (2) of Section 3, by the State Government to which that officer is subordinate or by the Central Government;

(b) notwithstanding that the order has been made by a State Government or by the Central Government.

(2) The revocation or expiry of a detention order shall not bar the making of a fresh detention order under Section 3 against the same person in any case where fresh facts have arisen after the date of revocation or expiry on which the Central Government or a State Government or an officer, as the case may be, is satisfied that such an order should be made.

15. Temporary release of persons detained.—

(1) The appropriate Government may, at any time, direct that any person detained in pursuance of a detention order may be released for any specified period either without conditions or upon such conditions specified in the direction as that person accepts, and may, at any time, cancel his release.

(2) In directing the release of any person under sub-section (1), the appropriate Government may require him to enter into a bond with or without sureties for the due observance of the conditions specified in the direction.

(3) Any person released under sub-section (1) shall surrender himself at the time and place, and to the authority, specified in the order directing his release or cancelling his release, as the case may be.

(4) If any person fails without sufficient cause to surrender himself in the manner specified in sub-section (3), he shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

(5) If any person released under sub-section (1) fails to fulfil any of the conditions imposed upon him under the said sub-section or in the bond entered into by him, the bond shall be declared to be forfeited and any person bound thereby shall be liable to pay the penalty thereof.

16. Protection of action taken in good faith.—No suit or other legal proceeding shall lie against the Central Government or a State Government, and no suit, prosecution or other legal proceeding shall lie against any person, for anything in good faith done or intended to be done in pursuance of this Act.

17. Duration of detention in certain cases of foreigners.—

(1) Notwithstanding anything contained in this Act, any foreigner in respect of whom an order of detention has been made under this Act may be detained without obtaining the opinion of the Advisory Board for a period longer than three months, but not exceeding two years from the date of his detention, in any of the following classes of cases or under any of the following circumstances, namely:—

(a) where such foreigner enters or attempts to enter the territory of India or is found therein with arms, ammunition or explosives, or

(b) where such foreigner enters or attempts to enter a notified area or is found therein in contravention of Section 3 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1961; or

(c) where such foreigner enters or attempts to enter the local limits or is found within the local limits of such area adjoining the borders of India as may be specified in an order made under Section 139 of the Border Security Force Act, 1968, without a valid travel document; or

(d) where the Central Government has reason to believe that such foreigner commits or is likely to commit any offence under the Official Secrets Act, 1923.

(2) In the case of any foreigner to whom sub-section (1) applies, Sections 10 to 13 shall have effect subject to the following modifications, namely:—

(a) in Section 10, for the words "shall, within thirty days", the words "may, at any time prior to but in no case later than three months before the expiration of two years" shall be substituted;

(b) in Section 11,—

(i) in sub-section (1), for the words "from the date of detention", the words "from the date on which reference is made to it" shall be substituted;

(ii) in sub-section (2), for the words "the detention of the person concerned", the words "the continued detention of the person concerned" shall be substituted;

(c) in Section 12, for the words "for the detention" in both the places where they occur, the words "for the continued detention" shall be substituted;

(d) in Section 13, for the words "twelve months" the words "three years" shall be substituted.

18. Repeal and saving.—(1) The Maintenance of Internal Security Ordinance, 1971, is hereby repealed.

(2) Notwithstanding such repeal, anything done or any action taken under the said Ordinance shall be deemed to have been done or taken under the corresponding provisions of this Act as if this Act had come into force on the 7th day of May, 1971.

An Act to give effect to the financial proposals of the Central Government for the financial year 1971-72 and to provide for the levy of foreign travel tax.

BE it enacted by Parliament in the Twenty-second Year of the Republic of India as follows:—

CHAPTER I

PRELIMINARY

1. Short title and commencement.— (1) This Act may be called THE FINANCE (NO. 2) ACT, 1971.

(2) Save as otherwise provided in this Act, Sections 2 to 38 and Sections 53 and 54 shall be deemed to have come into force on the 1st day of April, 1971.

CHAPTER II

RATES OF INCOME-TAX

2. Income-tax.— (1) Subject to the provisions of sub-sections (2) and (3), for the assessment year commencing on the 1st day of April, 1971, income-tax shall be charged at the rates specified in Part I of the First Schedule and, in the cases to which Paragraphs A, B, C and D of that Part apply, shall be increased by a surcharge for purposes of the Union and in the cases to which Paragraph C applies, also by a special surcharge for purposes of the Union, calculated in each case in the manner provided therein.

(2) In making any assessment for the assessment year commencing on the 1st day of April, 1971, where the total income of a company, other than the Life Insurance Corporation of India established under the Life Insurance Corporation Act, 1956, includes any profits and gains from life insurance business, the income-tax payable by it shall be the aggregate of the income-tax calculated—

(i) on the amount of profits and gains from life insurance business so included, at the rate applicable in the case of the Life Insurance Corporation of India, in accordance with Paragraph E of Part I of the First Schedule, to that part of its total income which consists of profits and gains from life insurance business; and

(ii) on the remaining part of its total income, at the rate applicable to the company on its total income.

(3) In cases to which Chapter XII or Section 164 of the Income-tax Act, 1961 (hereinafter referred to as the Income-tax Act) applies, the tax chargeable shall be determined as provided in that Chapter or that section, and with reference to the rates imposed by sub-section (1) or the rates as specified in that Chapter or section, as the case may be.

(4) In cases in which tax has to be deducted under Sections 193, 194, 194A and 195 of the Income-tax Act at the rates in force, the deduction shall be made at the rates specified in Part II of the First Schedule.

(5) In cases in which income-tax has to be calculated under the first proviso to sub-section (5) of Section 132 of the Income-tax Act or charged under sub-section (4) of Section 172 or sub-section (2) of Section 174 or S. 175 or sub-sec. (2) of S. 176 of the said Act or deducted under Section 192 of the said Act from income chargeable under the head "Salaries" or deducted under sub-section (9) of Section 80E of the said Act from any payment referred to in the said sub-section (9) or in which the "advance tax" payable under Chapter XVII-C of the said Act has to be computed, at the rate or rates in force, such income-tax or, as the case may be, "advance tax" shall be so calculated, charged, deducted or computed at the rate or rates specified in Part III of the First Schedule: Provided that in respect of any income chargeable to tax under Section 164 of the Income-tax Act at the rate of sixty-five per cent., "advance tax" shall be computed at that rate.

(6) For the purposes of this section and the First Schedule,—

(a) "company in which the public are substantially interested" means a company which is such a company as is referred to in Section 108 of the Income-tax Act;

(b) "domestic company" means an Indian company, or any other company which, in respect of its income liable to income-tax under the Income-tax Act, for the assessment year commencing on the 1st day of April, 1971, has made the prescribed arrangements for the declaration and payment within India of the dividends (including dividends on preference shares) payable out of such income in accordance with the provisions of Section 194 of that Act;

(c) "industrial company" means a company which is mainly engaged in the business of generation or distribution of electricity or any other form of power or in the construction of ships or in the manufacture or processing of goods or in mining.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this clause, a company shall be deemed to be mainly engaged in the business of generation or distribution of electricity or any other form of power or in the construction of ships or in the manufacture or processing of goods or in mining, if the income attributable to any one or more of the aforesaid activities included in its total income of the previous year (as computed before making any deduction under Chapter VIA of the Income-tax Act) is not less than fifty-one per cent. of such total income;

(d) "tax free security" means any security of the Central Government issued or declared to be income-tax free, or any security of a State Government issued income-tax free, the income-tax whereon is payable by the State Government;

(e) all other words and expressions used in this section and the First Schedule but not defined in this sub-section and defined in the Income-tax Act shall have the meanings, respectively, assigned to them in that Act.

CHAPTER III

INCOME-TAX

3. Amendment of Section 2.—In Section 2 of the Income-tax Act,—

(a) for clause (17), the following clause shall be substituted, namely:—

(17) "company" means—

(i) any Indian company, or

(ii) any body corporate incorporated by or under the laws of a country outside India, or

(iii) any institution, association or body which is or was assessable or was assessed as a company for any assessment year under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 or which is or was assessable or was assessed under this Act as a company for any assessment year commencing on or before the 1st day of April, 1970, or

(iv) any institution, association or body, whether incorporated or not and whether Indian or non-Indian, which is declared by general or special order of the Board to be a company;

Provided that such institution, association or body shall be deemed to be a company only for such assessment year or assessment years (whether commencing before the 1st day of April, 1971 or on or after that date) as may be specified in the declaration;

(b) in clause (18), after sub-clause (a), the following sub-clauses shall be inserted, namely:—

(aa) if it is a company which is registered under Section 25 of the Companies Act, 1956; or

(ab) if it is a company having no share capital and if, having regard to its objects, the nature and composition of its membership and other relevant considerations, it is declared by order of the Board to be a company in which the public are substantially interested;

Provided that such company shall be deemed to be a company in which the public are substantially interested only for such assessment year or assessment years (whether commencing before the 1st day of April, 1971 or on or after that date) as may be specified in the declaration; or;

(c) in clause (26),—

(i) after sub-clause (i), the following sub-clauses shall be inserted, namely:—

“(ia) a corporation established by or under a Central, State or Provincial Act;

(ib) any institution, association or body which is declared by the Board to be a company under clause (17);”;

(ii) in the proviso, for the words “registered office of the company”, the words “registered or, as the case may be, principal office of the company, corporation, institution, association or body” shall be substituted;

(d) after clause (43A), the following clause shall be inserted with effect from the 1st day of January, 1972, namely:—

“(43B) “Tax Recovery Commissioner” means a Commissioner or an Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax who may be authorised by the Central Government, by general or special notification in the Official Gazette, to exercise the powers of a Tax Recovery Commissioner;”.

4. Amendment of Section 10.— In Section 10 of the Income-tax Act,—

(a) in clause (20), for the words “which accrues or arises from the supply of a commodity or service within its own jurisdictional area;”, the words “which accrues or arises from the supply of a commodity or service (not being water or electricity) within its own jurisdictional area or from the supply of water or electricity within or outside its own jurisdictional area;” shall be substituted with effect from the 1st day of April, 1972;

(b) in clause (26A),—

(i) the brackets and words “(not being an individual who is in the service of Government)” shall be, and shall be deemed always to have been, omitted;

(ii) for the expression “1st day of April, 1970”, the expression “1st day of April, 1975” shall be substituted and shall be deemed to have been substituted with effect from the 1st day of April, 1970.

5. Amendment of Section 11.— In Section 11 of the Income-tax Act, after sub-section (1), the following sub-section shall be, and shall be deemed always to have been, inserted, namely:—

“(1A) For the purposes of sub-section (1),—

(a) where a capital asset, being property held under trust wholly for charitable or religious purposes, is transferred and the whole or any part of the net consideration is utilised for acquiring another capital asset to be so held, then, the capital gain arising from the transfer shall be deemed to have been applied to charitable or religious purposes to the extent specified hereunder, namely:—

(i) where the whole of the net consideration is utilised in acquiring the new capital asset, the whole of such capital gain;

(ii) where only a part of the net consideration is utilised for acquiring the new capital asset, so much of such capital gain as is equal to the amount, if any, by which the amount so utilised exceeds the cost of the transferred asset;

(b) where a capital asset, being property held under trust in part only for such purposes, is transferred and the whole or any part of the net consideration is utilised for acquiring another capital asset to be so held, then, the appropriate fraction of the capital gain arising from the transfer shall be deemed to have been applied to charitable or religious purposes to the extent specified hereunder, namely:—

(i) where the whole of the net consideration is utilised in acquiring the new capital asset, the whole of the appropriate fraction of such capital gain;

(ii) in any other case, so much of the appropriate fraction of the capital gain as is equal to the amount, if any, by which the appropriate fraction of the amount utilised for acquiring the new asset exceeds the appropriate fraction of the cost of the transferred asset.

Explanation.— In this sub-section,—

(i) “appropriate fraction” means the fraction which represents the extent to which the income derived from the capital asset transferred was immediately before such transfer applicable to charitable or religious purposes;

(ii) “cost of the transferred asset” means the aggregate of the cost of acquisition (as ascertained for the purposes of Sections 48 and 49) of the capital asset which is the subject of the transfer and the cost of any improvement thereto within the meaning assigned to that expression in sub-clause (b) of clause (1) of Section 55;

(iii) “net consideration” means the full value of the consideration received or accruing as a result of the transfer of the capital asset as reduced by any expenditure incurred wholly and exclusively in connection with such transfer.

6. Amendment of Section 13.— In Section 13 of the Income-tax Act, in sub-section (4) for the words “moneys of the trust or the institution”, the words “funds of the trust or the institution” shall be substituted.

7. Amendment of Section 16.— In Section 16 of the Income-tax Act, in clause (iv), with effect from the 1st day of April, 1972,—

(a) in sub-clause (b), for the entry “Rs. 60”, the entry “Rs. 75” shall be substituted.

(b) in sub-clause (c), for the entry "Rs. 35", the entry "Rs. 50" shall be substituted.

8. Amendment of Section 36. — In Section 36 of the Income-tax Act, in clause (viii) of sub-section (1), for the words "industrial development", the words "industrial or agricultural development" shall be substituted with effect from the 1st day of April, 1972.

9. Amendment of Section 40. — In Section 40 of the Income-tax Act, with effect from the 1st day of April, 1972,—

(a) in clause (a), sub-clause (v) shall be omitted;

(b) in clause (c), for the words "benefit derived by or accruing to it therefrom", the following shall be substituted, namely:—

"benefit derived by or accruing to it therefrom, so, however, that the deduction in respect of the aggregate of such expenditure and allowance in respect of any one person referred to in sub-clause (i) shall in no case exceed—

(A) where such expenditure or allowance relates to a period exceeding eleven months comprised in the previous year, the amount of seventy-two thousand rupees;

(B) where such expenditure or allowance relates to a period not exceeding eleven months comprised in the previous year, an amount calculated at the rate of six thousand rupees for each month or part thereof comprised in that period;

Provided that in a case where such person is also an employee of the company for any period comprised in the previous year, expenditure of the nature referred to in clauses (i), (ii), (iii) and (iv) of the second proviso to clause (a) of sub-section (5) of Section 40A shall not be taken into account for the purposes of sub-clause (A) or sub-clause (B), as the case may be.

10. Amendment of Section 40A. — In Section 40A of the Income-tax Act, with effect from the 1st day of April, 1972,—

(a) in sub-section (2), in the proviso to clause (a), for the words "provisions of this section", the words "provisions of this sub-section" shall be substituted;

(b) after sub-section (4), the following sub-sections shall be inserted, namely:—

(5) (a) Where the assessee—

(i) incurs any expenditure which results directly or indirectly in the payment of any salary to an employee or a former employee, or

(ii) incurs any expenditure which results directly or indirectly in the provision of any perquisite (whether convertible into money or not) to an employee or incurs directly or indirectly any expenditure or is entitled to any allowance in respect of any assets of the assessee used by an employee either wholly or partly for his own purposes or benefit, then, subject to the provisions of clause (b), so much of such expenditure or allowance as is in excess of the limit specified in respect thereof in clause (c) shall not be allowed as a deduction:

Provided that where the assessee is a company, so much of the aggregate of—

(a) the expenditure and allowance referred to in sub-clauses (i) and (ii) of this clause; and

(b) the expenditure and allowance referred to in sub-clauses (i) and (ii) of clause (c) of Section 40, in respect of an employee or a former employee, being a director or a person who has a substantial interest in the company or a relative of the director or of such person, as is in excess of the sum of seventy-two thousand rupees shall in no case be allowed as a deduction:

Provided further that in computing the expenditure referred to in sub-clause (i) or the expenditure or allowance referred to in sub-clause (ii) of this clause or the aggregate referred to in the foregoing proviso, the following shall not be taken into account, namely:—

(i) the value of any travel concession or assistance referred to in clause (5) of Section 10;

(ii) passage moneys or the value of any free or concessional passage referred to in sub-clause (i) of clause (6) of Section 10;

(iii) any payment referred to in clause (iv) or clause (v) of sub-section (1) of Section 36;

(iv) any expenditure referred to in clause (ix) of sub-section (1) of Section 36.

(b) Nothing in clause (a) shall apply to any expenditure or allowance in relation to—

(i) any employee in respect of any period of his employment outside India;

(ii) any employee being an individual referred to in sub-clause (vii) or sub-clause (viii) of clause (6) of Section 10 in respect of any period during which he is entitled to the exemption under sub-clause (vii) or, as the case may be, sub-clause (viii) aforesaid;

(iii) any employee whose income chargeable under the head "Salaries" is seven thousand and five hundred rupees or less.

(c) The limits referred to in clause (a) are the following, namely:—

(i) in respect of the expenditure referred to in sub-clause (i) of clause (a), in the case of an employee, an amount calculated at the rate of five thousand rupees for each month or part thereof comprised in the period of his employment in India during the previous year, and in the case of a former employee, being an individual who ceases or ceased to be the employee of the assessee during the previous year or any earlier previous year, sixty thousand rupees;

(ii) in respect of the aggregate of the expenditure and the allowance referred to in sub-clause (ii) of clause (a), one-fifth of the amount of the salary payable to the employee or an amount calculated at the rate of one thousand rupees for each month or part thereof comprised in the period of employment in India of the employee during the previous year, whichever is less.

Explanation 1.— The provisions of this sub-section shall apply notwithstanding that any amount not to be allowed under this sub-section is included in the total income of the employee or, as the case may be, the former employee.

Explanation 2.— In this sub-section,—

(a) “salary” has the meaning assigned to it in clause (1) read with clause 3) of Section 17 subject to the following modifications, namely:—

(2) in the said clause (3), the references to “assessee” shall be construed as references to “employee or former employee” and the references to “his employer or former employer” and “an employer or a former employer” shall be construed as references to “the assessee”;

(b) “perquisite” means—

(i) rent-free accommodation provided to the employee by the assessee;

(ii) any concession in the matter of rent respecting any accommodation provided to the employee by the assessee;

(iii) any benefit or amenity granted or provided free of cost or at concessional rate to the employee by the assessee;

(iv) payment by the assessee of any sum in respect of any obligation which, but for such payment, would have been payable by the employee; and

(v) payment by the assessee of any sum, whether directly or through a fund, other than a recognised provident fund or an approved superannuation fund, to effect an assurance on the life of the employee or to effect a contract for an annuity.

(6) Where the assessee incurs any expenditure by way of fees for services rendered by a person who at any time during the twenty-four months immediately preceding the previous year was an employee of the assessee,—

(a) where such aggregate does not exceed Rs. 1,000

(b) where such aggregate exceeds Rupees 1,000 but does not exceed Rupees 5,000

(c) where such aggregate exceeds Rupees 5,000

(b) in sub-section (4), in clauses (ii) and (iv), for the words “fifteen thousand rupees”, the words “twenty thousand rupees” shall be substituted.

(a) such expenditure by way of fees, or

(b) where the assessee has also incurred in relation to such person any expenditure by way of salary referred to in sub-clause (i) of clause (a) of sub-section (5), the aggregate of such expenditure by way of fees and by way of salary, shall not be allowed as a deduction to the extent such expenditure by way of fees or, as the case may be, the aggregate of such expenditure by way of fees and by way of salary exceeds sixty thousand rupees.

“(xxviii) any shares held by the assessee in any co-operative society;

(xxix) any deposits with a co-operative society, not being deposits referred to in clause (xxvi) or clause (xxx), made by a member of the society;

(xxx) any deposits with a co-operative housing society made by a member of the society to whom a building or part thereof is allotted or leased under a house building scheme of the society, where such deposits have been made under such scheme.”

(b) in sub-sections (1A) and (3), for the brackets, figures and word “(xxvi), and (xxvii)”, the brackets, figures and word “(xxvi), (xxvii), (xxviii), and (xxix)” shall be substituted with effect from the 1st day of April, 1972.

33. Amendment of Section 18.— In Section 18 of the Wealth-tax Act, with effect from the 1st day of April, 1972,—

(a) in clause (i) of sub-section (1), for sub-clauses (A) and (B), the following sub-clauses shall be substituted, namely:—

“(A) the net wealth assessed under Section 16 as reduced by the amount specified in sub-section (1A), or

(B) the net wealth assessed under Section 17, where assessment has been made under that section, as reduced by—

(Contd. on Col. 2)

“(1) In the case of every individual or Hindu undivided family—

(a) where the net wealth does not exceed Rs. 5,00,000

(b) where the net wealth exceeds Rupees 5,00,000 but does not exceed Rupees 10,00,000

(c) where the net wealth exceeds Rupees 10,00,000 but does not exceed Rupees 15,00,000

(d) where the net wealth exceeds Rupees 15,00,000

(1) the net wealth, if any, assessed previously under Section 16 or Section 17, or

(2) the amount specified in sub-section (1A), whichever is greater.”

(b) after sub-section (1), the following sub-section shall be inserted, namely:—

“(1A) The amount referred to in sub-clause (A) and sub-clause (B) (2) of clause (i) of sub-section (1) shall be,—

(a) in the case of an individual, Rs. 1,00,000;

(b) in the case of a Hindu undivided family, Rs. 2,00,000; and

(c) in the case of a company, Rupees 5,00,000.”

34. Amendment of Section 21.— In Section 21 of the Wealth-tax Act, in sub-section (4), with effect from the 1st day of April, 1972,—

(a) in clause (a) and in the proviso, the words “in the case of an individual” shall be omitted;

(b) the following Explanation shall be inserted at the end, namely:—

Explanation.— Notwithstanding anything contained in section 5, in computing the net wealth for the purposes of this sub-section in any case, not being a case referred to in the proviso, any assets referred to in clauses (xv), (xvi), (xxii), (xxiii), (xxiv), (xxv), (xxvi), (xxvii), (xxviii) and (xxix) of sub-section (1) of that section shall not be excluded.”

35. Amendment of Section 32.— In Section 32 of the Wealth-tax Act, in Explanation, II, for the words “Tax Recovery Officer and the Tax Recovery Commissioner referred to in the Income-tax Act or the rules made thereunder shall be deemed to be the Tax Recovery Officer and the Tax Recovery Commissioner”, the words “Tax Recovery Commissioner and the Tax Recovery Officer referred to in the Income-tax Act shall be deemed to be the Tax Recovery Commissioner and the Tax Recovery Officer” shall be substituted with effect from the 1st day of January, 1972.

36. Amendment of Schedule.— In the Schedule to the Wealth-tax Act, with effect from the 1st day of April, 1972, in Part I—

(a) in Paragraph A,—

(i) for items (1) and (2), the following item shall be substituted, namely:—

Rate of tax

1 per cent of the net wealth;

Rs. 5,000 plus 2 per cent. of the amount by which the net wealth exceeds Rs. 5,00,000;

Rs. 15,000 plus 3 per cent. of the amount by which the net wealth exceeds Rupees 10,00,000;

Rs. 30,000 plus 8 per cent. of the amount by which the net wealth exceeds Rs. 15,00,000;

Provided that for the purposes of this item,—

(i) no wealth-tax shall be payable where the net wealth does not exceed the following limit, namely:—

(A) Rs. 1,00,000, in the case of an individual;

(B) Rs. 2,00,000, in the case of a Hindu undivided family;

CHAPTER VII
FOREIGN TRAVEL TAX

43. Extent and commencement.—
(1) The provisions of this Chapter extend to the whole of India except the State of Jammu and Kashmir.

(2) They shall come into force on such date as the Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, appoint.

44. Definitions.— In this Chapter, unless the context otherwise requires,—

(a) "aircraft" means any aircraft as defined in Section 2 of the Aircraft Act, 1934, which is used (whether exclusively or not) for the carriage of passengers;

(b) "carrier" means the person or authority undertaking the carriage of a passenger on an international journey and includes any agent, representative or other person acting on behalf of such person or authority;

(c) "customs port" and "customs airport" mean, respectively, a port or airport appointed as such under clause (a) of Section 7 of the Customs Act, 1962;

(d) "fare" means the total amount of all charges of whatever nature (including charges, if any, for provision of food or accommodation) payable to the carrier by or on behalf of a passenger in respect of his international journey;

(e) "international journey", in relation to a passenger, means—

(i) his journey from the last customs port or customs airport of departure of the ship or aircraft in the territories to which this Chapter extends to a place outside India, and includes further journeys by such passenger outside India by the same or different carriers;

(ii) his journey from a place outside
India to the first customs port or customs airport of arrival of the ship or aircraft in the said territories,

*15-10-1971 — See Gaz. of India; 1-10-1971, Pt. II-S. 3 (i) Ext. P. 927, for appointed date.

irrespective of whether the journey commences or terminates at such customs port or customs airport;

(i) a person employed or engaged in any capacity on board the ship or aircraft on the business thereof;

(ii) a person on board the ship or aircraft either in pursuance of obligations laid upon the master, captain or other person in charge of the ship or aircraft to carry shipwrecked or distressed or other persons or by reason of any circumstances which neither the master or captain or other person in charge of the ship or aircraft nor the charterer, if any, could have prevented or forestalled;

(g) "ship" means a ship used (whether exclusively or not) for the carriage of passengers.

45. Foreign travel tax.— (1) With effect from the date of commencement of this Chapter, there shall be levied and paid to the Central Government in respect of every international journey by a passenger, where the fare for such journey is paid or is payable in Indian currency, a tax (hereafter in this Chapter referred to as the foreign travel tax) at the rate of fifteen per cent. of the fare paid or payable by such passenger for such journey.

Explanation.— When a passenger performs an international journey at a concessional rate or without being charged any fare, the fare ordinarily payable for the journey shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to be the fare payable by such passenger.

(2) In accordance with rules made under this Chapter, the foreign travel tax shall be collected by the carrier undertaking the carriage of the passengers, or, where the tickets or other relevant documents for such carriage are not issued by such carrier, by the carrier to whom such tickets or other documents relate, as an addition to the fares payable by such passengers and shall be paid to the Central Government.

46. Power to exempt.— Notwithstanding anything contained in this Chapter, the Central Government may,—

(a) by notification in the Official Gazette, and subject to such conditions and limitations as may be specified therein, exempt wholly or to such extent as may be specified in the notification, any class or classes of passengers or any category or categories of passengers under any such class from the payment of foreign travel tax if that Government is satisfied that it is necessary so to do in the public interest;

†For such exemptions, see G.S.R. 1454, 1455, 1456, 1457, 1458 published in Gaz. of India; 1-10-1971, Pt. II-S. 3 (i), Ext. Pp. 940, 941, 943, 944.

(b) by order in writing, and subject to such conditions and limitations as may be specified therein, exempt wholly or to such extent as may be specified in the order, any passenger from the payment of the said tax if that Government is satisfied, for reasons to be recorded in the order, that it is necessary or expedient so to do, having regard to the special circumstances of his case and the purpose of his journey.

47. Penalty.— Any carrier contravening the provisions of sub-section (2) of Section 45 and any person committing a breach of any rule or regulation made under this Chapter shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five thousand rupees and such penalty may be adjudged by such authority and in such manner as may be specified in the rules made under this Chapter.

48. Protection of action taken in good faith.— No suit or other legal proceeding shall lie against the Central Government and no suit, prosecution or other legal proceeding shall lie against any officer or authority of that Government for anything in good faith done or intended to be done in pursuance of this Chapter or the rules and regulations made thereunder.

49. Power to make rules.— (1) The Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, make rules† for carrying out the purposes of this Chapter.

(2) In particular, and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, such rules may provide for—

(a) the assessment and collection of the foreign travel tax including the charges for collection payable to carriers, the authorities by whom adjudication of penalty and other functions under this Chapter are to be discharged, the issue of notices requiring payment of such tax, the manner in which such tax shall be payable, the recovery of any such tax due to the Central Government in the same manner as an arrear of land revenue or in any other manner, and the procedure for claiming refund of any amount paid under this Chapter;

(b) the powers of authorities referred to in clause (a) to enter, inspect and search any ship or aircraft or any premises of a carrier and to examine any tickets, books of account, returns or other documents for the purpose of carrying out any duty imposed on any such authority by or under this Chapter;

Provided that the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, relating to searches shall, so far as they are applicable, apply in relation to searches under rules made under this clause;

(c) the procedure for adjudication of penalty;

†Foreign Travel Tax Rules, 1971, see Gaz. of India 1-10-1971, Pt. II-S. 3 (i), Ext. P. 928.

(d) appeal and revision in the case of any order made under this Chapter, the manner in which and the time within which appeal may be preferred or application for revision may be made and the fees payable therefor;

(e) any other matter which is to be, or may be, provided for by rules under this Chapter.

50. Power to make regulations.— (1) The Central Board of Excise and Customs constituted under Section 3 of the Central Boards of Revenue Act, 1963, may, by notification in the Official Gazette, make regulations* consistent with this Chapter and the rules made thereunder, generally to carry out the purposes of this Chapter.

(2) In particular, and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, such regulations may provide for—

(a) the returns and other particulars and information which carriers shall furnish, the authorities to whom, and the intervals at which, such returns, particulars and information shall be furnished;

(b) supplemental matters arising out of any rule made by the Central Government under this Chapter.

51. Rules and notifications to be laid before Parliament.— Every rule made under this Chapter and every notification issued under Section 46 shall be laid as soon as may be after it is made or issued before each House of Parliament while it is in session for a total period of thirty days which may be comprised in one session or in two successive sessions, and if, before the expiry of the session in which it is so laid or the session immediately following, both Houses agree in making any modification in the rule or notification or both Houses agree that the rule should not be made or the notification should not be issued, the rule or notification shall thereafter have effect only in such modified form or be of no effect, as the case may be; so, however, that any such modification or annulment shall be without prejudice to the validity of anything previously done under that rule or notification.

CHAPTER VIII MISCELLANEOUS

52. Amendment of Act 6 of 1898.— In the First Schedule to the Indian Post Office Act, 1898, for the sub-heading "Parcels" and the entries thereunder, the following shall be substituted, namely:—

"Parcels

For a weight not exceeding four hundred grams	One rupee.
For every four hundred grams, or fraction thereof, exceeding four hundred grams	One rupee."

53. Amendment of Act 47 of 1961.— In the Deposit Insurance Corporation Act, 1961, in Section 30, for the words "nine accounting years", the words "fourteen accounting years" shall be substituted.

54. Housing and Urban Development Finance Corporation Private Ltd. to be exempt for a certain period from liability to pay income tax and surtax.— Notwithstanding anything contained in the Income-tax Act or the Companies (Profits) Surtax Act, 1964, the Housing and Urban Development Finance Corporation Private Ltd. (a Government company as defined in Section 617 of the Companies Act, 1956) shall not be liable to pay any tax, under either of the two Acts first mentioned, on its income, profits or gains for the previous year relevant to the assessment year commencing on the 1st day of April, 1971 and for the nine previous years next following that previous year.

55. Repeal.— Section 2 of the Finance Act, 1971 is hereby repealed and shall be deemed never to have been enacted.

THE INDIAN TELEGRAPH (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1971

(Act No. 33 of 1971)*

(10th August, 1971)

An Act further to amend the Indian Telegraph Act, 1885.

BE it enacted by Parliament in the Twenty-second year of the Republic of India as follows:—

1. Short title.— This Act may be called THE INDIAN TELEGRAPH (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1971.

2. Insertion of new Section 6A.— After Section 6 of the Indian Telegraph Act, 1885 (hereinafter referred to as the principal Act), the following section shall be inserted, namely:—

"6A. Power to notify rates for transmission of messages to countries outside India.— (1) The Central Government may, from time to time, by order, notify the rates at which, and the other conditions and restrictions subject to which, messages shall be transmitted to any country outside India.

(2) In notifying the rates under subsection (1), the Central Government shall have due regard to all or any of the following factors, namely:—

(a) the rates for the time being in force, for transmission of messages, in countries outside India;

*Received the assent of the President on 10-8-1971. Act published in Gaz. of India, 10-8-1971, Pt. II-S. I, Ext. P. 245. For Statement of Objects and Reasons, see Gaz. of India, 17-12-1970, Pt. II-S. 2, Ext. P. 1399.

(b) the foreign exchange rates for the time being in force;

(c) the rates for the time being in force for transmission of messages within India;

(d) such other relevant factors as the Central Government may think fit in the circumstances of the case."

3. Amendment of Section 7.—In sub-section (2) of Section 7 of the principal Act, in clause (a), the words "within India" shall be inserted at the end.

4. Omission of Section 29.—Section 29 of the principal Act shall be omitted.

THE MEDICAL TERMINATION OF PREGNANCY ACT, 1971

(10th August, 1971)

An Act to provide for the termination of certain pregnancies by registered medical practitioners and for matters connected therewith or incidental thereto.

BE it enacted by Parliament in the Twenty-second Year of the Republic of India as follows:—

1. Short title, extent and commencement.—(1) This Act may be called THE MEDICAL TERMINATION OF PREGNANCY ACT, 1971.

(2) It extends to the whole of India except the State of Jammu and Kashmir.

(3) It shall come into force on such date as the Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, appoint.

2. Definitions.—In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires,—

(a) "guardian" means a person having the care of the person of a minor or a lunatic;

(b) "lunatic" has the meaning assigned to it in Section 3 of the Indian Lunacy Act, 1912;

(c) "minor" means a person who, under the provisions of the Indian Majority Act, 1875, is to be deemed not to have attained his majority;

(d) "registered medical practitioner" means a medical practitioner who possesses any recognised medical qualification as defined in clause (h) of Section 2 of the Indian Medical Council Act, 1956, whose name has been entered in a State Medical Register and who has such experience or training in gynaecology and obstetrics as may be prescribed by rules made under this Act.

*Received the assent of the President on 10-8-1971. Act published in Gaz. of India, 10-8-1971, Pt. II-S. 1, Ext. P. 237. For Statement of Objects and Reasons, see Gaz. of India, 17-11-1969, Pt. II-S. 2, Ext. P. 880.

3. When pregnancies may be terminated by registered medical practitioners.—

(1) Notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Penal Code, a registered medical practitioner shall not be guilty of any offence under that Code or under any other law for the time being in force, if any pregnancy is terminated by him in accordance with the provisions of this Act.

(2) Subject to the provisions of sub-section (4), a pregnancy may be terminated by a registered medical practitioner,—

(a) where the length of the pregnancy does not exceed twelve weeks, if such medical practitioner is, or

(b) where the length of the pregnancy exceeds twelve weeks but does not exceed twenty weeks, if not less than two registered medical practitioners are, of opinion, formed in good faith, that—

(i) the continuance of the pregnancy would involve a risk to the life of the pregnant woman or of grave injury to her physical or mental health; or

(ii) there is a substantial risk that if the child were born, it would suffer from such physical or mental abnormalities as to be seriously handicapped.

Explanation I.—Where any pregnancy is alleged by the pregnant woman to have been caused by rape, the anguish caused by such pregnancy shall be presumed to constitute a grave injury to the mental health of the pregnant woman.

Explanation II.—Where any pregnancy occurs as a result of failure of any device or method used by any married woman or her husband for the purpose of limiting the number of children, the anguish caused by such unwanted pregnancy may be presumed to constitute a grave injury to the mental health of the pregnant woman.

(3) In determining whether the continuance of a pregnancy would involve such risk of injury to the health as is mentioned in sub-section (2), account may be taken of the pregnant woman's actual or reasonably foreseeable environment.

(4) (a) No pregnancy of a woman, who has not attained the age of eighteen years, or, who, having attained the age of eighteen years, is a lunatic, shall be terminated except with the consent in writing of her guardian.

(b) Save as otherwise provided in clause (a), no pregnancy shall be terminated except with the consent of the pregnant woman.

4. Place where pregnancy may be terminated.—No termination of pregnancy shall be made in accordance with this Act at any place other than—

(a) a hospital established or maintained by Government, or

(b) a place for the time being approved for the purpose of this Act by Government.

5. Sections 3 and 4 when not to apply.—(1) The provisions of Section 4, and so much of the provisions of sub-section (2) of Section 3 as relate to the length of the pregnancy and the opinion of not less than two registered medical practitioners, shall not apply to the termination of a pregnancy by a registered medical practitioner in a case where he is of opinion, formed in good faith, that the termination of such pregnancy is immediately necessary to save the life of the pregnant woman.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Penal Code, the termination of a pregnancy by a person who is not a registered medical practitioner shall be an offence punishable under that Code, and that Code shall, to this extent, stand modified.

Explanation.— For the purposes of this section, so much of the provisions of clause (d) of Section 2 as relate to the possession, by a registered medical practitioner, of experience or training in gynaecology and obstetrics shall not apply.

6. Power to make rules:— (1) The Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, make rules to carry out the provisions of this Act.

(2) In particular, and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, such rules may provide for all or any of the following matters, namely:—

(a) the experience or training, or both, which a registered medical practitioner shall have if he intends to terminate any pregnancy under this Act; and

(b) such other matters as are required to be or may be, provided by rules made under this Act.

(3) Every rule made by the Central Government under this Act shall be laid, as soon as may be after it is made, before each House of Parliament while it is in session for a total period of thirty days which may be comprised in one session or in two successive sessions, and if, before the expiry of the session in which it is so laid or the session immediately following, both Houses agree in making any modification in the rule or both Houses agree that the rule should not be made, the rule shall thereafter have effect only in such modified form or be of no effect, as the case may be; so, however, that any such modification or annulment shall be without prejudice to the validity of anything previously done under that rule.

7. Power to make regulations.— The State Government may, by regulations,—

(a) require any such opinion as is referred to in sub-section (2) of Section 3 to be certified by a registered medical practitioner or practitioners concerned, in such form and at such time as may be specified in such regulations, and the preservation or disposal of such certificates;

(b) require any registered medical practitioner, who terminates a pregnancy, to give intimation of such termination and such other information relating to the termination as may be specified in such regulations;

(c) prohibit the disclosure, except to such persons and for such purposes as may be specified in such regulations, of intimations given or information furnished in pursuance of such regulations.

(2) The intimation given and the information furnished in pursuance of regulations made by virtue of clause (b) of sub-section (1) shall be given or furnished, as the case may be, to the Chief Medical Officer of the State.

(3) Any person who wilfully contravenes or wilfully fails to comply with the requirements of any regulation made under sub-section (1) shall be liable to be punished with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees.

8. Protection of action taken in good faith.— No suit or other legal proceeding shall lie against any registered medical practitioner for any damage caused or likely to be caused by anything which is in good faith done or intended to be done under this Act.

THE PUBLIC PREMISES (EVICTION OF UNAUTHORISED OCCUPANTS) ACT, 1971

(23rd August, 1971)

An Act to provide for the eviction of unauthorised occupants from public premises and for certain incidental matters.

BE it enacted by Parliament in the Twenty-second Year of the Republic of India as follows:—

1. Short title, extent and commencement.—(1) This Act may be called THE PUBLIC PREMISES (EVICTION OF UNAUTHORISED OCCUPANTS) ACT, 1971.

(2) It extends to the whole of India.

(3) It shall be deemed to have come into force on the 16th day of September, 1958 except Sections 11, 19 and 20 which shall come into force at once.

2. Definitions.—In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires,—

(a) "corporate authority" means—

(i) any company or Corporation referred to in sub-clause (1), or

(ii) the Corporation or any committee or the Authority referred to in sub-cl. (2), of clause (e) of this section;

(b) "estate officer" means an officer appointed as such by the Central Government under Section 3;

(c) "premises" means any land or any building or part of a building and includes,—

(i) the garden, grounds and outhouses, if any, appertaining to such building or part of a building, and

(ii) any fittings affixed to such building or part of a building for the more beneficial enjoyment thereof;

(d) "prescribed" means prescribed by rules made under this Act;

(e) "public premises" means any premises belonging to or taken on lease or requisitioned by, or on behalf of, the Central Government, and includes—

(1) any premises belonging to, or taken on lease by, or on behalf of—

(i) any company as defined in Sec. 3 of the Companies Act, 1956 in which not less than fifty-one per cent. of the paid-up share capital is held by the Central Government; and

(ii) any Corporation (not being a company as defined in Section 3 of the Companies Act, 1956 or a local authority) established by or under a Central Act and owned or controlled by the Central Government, and

(2) in relation to the Union territory of Delhi—

(i) any premises belonging to the Municipal Corporation of Delhi or any municipal committee or notified area committee, and

(ii) any premises belonging to the Delhi Development Authority whether such premises are in the possession of, or leased out by, the said Authority;

(f) "rent", in relation to any public premises, means the consideration payable periodically for the authorised occupation of the premises, and includes—

(i) any charge for electricity, water or any other services in connection with the occupation of the premises,

(ii) any tax (by whatever name called) payable in respect of the premises, where such charge or tax is payable by the Central Government or the corporate authority;

(g) "unauthorised occupation", in relation to any public premises, means the occupation by any person of the public premises without authority for such occupation, and includes the continuance in occupation by any person of the public premises after the authority (whether by way of grant or any other mode of transfer) under which he was allowed to occupy the premises has expired or has been determined for any reason whatsoever.

3. Appointment of estate officers.—The Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette,—

(a) appoint such persons, being gazetted officers of Government or officers of equivalent rank of the corporate authority, as it thinks fit, to be estate officers for the purposes of this Act; and

*Received the assent of the President on 23-8-1971. Act published in Gaz. of India, 24-8-1971; Pt. II-S. 1, Ext. E. 301. For Statement of Objects and Reasons, see Gaz. of India; 5-7-1971; Pt. II-S. 2, Ext. P. 372.

(b) define the local limits within which, or the categories of public premises in respect of which, the estate officers shall exercise the powers conferred, and perform the duties imposed, on estate officers by or under this Act.

4. Issue of notice to show cause against order of eviction.— (1) If the estate officer is of opinion that any persons are in unauthorised occupation of any public premises and that they should be evicted, the estate officer shall issue in the manner hereinafter provided a notice in writing calling upon all persons concerned to show cause why an order of eviction should not be made.

(2) The notice shall—

(a) specify the grounds on which the order of eviction is proposed to be made; and

(b) require all persons concerned, that is to say, all persons who are, or may be, in occupation of, or claim interest in, the public premises, to show cause, if any, against the proposed order on or before such date as is specified in the notice, being a date not earlier than ten days from the date of issue thereof.

(3) The estate officer shall cause the notice to be served by having it affixed on the outer door or some other conspicuous part of the public premises, and in such other manner as may be prescribed, whereupon the notice shall be deemed to have been duly given to all persons concerned.

(4) Where the estate officer knows or has reasons to believe that any persons are in occupation of the public premises, then, without prejudice to the provisions of sub-section (3), he shall cause a copy of the notice to be served on every such person by post or by delivering or tendering it to that person or in such other manner as may be prescribed.

5. Eviction of unauthorised occupants.— (1) If, after considering the cause, if any, shown by any person in pursuance of a notice under Section 4 and any evidence he may produce in support of the same and after giving him a reasonable opportunity of being heard, the estate officer is satisfied that the public premises are in unauthorised occupation, the estate officer may make an order of eviction for reasons to be recorded therein directing that the public premises shall be vacated, on such date as may be specified in the order, by all persons who may be in occupation thereof or any part thereof, and cause a copy of the order to be affixed on the outer door or some other conspicuous part of the public premises.

(2) If any person refuses or fails to comply with the order of eviction within thirty days of the date of its publication under sub-section (1), the estate officer or any other officer duly authorised by the estate officer in this behalf may evict that person from, and take possession of, the public premises and may, for that purpose, use such force as may be necessary.

6. Disposal of property left on public premises by unauthorised occupants.— (1) Where any persons have been evicted from any public premises under Section 5, the estate officer may, after giving fourteen days' notice to the persons from whom possession of the public premises has been taken and after publishing the notice in at least one newspaper having circulation in the locality, remove or cause to be removed or dispose of by public auction any property remaining on such premises.

(2) Where any property is sold under sub-section (1), the sale proceeds thereof shall, after deducting the expenses of the sale and the amount, if any, due to the Central Government or the corporate authority on account of arrears of rent or damages or costs, be paid to such person or persons as may appear, to the estate officer to be entitled to the same:

Provided that where the estate officer is unable to decide as to the person or persons to whom the balance of the amount is payable or as to the apportionment of the same, he may refer such dispute to the civil court of competent jurisdiction and the decision of the court thereon shall be final.

7. Power to require payment of rent or damages in respect of public premises.—

(1) Where any person is in arrears of rent payable in respect of any public premises, the estate officer may, by order, require that person to pay the same within such time and in such instalments as may be specified in the order.

(2) Where any person is, or has at any time been, in unauthorised occupation of any public premises, the estate officer may, having regard to such principles of assessment of damages as may be prescribed, assess the damages on account of the use and occupation of such premises and may, by order, require that person to pay the damages within such time and in such instalments as may be specified in the order.

(3) No order under sub-section (1) or sub-s. (2) shall be made against any person until after the issue of a notice in writing to the person calling upon him to show cause within such time as may be specified in the notice, why such order should not be made, and until his objections, if any, and any evidence he may produce in support of the same, have been considered by the estate officer.

8. Powers of estate officers.— An estate officer shall, for the purpose of holding any inquiry under this Act, have the same powers as are vested in a civil court under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, when trying a suit in respect of the following matters, namely:—

(a) summoning and enforcing the attendance of any person and examining him on oath;

(b) requiring the discovery and production of documents;

(c) any other matter which may be prescribed.

9. Appeals.—(1) An appeal shall lie from every order of the estate officer made in respect of any public premises under Section 5 or Section 7 to an appellate officer who shall be the district judge of the district in which the public premises are situate or such other judicial officer in that district of not less than ten years' standing as the district judge may designate in this behalf.

(2) An appeal under sub-section (1) shall be preferred,—

(a) in the case of an appeal from an order under Section 5, within fifteen days from the date of publication of the order under sub-section (1) of that section; and

(b) in the case of an appeal from an order under Section 7, within fifteen days from the date on which the order is communicated to the appellant:

Provided that the appellate officer may entertain the appeal after the expiry of the said period of fifteen days, if he is satisfied that the appellant was prevented by sufficient cause from filing the appeal in time.

(3) Where an appeal is preferred from an order of the estate officer, the appellate officer may stay the enforcement of that order for such period and on such conditions as he deems fit.

(4) Every appeal under this section shall be disposed of by the appellate officer as expeditiously as possible.

(5) The costs of any appeal under this section shall be in the discretion of the appellate officer.

(6) For the purposes of this section, a presidency-town shall be deemed to be a district and the chief judge or the principal judge of the city civil court therein shall be deemed to be the district judge of the district.

10. Finality of orders.—Save as otherwise expressly provided in this Act, every order made by an estate officer or appellate officer under this Act shall be final and shall not be called in question in any original suit, application or execution proceeding and no injunction shall be granted by any court or other authority in respect of any action taken or to be taken in pursuance of any power conferred by or under this Act.

11. Offences and penalty.—(1) If any person who has been evicted from any public premises under this Act again occupies the premises without authority for such occupation, he shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

(2) Any magistrate convicting a person under sub-section (1) may make an order for evicting that person summarily and he shall be liable to such eviction without prejudice to any other action that may be taken against him under this Act.

12. Power to obtain information.—If the estate officer has reason to believe that any persons are in unauthorised occupation of any public premises, the estate officer or any other officer authorised by him in this behalf may require those persons or any other person to furnish information relating to the names and other particulars of the persons in occupation of the public premises and every person so required shall be bound to furnish the information in his possession.

13. Liability of heirs and legal representatives.—(1) Where any person against whom any proceeding for the determination of arrears of rent or for the assessment of damages is to be or has been taken dies before the proceeding is taken or during the pendency thereof, the proceeding may be taken or, as the case may be, continued against the heirs or legal representatives of that person.

(2) Any amount due to the Central Government or the corporate authority from any person whether by way of arrears of rent or damages or costs shall, after the death of the person, be payable by his heirs or legal representatives but their liability shall be limited to the extent of the assets of the deceased in their hands.

14. Recovery of rent, etc., as an arrear of land revenue.—If any person refuses or fails to pay the arrears of rent payable under sub-section (1) of Section 7 or the damages payable under sub-s. (2) of that section or the costs awarded to the Central Government or the corporate authority under sub-sec. (5) of Sec. 9 or any portion of such rent, damages or costs, within the time, if any, specified therefor in the order relating thereto, the estate officer may issue a certificate for the amount due to the Collector who shall proceed to recover the same as an arrear of land revenue.

15. Bar of jurisdiction.—No court shall have jurisdiction to entertain any suit or proceeding in respect of the eviction of any person who is in unauthorised occupation of any public premises or the recovery of the arrears of rent payable under sub-section (1) of Section 7 or the damages payable under sub-sec. (2) of that section or the costs awarded to the Central Government or the corporate authority under sub-section (5) of Section 9 or any portion of such rent, damages or costs.

16. Protection of action taken in good faith.—No suit, prosecution or other legal proceeding shall lie against the Central Government or the corporate authority or the appellate officer or the estate officer in respect of anything which is in good faith done or intended to be done in pursuance of this Act or of any rules or orders made thereunder.

17. Delegation of powers.— The Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, direct that any power exercisable by it under this Act shall, subject to such conditions, if any, as may be specified in the notification, be exercisable also by a State Government or an officer of the State Government.

18. Power to make rules.— (1) The Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, make rules for carrying out the purposes of this Act.

(2) In particular, and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, such rules may provide for all or any of the following matters, namely:—

(a) the form of any notice required or authorised to be given under this Act and the manner in which it may be served;

(b) the holding of inquiries under this Act;

(c) the distribution and allocation of work to estate officers and the transfer of any proceeding pending before an estate officer to another estate officer;

(d) the procedure to be followed in taking possession of public premises;

(e) the manner in which damages for unauthorised occupation may be assessed and the principles which may be taken into account in assessing such damages;

(f) the manner in which appeals may be preferred and the procedure to be followed in appeals;

(g) any other matter which has to be or may be prescribed.

(3) Every rule made under this section shall be laid, as soon as may be after it is made, before each House of Parliament while it is in session for a total period of thirty days which may be comprised in one session or in two successive sessions, and if, before the expiry of the session in which it is so laid or the session immediately following, both Houses agree in making any modification in the rule or both Houses agree that the rule should not be made, the rule shall thereafter have effect only in such modified form or be of no effect, as the case may be; so, however, that any such modification or annulment shall be without prejudice to the validity of anything previously done under that rule.

19. Repeal.— The Public Premises (Eviction of Unauthorised Occupants) Act, 1958 is hereby repealed.

20. Validation.— Notwithstanding any judgment, decree or order of any Court, anything done or any action taken (including rules or orders made, notices issued, evictions ordered or effected, damages assessed, rents or damages or costs recovered and proceedings initiated) or purported to have been done or taken under the Public Premises (Eviction of Unauthorised Occupants) Act, 1958 (hereafter in this section referred to as the 1958-Act) shall be deemed to be as valid and effective as if such thing or action was done or taken under the corresponding provisions of this Act which, under sub-section (3) of Section 1 shall be deemed to have come into force on the 16th day of September, 1958, and accordingly—

(a) no suit or other legal proceeding shall be maintained or continued in any Court for the refund of any rent or damages or costs recovered under the 1958-Act where such refund has been claimed merely on the ground that the said Act has been declared to be unconstitutional and void; and

(b) no Court shall enforce a decree or order directing the refund of any rent or damages or costs recovered under the 1958-Act merely on the ground that the said Act has been declared to be unconstitutional and void.

THE CONSTITUTION (TWENTY-FOURTH AMENDMENT) ACT, 1971*

(5th November, 1971.)

An Act further to amend the Constitution of India.

THE DEFENCE OF INDIA ACT, 1971

(4th December, 1971)

An Act to provide for special measures to ensure the public safety and interest, the defence of India and civil defence and for the trial of certain offences and for matters connected therewith.

WHEREAS the President has declared by Proclamation under clause (1) of Article 352 of the Constitution that a grave emergency exists whereby the security of India is threatened by external aggression;

AND WHEREAS it is necessary to provide for special measures to ensure the public safety and interest, the defence of India and civil defence, and for the trial of certain offences and for matters connected therewith;

BE it, therefore, enacted by Parliament in the Twenty-second Year of the Republic of India as follows:—

CHAPTER I

PRELIMINARY

1. Short title, extent, application, duration and savings.—(1) This Act may be called THE DEFENCE OF INDIA ACT, 1971.

(2) It extends to the whole of India and it applies also—

(a) to citizens of India outside India;

(b) to persons in the service of the Government, wherever they may be;

(c) in respect of the regulation and discipline of the naval, military and air forces or any other armed forces of the Union, to members of, and persons attached to, employed with, or following, those forces, wherever they may be;

(d) to, and to persons on, ships and aircraft registered in India, wherever they may be.

(3) It shall come into force at once and shall remain in force during the period of operation of the Proclamation of Emergency and for a period of six months thereafter, but its expiry under the operation of this sub-section shall not affect—

(a) the previous operation of, or anything duly done or suffered under, this Act or any rule made thereunder or any order made under any such rule, or

(b) any right, privilege, obligation or liability acquired, accrued or incurred under this Act or any rule made thereunder or any order made under any such rule, or

(c) any penalty, forfeiture or punishment incurred in respect of any offence under this Act or any contravention of any rule made under this Act or of any order made under any such rule, or

(d) any investigation, legal proceeding or remedy in respect of any such right, privilege, obligation, liability, penalty, forfeiture or punishment as aforesaid, and any such investigation, legal proceeding or remedy may be instituted, continued or enforced and any such penalty, forfeiture or punishment may be imposed as if this Act had not expired.

2. Definitions.—In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires,—

(a) "civil defence" has the same meaning as in clause (a) of Section 2 of the Civil Defence Act, 1968;

(b) "enemy" means—

(i) any person or country committing external aggression against India;

(ii) any person belonging to a country committing such aggression;

(iii) such other country as may be declared by the Central Government to be assisting the country committing such aggression;

(iv) any person belonging to such other country;

(c) "enemy territory" means—

(i) any area which is under the sovereignty of a country referred to in sub-clause (i), or a country referred to in sub-clause (iii), of clause (b) of this section;

(ii) any area which the Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, specify to be enemy territory for the purposes of this Act or any rule made thereunder;

(d) "military operations" means the operations of the Armed Forces of the Union;

(e) "occupied territory" means any territory of India which is for the time being in the occupation of a country referred to in sub-clause (i), or a country referred to in sub-clause (iii), of clause (b) of this section;

(f) "prescribed" means prescribed by rules made under this Act;

*Received the assent of the President on 4-12-1971. Act published in Gaz. of India; 4-12-1971; Pt. II-S. 1, Ext. P. 443.

(g) "Proclamation of Emergency" means the Proclamation issued under Cl. (1) of Article 352 of the Constitution on the 8th day of December, 1971;

(h) "State Government",—

(i) in relation to the autonomous State of Meghalaya means,—

(a) as respects any matter with respect to which the Legislature of Meghalaya has power to make laws, the Government of Meghalaya; and

(b) as respects any other matter, the Government of Assam;

(ii) in relation to a Union territory, means the administrator thereof appointed by the President under Article 239 of the Constitution;

(iii) in relation to the North-East Frontier Agency, as defined in the North-East Frontier Areas (Administration) Regulation, 1954, means the Governor of Assam acting as the agent of the President.

CHAPTER II

EMERGENCY POWERS

3. Power to make rules.— (1) The Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, make such rules as appear to it necessary or expedient for securing the defence of India and civil defence, the public safety, the maintenance of public order or the efficient conduct of military operations, or for maintaining supplies and services essential to the life of the community.

(2) Without prejudice to the generality of the powers conferred by sub-section (1), the rules may provide for, and may empower any authority to make orders providing for, all or any of the following matters, namely:—

(1) ensuring the safety and welfare of the Armed Forces of the Union, ships and aircraft and preventing the prosecution of any work likely to prejudice the operations of the Armed Forces of the Union;

(2) prohibiting anything likely to prejudice the training, discipline or health of the Armed Forces of the Union;

(3) preventing any attempt to tamper with the loyalty of persons in, or to dissuade (otherwise than with advice given in good faith to the person dissuaded for his benefit or that of any member of his family or any of his dependents) persons from entering the service of the Government;

(4) preventing or prohibiting anything likely to assist the enemy or to prejudice the successful conduct of military operations or civil defence including—

(a) communications with the enemy or agents of the enemy.

(b) acquisition, possession without lawful authority or excuse and publication of information likely to assist the enemy;

(c) contribution to, participation or assistance in, the floating of loans raised by or on behalf of the enemy;

(d) advance of money to, or contracts or commercial dealings with the enemy, enemy subjects or persons residing, carrying on business, or being, in enemy territory or occupied territory; and

(e) acts, publications or communications prejudicial to civil defence or military operations;

(5) preventing the spreading without lawful authority or excuse of reports or the prosecution of any purpose likely to cause disaffection or alarm; or to prejudice India's relations with foreign powers or to prejudice maintenance of peaceful conditions in any area or part of India, or to promote feelings of ill-will, enmity or hatred between different classes of the people of India;

(6) requiring the publication of news and information;

(7) (a) prohibiting the printing or publishing of any newspaper, news-sheet, book or other document containing matters prejudicial to the defence of India and civil defence, the public safety, the maintenance of public order, the efficient conduct of military operations or the maintenance of supplies and services essential to the life of the community;

(b) demanding security from any press used for the purpose of printing or publishing, and forfeiting the copies of, any newspaper, news-sheet, book or other document containing any of the matters referred to in sub-clause (a);

(c) forfeiture of such security and the circumstances in which and the authority by whom such forfeiture may be ordered;

(d) closing down any press or any premises used for the purpose of printing or publishing any newspaper, news-sheet, book or other document containing any of the matters referred to in sub-clause (a) in spite of the forfeiture of such security;

(8) regulating the conduct of persons in respect of areas the control of which is considered necessary or expedient, and the removal of persons from such areas;

(9) requiring any person or class of persons to comply with any scheme of defence;

(10) ensuring the safety of—

(a) ports, dockyards, lighthouses, lightships and aerodromes;

(b) railways, tramways, roads, bridges, canals and all other means of transport by land or water;

(c) telegraphs, post offices, signalling apparatus and all other means of communication;

(d) sources and systems of water-supply, works for the supply of water, gas or electricity, and all other works for public purposes;

(e) vessels, aircraft, transport vehicles as defined in the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939, and rolling stocks of railways and tramways;

†For Defence of India Rules, 1971 — See Gaz. of India; 5-12-1971, Pt. II-S. 3 (i), Ext. P. 1141.

(f) warehouses and all other places used or intended to be used for storage purposes;

(g) mines, oil-fields, factories or industrial or commercial undertakings generally, or any mine, oil-field, factory or industrial or commercial undertaking in particular;

(h) laboratories and institutions where scientific or technological research or training is conducted or imparted;

(i) all works and structures being part of, or connected with, anything earlier mentioned in this clause; and

(j) any other place or thing used or intended to be used for the purposes of Government or a local authority or a semi-Government or autonomous organisation, the protection of which is considered necessary or expedient for securing the defence of India and civil defence, the public safety, the public order, or the efficient conduct of military operations, or for maintaining supplies and services essential to the life of the community;

(11) the demolition, destruction or rendering useless in case of necessity of any building or other premises or any other property;

(12) prohibiting or regulating traffic, and the use of vessels, buoys, lights and signals, in ports and territorial, tidal and inland waters;

(13) the control of persons entering, travelling in, or departing from, India;

(14) restricting and regulating the charter of foreign vessels and aircraft;

(15) regulating the structure and equipment of vessels for the purpose of ensuring the safety thereof and of persons therein;

(16) regulating work in dockyards, shipyards and aerodromes in respect of the construction and repairs of vessels and aircraft;

(17) prohibiting or regulating the sailings of vessels from ports, traffic at aerodromes and the movement of aircraft, and traffic on railways, tramways and roads, and reserving and requiring to be adapted, for the use of the Government, all or any accommodation in vessels, aircraft, railways, tramways or road vehicles for the carriage of persons, animals or goods;

(18) the impressment of vessels, aircraft, vehicles and animals, for transport;

(19) prohibiting or regulating the use of postal, telegraphic or telephonic services, including the taking possession of such services, and the delaying, seizing, intercepting or interrupting of postal articles or telegraphic or telephonic messages;

(20) regulating the delivery otherwise than by postal or telegraphic service of postal articles and telegrams;

(21) the control of trade or industry for the purpose of regulating or increasing the supply of, and the obtaining of information with regard to articles or things of any description whatsoever which may be used in connection with the conduct of military operations or civil defence or for maintaining supplies and services essential to the life of the community;

(22) the control of generation, supply, distribution, use or consumption, of electrical energy;

(23) the taking over by the Central Government or the State Government, for a limited period, of the management of any property (including any undertaking) relating to supplies and services essential to the life of the community;

(24) the control of agriculture (including the cultivation of agricultural land and crops to be raised therein) for the purpose of increasing the production and supply of foodgrains and other essential agricultural products;

(25) the provision, storage and maintenance of commodities and things required for the conduct of military operations or for the defence of India and civil defence;

(26) the requisition of services of persons for maintaining supplies and services essential to the life of the community;

(27) the provision, construction, maintenance or alteration of buildings, premises or other structures or excavations required for the conduct of military operations or the defence of India and civil defence;

(28) prohibiting, restricting or otherwise regulating the bringing into, or taking out of, India of goods or articles of any description (including coin, bullion, bank notes, currency notes, securities and foreign exchange), and bringing into any part or place in India of any such goods or articles as aforesaid intended to be taken out of India without being removed from the ship, aircraft or other conveyance in which they are being carried and applying the provisions of the Customs Act, 1962, and in particular Section 11 thereof to such prohibitions, restrictions and regulations;

(29) controlling the possession, use or disposal of, or dealing in, coin, bullion, bank notes, currency notes, securities or foreign exchange;

(30) the control of any road or pathway, waterway, ferry or bridge, river, canal or other source of water-supply;

(31) the requisitioning and acquisition of any movable property; and the principles on which and the manner in which compensation shall be determined and given in respect of such requisitioning or acquisition;

(32) the prevention of any corrupt practice or abuse of authority or other mala fide action in relation to the production, storage, purchase, sale, supply or transport of goods for any purpose connected with the defence of India and civil defence, the efficient conduct of military operations or the maintenance of supplies and services essential to the life of the community;

(33) the prevention of hoarding, profiteering, blackmarketing, or adulteration of, or any other unfair practices in relation to, any goods procured by or supplied to the Government or notified by or under the rules as essential to the life of the community;

(34) prohibiting or regulating the possession, use or disposal of—

(a) explosives, inflammable substances, corrosive and other dangerous substances or articles, arms and ammunitions of war;

(b) vessels;

(c) wireless telegraphic apparatus;

(d) aircraft; and

(e) photographic and signalling apparatus and any means of recording information;

(35) prohibiting or regulating the bringing into, or taking out of, India and the possession, use or transmission of ciphers and other secret means of communicating information;

(36) prohibiting or regulating the publication of inventions and designs;

(37) prohibiting or regulating the publication of results of research work having a bearing on efforts relating to defence of India or military operations;

(38) preventing the disclosure of official secrets;

(39) prohibiting or regulating meetings, assemblies, fairs and processions;

(40) preventing or controlling any use of uniforms, whether official or otherwise, flags, official decorations like medals, badges and other insignia and anything similar thereto, where such use is calculated to deceive or to prejudice the public safety, the maintenance of public order, the defence of India and civil defence;

(41) ensuring the accuracy of any report or declaration legally required of any person;

(42) preventing the unauthorised change of names;

(43) preventing anything likely to cause misapprehension in respect of the identity of any official person, official document or official property or in respect of the identity of any person, document or property purporting to be, or resembling, an official person, official document or official property;

(44) the accommodation in any area of persons evacuated from another area and the regulation of the conduct of evacuated persons accommodated in such area;

(45) the billeting of evacuated persons or persons authorised to exercise functions under this Act;

(46) the entry into, and search of, any place reasonably suspected of being used for any purpose prejudicial to the public safety or interest, to the defence of India and civil defence or to the efficient conduct of military operations, and for the seizure and disposal of anything found there and reasonably suspected of being used for such purpose;

(47) the preparation of any scheme of defence service or any other service co-

nected with the defence of India and requiring any person or class of persons to comply with such scheme;

(48) the eviction of unauthorised occupants from such public premises [as defined in the Public Premises (Eviction of Unauthorised Occupants) Act, 1971] as are, in the opinion of the Central Government required for the purposes connected with the defence of India and civil defence, the public safety or interest, the efficient conduct of military operations or the maintenance of supplies and services essential to the life of the community.

(3) The rules made under sub-sec. (1) may further—

(i) provide for the arrest and trial of persons contravening any of the rules or any order issued thereunder;

(ii) provide that any contravention of, or any attempt to, contravene, or any abetment of, or any attempt to abet, the contravention of any of the provisions of the rules or any order issued under any such provision, shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to seven years, or with fine, or with both;

(iii) provide for the seizure, detention and forfeiture of any property in respect of which such contravention, attempt or abetment as is referred to in clause (ii) has been committed and for the adjudication of such forfeiture whether by a court or by any other authority;

(iv) confer powers and impose duties—

(a) upon the Central Government or officers and authorities of the Central Government as respects any matter, notwithstanding that the matter is one in respect of which the State Legislature has power to make laws; and

(b) upon any State Government or officers and authorities of any State Government as respects any matter, notwithstanding that the matter is one in respect of which the State Legislature has no power to make laws;

(v) prescribe the duties and powers of public servants and other persons as regards preventing the contravention of, or securing the observance of, the rules or any order made thereunder;

(vi) provide for preventing obstruction and deception of, and disobedience to, any person acting, and interference with any notice issued, in pursuance of the rules or any order made thereunder;

(vii) prohibit attempts by any person to screen from punishment any one, other than the husband or wife of such person, contravening any of the rules or any order made thereunder;

(viii) empower or direct any authority to take such action as may be specified in the rules or as may seem necessary to such authority for the purpose of ensuring the public safety or interest or the defence of India and civil defence;

(ix) provide for charging fees in respect of the grant or issue of a licence, permit, certificate or other document for the purposes of the rules.

4. Special powers to control civilian personnel employed in connection with the Armed Forces of the Union.—The Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, direct by general or special order that any persons who not being members of the Armed Forces of the Union are attached to, or employed with, or following, those Forces, shall be subject to naval, military or air force law, and thereupon such persons shall be subject to discipline and liable to punishment for offences under the Navy Act, 1957, the Army Act, 1950, and the Air Force Act, 1950, as the case may be, as if they were included in such class of persons subject to any of those Acts as may be specified in the notification or in the absence thereof, by an officer empowered by the Central Government in this behalf.

5. Enhanced penalties.—(1) If any person contravenes, with intent to wage war against India or to assist any country committing external aggression against India, any provision of the rules made under S. 3 or any order issued under any such rule, he shall be punishable with death or imprisonment for life or imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years and shall also be liable to fine.

(2) If any person,—

(a) contravenes any such provision of, or any such rule or order made under, the Aircraft Act, 1934, as may be notified in this behalf by the Central Government, or

(b) in any area notified in this behalf by a State Government, contravenes any such provision of, or any such rule made under, the Arms Act, 1959, the Indian Explosives Act, 1884, the Explosive Substances Act, 1908, or the Inflammable Substances Act, 1952, as may be notified in this behalf by the State Government, he shall, notwithstanding anything contained in any of the aforesaid Acts or rules made thereunder, be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to five years, or, if his intention is to assist any country committing external aggression against India, or to wage war against India, with death or imprisonment for life or imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years and shall, in either case, also be liable to fine.

(3) For the purposes of this section, any person who attempts to contravene, or abets or attempts to abet, or does any act preparatory to, a contravention of any provision of any law, rule or order shall be deemed to have contravened that provision.

6. Temporary amendments to Acts.—During the continuance in force of this Act,—

(1) the Official Secrets Act, 1923, shall have effect as if,—

(a) in sub-section (1) of Section 5, after the words “in such a place”, the words and figures “or which relates to or is used in a protected area as defined in the rules made under the Defence of India Act, 1971, or relates to anything in such area”, had been inserted; and after the words “an enemy”, the words and figures “as defined in the Defence of India Act, 1971”, had been inserted;

(b) for sub-section (4) of Section 5, the following sub-section had been substituted, namely:—

“(4) A person guilty of an offence under this section shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to five years, or if such offence is committed with intent to assist any country committing external aggression against India or to wage war against India, with death or imprisonment for life or imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years and shall, in either case, also be liable to fine.”;

(2) the Aircraft Act, 1934, shall have effect as if—

(a) at the end of clause (r) of sub-section (2) of Section 5, the following words had been inserted, namely:—

“including the taking of steps necessary to secure compliance with, or to prevent contravention of, the rules regulating such matters, or where any such rule has been contravened, to rectify, or to enable proceedings to be taken in respect of, such contravention”;

(b) in clause (b) of sub-section (1) of Section 8, for the words, brackets, letters and figures “clause (h) or clause (i) of sub-section (2) of Section 5”, the words, brackets, letters and figures “clause (d), (e), (h), (i), (k) or (l) of sub-section (2) of section 5, or the commission of an offence punishable under Section 11”, had been substituted;

(c) in Section 11, after the words “in the air” the words “or in such a manner as to interfere with any of the Armed Forces of the Union or any ships or aircraft” had been inserted;

(d) in Section 13, for the words, brackets, letter and figures “clause (i) of sub-section (2) of Section 5”, the words, brackets, letters and figures “clause (c), (d), (e), (h), (i), (j) or (k) of sub-section (2) of Section 5 or punishable under Section 11” had been substituted; and

(e) Section 14 had been omitted;

(3) the Payment of Wages Act, 1936, shall have effect as if after clause (i) of sub-section (2) of Section 7, the following clause had been inserted, namely:—

“(ii) deductions made with the written authorisation of—

(i) the employed person; or

(ii) the president or secretary of the registered trade union of which the employed person is a member on such conditions as may be prescribed, for contribution to the National Defence Fund or to any Defence Savings Scheme approved by the State Government;";

(4) the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939 (in this clause referred to as the "said Act") shall have effect subject to the following provisions, namely:—

(a) the State Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, authorise, subject to such conditions, if any, as it may think fit to impose, any person—

(i) also to perform such functions of the State Government under Chapter IV (in this clause referred to as the "said Chapter") of the said Act, other than the making of rules as may be specified in the notification; and

(ii) to perform to the exclusion of the State Transport Authority or Regional Transport Authority, as the case may be, such functions of the State Transport Authority or any Regional Transport Authority under the said Chapter as may be specified in the notification, and the expression "proper authority" in this clause shall, in relation to the performance of any such function as aforesaid, be construed in accordance with the provisions of such notification, if any, relating to that function;

(b) notwithstanding anything to the contrary in Section 58 or Section 62 of the said Act, the proper authority may grant a permit or a temporary permit under the said Chapter to be effective for any specified period or for the period of operation of this Act, whichever is less;

(c) the State Government may, by general or special order, in writing, provide that the proper authority,—

(i) in deciding to grant or refuse to grant a permit under the said Chapter, shall not be bound to take into consideration representations made by any persons other than the applicant for the permit or to follow the procedure laid down in Section 57 of the said Act; and may take into consideration an application for a stage carriage permit or a public carrier's permit which has not complied with the provisions of sub-section (2) of that section;

(ii) in fixing the maximum and minimum fares or freights for stage carriages and public carriers, shall not be bound to give the representatives of the interests affected an opportunity of being heard or to follow the procedure laid down in Sec. 43 of the said Act, or where such action is taken for the purpose of preventing the charge of excess fares or freights, to have regard to any of the considerations set forth in clauses (a) to (d) of sub-section (1) of that section;

(d) without prejudice to the provisions of Section 60 of the said Act, the proper authority may, if in its opinion the public interest so requires, cancel, or modify the conditions of, or suspend for such period as it thinks fit, any permit or countersignature under the said Chapter which is valid in its jurisdiction;

(e) the Central Government or the State Government may, by general or special order in writing, exempt from all or any of the provisions of the said Chapter any transport vehicle used or required for use in connection with any work or purpose declared by the Central Government or, as the case may be, the State Government in the order to be a work or purpose connected with the defence of India, the conduct of military operations or civil defence;

(f) if the State Government by general or special order in writing so directs, the provisions of sub-section (2) of Section 38 of the said Act shall have effect in relation to any controlled motor vehicles specified in the order as if in the said sub-section, the words "not being in any case more than two years or less than six months" and the proviso and the Explanation had been omitted.

Explanation.— In this clause "controlled motor vehicle" means any motor vehicle declared by the Government to be a controlled motor vehicle by order made in this behalf;

(5) the Civil Defence Act, 1968, shall have effect as if,—

(a) for sub-section (3) of Section 3, the following sub-section had been substituted, namely:—

"(3) Any rule made under sub-section (1) may provide that a contravention thereof or any order made or direction given thereunder shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both;"

(b) in Section 11, sub-section (2) had been omitted;

(c) after Section 16, the following sections had been inserted, namely:—

"16A. Power of the Central Government to delegate.— The Central Government may, by order, direct that any power or duty, which by this Act or any rule made thereunder is conferred or imposed upon the Central Government shall, in such circumstances and under such conditions, if any, as may be specified in the direction, be exercised or discharged also by any officer or authority subordinate to the Central Government.

16B. Effect of order made by the Central Government, etc.— Any order made by the Central Government or the officer or authority authorised by it under Section 16A in relation to a matter to which this Act or any rule made thereunder relates shall have effect, notwithstanding anything contained in any order made by the State Government or any other authority with regard to such matter;"

(d) in Section 19, after the words "authorised by", the words "the Central Government," had been inserted;

(6) the Maintenance of Internal Security Act, 1971, shall have effect as if,—

(a) in sub-section (2) of Section 1, the words "except the State of Jammu and Kashmir" had been omitted and the following proviso had been inserted at the end, namely:—

"Provided that every person in respect of whom an order of detention made under the Jammu and Kashmir Preventive Detention Act, 1964, is in force immediately before the commencement of the Defence of India Act, 1971, shall continue to be governed by the provisions of that Act in respect of such detention as if this Act had not been extended to the State of Jammu and Kashmir";

(b) in Section 2, after clause (d), the following clause had been inserted, namely:—

"(e) any reference in this Act to a law which is not in force in the State of Jammu and Kashmir shall, in relation to that State, be construed as a reference to the corresponding law, if any, in force in that State";

(c) in sub-section (2) of Section 3, for the words, brackets, figures and letter "may, if satisfied as provided in sub-clauses (ii) and (iii) of clause (a) of sub-section (1)", the words, brackets and figure "may also, if satisfied as provided in sub-section (1)," had been substituted;

(d) in Section 13, after the words "from the date of detention", the words and figures "or until the expiry of the Defence of India Act, 1971, whichever is later" had been inserted;

(e) after Section 17, the following section had been inserted, namely:—

17A. Duration of detention in cases of detention on certain grounds.—(1) Notwithstanding anything contained in the foregoing provisions of this Act, during the period of operation of the Proclamation of Emergency issued on the 3rd day of December, 1971, any person (including a foreigner) in respect of whom an order of detention has been made under this Act, may be detained without obtaining the opinion of the Advisory Board for a period longer than three months, but not exceeding two years from the date of his detention in any of the following classes of cases or under any of the following circumstances, namely:—

(a) where such person had been detained with a view to preventing him from acting in any manner prejudicial to the defence of India, relations of India with foreign powers or the security of India; or

(b) where such person had been detained with a view to preventing him from acting in any manner prejudicial to the security of the State or the maintenance of public order.

(2) In the case of any person to whom sub-section (1) applies, Sections 10 to 13 shall have effect subject to the following modifications, namely:—

(a) in Section 10, for the words "shall, within thirty days", the words "may, at any time prior to but in no case later than three months before the expiration of two years" shall be substituted;

(b) in Section 11,—

(i) in sub-section (1), for the words "from the date of detention", the words "from the date on which reference is made to it" shall be substituted;

(ii) in sub-section (2), for the words "the detention of the person concerned," the words "the continued detention of the person concerned" shall be substituted;

(c) in Section 12, for the words "for the detention" in both the places where they occur, the words "for the continued detention" shall be substituted;

(d) in Section 13, for the words "twelve months", the words "three years" shall be substituted.

CHAPTER III

SPECIAL TRIBUNALS

7. Constitution of Special Tribunals.

—(1) The State Government may, for the whole or any part of the State, constitute one or more Special Tribunals which, or each of which, shall consist of three members appointed by that Government.

(2) No person shall be appointed as a member of a Special Tribunal unless he—

(a) is qualified under clause (2) of Article 217 of the Constitution for appointment as a Judge of a High Court; or

(b) has for a total period of not less than three years exercised, whether continuously or not, the powers under the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (hereafter in this Chapter referred to as the Code) of any one or more of the following, namely:—

(i) Sessions Judge, Additional Sessions Judge, Chief Presidency Magistrate, Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate, (ii) District Magistrate, Additional District Magistrate.

(3) At least one member of a Special Tribunal shall be qualified for appointment thereto under clause (a) of sub-section (2), and where only one member is so qualified under that clause, at least one other member shall be qualified for appointment under clause (b) of that sub-section by virtue of having exercised powers exclusive of those specified in sub-clause (ii) of the said clause (b).

8. Jurisdiction of Special Tribunals.—

During the period during which the Proclamation of Emergency is in operation, the State Government may, by general or special order, direct that a Special Tribunal shall try any offence—

(a) under any rule made under Section 3, or

(b) punishable with death, or imprisonment for life or imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years under Section 5 of this Act or under sub-section (4) of Section 5 of the Official Secrets Act, 1923, as amended by Section 6 of this Act, triable by any court having jurisdiction within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Special Tribunal and may, in any such order, direct the transfer to the Special Tribunal of any particular case from any other Special Tribunal or any other, criminal court not being a High Court.

9. Procedure of Special Tribunals.—

(1) A Special Tribunal may take cognizance of offences without the accused being committed to it for trial.

(2) Save in cases of trials of offences punishable with death or imprisonment for life or imprisonment for a term which may extend to five years or more, it shall not be necessary in any trial for a Special Tribunal to take down the evidence at length in writing, but the Special Tribunal shall cause a memorandum of the substance of what each witness deposes, to be taken down, and such memorandum shall be signed by a member of the Special Tribunal and shall form part of the record.

(3) A Special Tribunal shall not be bound to adjourn any trial for any purpose unless such adjournment is, in its opinion, necessary in the interests of justice.

(4) A Special Tribunal shall not, merely by reason of a change in its members, be bound to recall and to re-hear any witness who has given evidence, and it may act on the evidence already recorded by or produced before it.

(5) After an accused person has once appeared before it, a Special Tribunal may try him in his absence if, in its opinion, his absence has been brought about by the accused himself for the purpose of impeding the course of justice, or if the behaviour of the accused in court has been such as, in the opinion of the Special Tribunal, to impede the course of justice.

(6) In the event of any difference of opinion among the members of a Special Tribunal, the opinion of the majority shall prevail.

(7) The State Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, make rules providing for—

(i) the times and places at which Special Tribunals may sit; and

(ii) the procedure to be adopted in the event of any member of a Special Tribunal being prevented from attending throughout the trial of any accused person.

(8) A Special Tribunal shall, in all matters in respect to which no procedure has been prescribed by this Act or by rules made thereunder, follow the procedure prescribed by the Code for the trial of warrant cases by Magistrates.

10. Exclusion of public from proceedings of Special Tribunals.— In addition, and without prejudice, to any powers which a Special Tribunal may possess by virtue of any law for the time being in force to order the exclusion of the public from any proceedings, if at any stage in the course of a trial of any person before a Special Tribunal, application is made by the prosecution, on the ground that the publication of any evidence to be given or of any statement to be made in the course of the trial would be prejudicial to the safety of the State, that all or any portion of the public shall be excluded during any part of the hearing, the Special Tribunal may make an order to that effect, but the passing of the sentence shall in any case take place in public.

11. Powers of Special Tribunals.—

A Special Tribunal shall have all the powers conferred by the Code on a Court of Session exercising original jurisdiction.

12. Sentences of Special Tribunals.—

(1) A Special Tribunal may pass any sentence authorised by law.

(2) A person sentenced by a Special Tribunal—

(a) to death or imprisonment for life, or

(b) to imprisonment for a term of five years or more, under this Act or the rules made thereunder or under sub-section (4) of Section 5 of the Official Secrets Act, 1923, as amended by Section 6 of this Act, shall have a right of appeal to the High Court within whose jurisdiction the sentence has been passed, but save as aforesaid and notwithstanding the provisions of the Code, or of any other law for the time being in force, or of anything having the force of law by whatsoever authority made or done, there shall be no appeal from any order or sentence of a Special Tribunal and no court shall have authority to revise such order or sentence, or to transfer any case from a Special Tribunal, or to make any order under Section 491 of the Code, or have any jurisdiction of any kind in respect of any proceedings of a Special Tribunal.

(3) The powers conferred upon the appropriate Government by Chapter XXIX of the Code shall apply in respect of a person sentenced by a Special Tribunal.

CHAPTER IV

EMPLOYMENT OF TECHNICAL PERSONNEL IN THE NATIONAL SERVICE

13. Definitions.— In this Chapter, unless the context otherwise requires,—

(a) "employment in the national service" means employment in a notified establishment in pursuance of an order passed under Section 17;

(b) "employer" means any person who employs technical personnel to do any work in an establishment and includes any person entrusted with the supervision and control of technical personnel in such an establishment;

(c) "establishment" means —

(i) any office, or

(ii) any place where any industry, trade, business or occupation is carried on; and includes any technical institution or training centre established, selected or approved by the Central Government;

(d) "National Service Tribunal" means a Tribunal constituted under Section 15;

(e) "notified establishment" means any Government establishment, any establishment belonging to a corporation owned, controlled or managed by the Government and any establishment declared by notification under sub-section (1) of Section 16 to be engaged in work of national importance;

(f) "notified occupation" means any occupation which the Central Government may, by rules made under this Chapter, specify as a notified occupation for the purposes of this Chapter;

(g) "technical personnel" means all persons who possess knowledge of or skill in one or more of the notified occupations, whether or not they are employed in any establishment, and includes such persons or class of persons undergoing training in any of those occupations in any establishment as may be declared by the Central Government by notification in the Official Gazette to be technical personnel for the purposes of this Chapter.

14. Liability for employment in national service.— All technical personnel, being citizens of India and not being members of the Armed Forces of the Union or members of any Reserve of any such Force who are liable, under the terms of their service in such Reserve, to be called up for service at any time and not only on partial or general mobilisation, shall be liable under this Chapter to undertake employment in the national service.

15. National Service Tribunals.— (1) The Central Government shall constitute, for such areas and in such places as it thinks fit, National Service Tribunals to exercise the functions assigned to such Tribunals by or under this Chapter.

(2) The composition, powers and procedure of National Service Tribunals shall be such as may be prescribed.

16. Notified establishments.— (1) The Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, declare any establishment, which is engaged in work which, in the opinion of the Central Government, is likely to assist the defence of India and civil defence, the efficient conduct of military operations, or the maintenance or increase of supplies and services essential to the life of the community, to be an establishment engaged in work of national importance and thereupon such establishment shall be a notified establishment and while making such declaration, the Central Government may require that establishment to make such provisions as may be specified in the notification in regard to the terms of service and conditions of work of its employees.

(2) Every notified establishment shall be eligible to apply to a National Service Tribunal or to the Central Government for technical personnel and having so applied, shall take into its employment such technical personnel within such period and on such terms and conditions as may be prescribed.

17. Employment of technical personnel in the national service.— (1) Subject to any rules made in this behalf under this Chapter, the Central Government may require a National Service Tribunal to report what technical personnel, whether employed in an establishment or not, is available within its jurisdiction for employment in the national service and may by order in writing,—

(a) require the employer in any establishment by which such technical personnel is employed to release such personnel as may be specified in the order, for employment in the national service;

(b) direct any technical personnel to undertake such employment in the national service as may be specified in the order;

(c) direct that any technical personnel engaged in any establishment under conditions not amounting to employment in the national service shall, for the purposes of sub-section (3), be deemed to have been taken into employment in the national service; and

(d) require any notified establishment, notwithstanding that it has not made any application under Section 16, to take into its employment such technical personnel within such period as may be specified in the order.

(2) Notwithstanding anything in sub-section (1), a National Service Tribunal may—

(a) exercise the powers conferred on the Central Government by clauses (a) and (b) of sub-section (1);

(b) require by order any employer to give training in his establishment to persons for qualifying them as technical personnel;

(c) direct by order technical personnel to present themselves at such place and time as may be specified in the order for interview or inquiry and if so required, for submission to a test of their technical skill.

(3) Any order made by the Central Government under sub-section (1) and by a National Service Tribunal under sub-section (2) shall be complied with within such period or on such date as may be specified in this behalf in the order.

(4) The Central Government or, as the case may be, a National Service Tribunal, may, by order in writing, transfer technical personnel from one form or place of employment in the national service to another, and the employer and the personnel concerned shall comply with such order.

(5) No person included in the definition of technical personnel, who has been directed to undertake employment in the national service or transferred from one form or place of employment to another under the foregoing provisions, shall be discharged from or leave his employment in such service unless the employer or person concerned has previously obtained the permission of the Central Government or, as the case may be, of the National Service Tribunal.

(6) Any person included in the definition of technical personnel who is required to undertake employment in the national service or transferred from one form or place of employment to another under the foregoing provisions of this section, may be required by the Central Government or, as the case may be, the National Service Tribunal concerned, to submit himself to be examined by such medical authority as may be prescribed.

(7) An appeal shall lie to the Central Government against any order passed by a National Service Tribunal under this section and the decision of the Central Government shall be final.

(8) The terms of service of technical personnel taken into employment in the national service shall be such as may be prescribed.

Provided that any rights which such technical personnel may have under the provident or superannuation fund or other scheme relating to gratuity, bonus or other benefit for the advantage of employees maintained by the establishment from which they are released shall be preserved.

18. Re-instatement.—(1) Every person who was employed in an establishment immediately before his employment in the national service and whose employment in the national service has not been terminated by dismissal for serious misconduct shall, on his release from such employment in the national service, be entitled to be reinstated in his former employment, in accordance with such conditions as may be prescribed.

Provided that in determining such conditions regard shall be had to the additional skill and experience acquired by him in the course of his employment in the national service.

(2) The Central Government may by rules made in this behalf provide for the appointment of Technical Personnel (Re-instatement) Tribunals to deal with such matters in relation to re-instatement of persons released from employment in the national service as may be prescribed.

19. Relinquishment of employment by, dismissal of, and engagement by establishment of, technical personnel.—(1) Subject to any rules made in this behalf, a National Service Tribunal may require any establishment (including a notified establishment) to post before a specified date and to keep posted, on its premises notices intimating that—

(a) no person included within the definition of technical personnel who is employed in the establishment shall at any time after the posting of the notice, leave his employment without the previous permission in writing of the National Service Tribunal;

(b) if the National Service Tribunal refuses such permission, that Tribunal may lay down, subject to the prescribed conditions, the terms of service on which the employer shall continue to retain him in employment;

(c) if any such person leaves his employment without the previous permission in writing of the Tribunal as aforesaid he may be directed by the Tribunal to return to his employment.

(2) After notices referred to in sub-section (1) have been posted on the premises of any establishment (including a notified establishment), no employer in the establishment shall engage, discharge or dismiss any person included in the definition of technical personnel except in accordance with rules made in this behalf.

20. Penalties and procedure.—(1) Whoever contravenes any order of the Central Government or of a National Service Tribunal made under Section 17 or wilfully fails to comply with any summons, requirement, direction or order issued or made by the Central Government or by a National Service Tribunal under any other provision of this Chapter shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months, or with fine not exceeding one thousand rupees, or with both.

(2) No court shall take cognizance of any offence punishable under sub-section (1) except with the previous sanction in writing,—

(a) in the case of contravention of any order or any wilful failure to comply with any summons, requirement or direction of the Central Government, of the Central Government;

(b) in the case of contravention of any order or any wilful failure to comply with any summons, requirement or direction of a National Service Tribunal, of the National Service Tribunal.

(3) Notwithstanding anything contained in the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, an offence punishable under sub-section (1) shall be cognizable.

(4) No court inferior to a Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the First Class shall try any offence punishable under sub-section (1).

21. Service of summons, notices, orders, etc.— Any summons, notice, requirement, direction or order issued, made or given to any person under this Chapter may be served by being sent by registered post addressed to that person at his last known residence.

22. Power to make rules.— (1) The Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, make rules for carrying out the purposes of this Chapter.

(2) Without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, such rules may prescribe—

(a) the occupations which shall be notified occupations for the purposes of this Chapter;

(b) the composition, powers and procedure of National Service Tribunals;

(c) the technical personnel, which may be taken into the employment of any notified establishment under sub-section (2) of Section 16 and the period within which and the terms and conditions on which such personnel shall be so taken;

(d) the medical authority before whom any person may be required to submit himself for examination under sub-section (6) of Section 17;

(e) the terms of service of technical personnel taken into employment in the national service;

(f) the conditions in accordance with which persons released from employment in the national service may be re-instated in their former employment;

(g) the appointment of Technical Personnel (Re-instatement) Tribunals and the matters in relation to re-instatement which such Tribunals may be required to deal with;

(h) the provisions relating to engagement, discharge or dismissal of persons by any employer in any establishment on the premises of which notices have been posted under sub-section (1) of Section 19;

(i) any other matter which may be prescribed or which is to be provided for by rules.

(3) Any rule made under this Chapter may provide that a contravention of the rule shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months, or with fine not exceeding one thousand rupees, or with both.

CHAPTER V REQUISITIONING AND ACQUISITION OF IMMOVABLE PROPERTY

23. Requisitioning of immovable property.— (1) Notwithstanding anything contained in any other law for the time being in force, if in the opinion of the Central Government or the State Government it is necessary or expedient so to do for securing the defence of India, civil defence, public safety, maintenance of public order or efficient conduct of military operations, or for maintaining supplies and services essential to the life of the community, that Government may by order in writing requisition any immovable property and may make such further orders as appear to that Government to be necessary or expedient in connection with the requisitioning:

Provided that no property or part thereof which is exclusively used by the public for religious worship shall be requisitioned.

(2) The requisition shall be effected by an order in writing addressed to the person deemed by the Central Government or the State Government, as the case may be, to be the owner or person in possession of the property, and such order shall be served in the prescribed manner on the person to whom it is addressed.

(3) Whenever any property is requisitioned under sub-section (1), the period of such requisition shall not extend beyond the period for which such property is required for any of the purposes mentioned in that sub-section.

24. Payment of compensation.— Whenever in pursuance of Section 23, the Central Government or the State Government, as the case may be, requisitions any immovable property, there shall be paid to the persons interested compensation the amount of which shall be determined by taking into consideration the following, namely:—

(i) the rent payable in respect of the property or if no rent is payable, the rent payable in respect of similar property in the locality;

(ii) if in consequence of the requisition of the property the person interested is compelled to change his residence or place of business, the reasonable expenses (if any) incidental to such change;

(iii) such sum or sums, if any, as may be found necessary to compensate the person interested for damage caused to the property on entry after requisition or during the period of requisition, other than normal wear and tear.

Provided that where any person interested being aggrieved by the amount of compensation so determined makes an application within the prescribed time to the Central Government or the State Government, as the case may be, for referring the matter to an arbitrator, the amount of compensation to be paid shall be such as the arbitrator appointed in this behalf by the Central Government or the State Government, as the case may be, may determine:

Provided further that where there is any dispute as to the title to receive the compensation or as to the apportionment of the amount of compensation, it shall be referred to an arbitrator appointed in this behalf by the Central Government or the State Government, as the case may be, for determination, and shall be determined in accordance with the decision of such arbitrator.

Explanation.— In this section and in Section 31, the expression "person interested" in relation to any property includes all persons claiming or entitled to claim an interest in the compensation payable on account of the requisitioning or acquisition of that property under this Act.

25. Power to obtain information and give direction.— The Central Government or the State Government, as the case may be, may, with a view to requisitioning any property under Section 23 or determining the compensation payable under Section 24, by order—

(a) require any person to furnish to the authority mentioned therein such information in his possession relating to any property as may be specified;

(b) direct that the owner, occupier or the person in possession of the property shall not, without the permission of Government, dispose of it or where it is a building, structurally alter it till the expiry of such period as may be specified in the order.

26. Power of entry into, and inspection of, property, etc.— Any person authorised in this behalf by the Central Government or the State Government, as the case may be, may enter into any immovable property and inspect such property for the purpose of determining whether, and if so in what manner, an order under Section 23 should be made in relation to such property or with a view to securing compliance with any order made under that section.

27. Eviction from requisitioned property.— (1) Any person remaining in possession of any requisitioned property in contravention of any order made under Section 23 may be summarily evicted from the property by any officer empowered in this behalf by the Central Government or the State Government, as the case may be.

(2) Any officer so empowered may, after giving to any woman not appearing in public reasonable warning and facility to withdraw, remove or open any lock or bolt or break open any door of any building or do any other act necessary for effecting such eviction.

28. Penalty for contravention of any order regarding requisitioning.— If any person contravenes any order made under Section 23 or Section 25, he shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both.

29. Release from requisition.— (1) Where any property requisitioned under Section 23 is to be released from such requisition, the Government by which or under whose authority the property was requisitioned or any person generally or specially authorised by it in this behalf may, after such inquiry, if any, as it or he may in any case consider necessary to make or cause to be made, specify by order in writing the person to whom possession of the property shall be given and such possession shall, as far as practicable, be given to the person who appears to the Government or, as the case may be, the person authorised as aforesaid, to be entitled to the possession of the property at the time such order is made.

(2) The delivery of possession of the property to the person specified in the order under sub-section (1) shall be a full discharge of the Government from all liabilities in respect of the property, but shall not prejudice any rights in respect of the property which any other person may be entitled by due process of law to enforce against the person to whom possession of the property is delivered.

30. Acquisition of requisitioned property.— (1) Any immovable property which has been requisitioned under Section 23 may, in the manner hereinafter provided, be acquired in the circumstances and by the Government specified below, namely:—

(a) where any works have, during the period of requisition, been constructed on, in or over the property wholly or partly at the expense of any Government, the property may be acquired by that Government if it decides that the value of or the right to use, such works shall, by means of the acquisition of the property, be preserved or secured for the purposes of any Government, or

(b) where the cost to any Government of restoring the property to its condition at the time of its requisition as aforesaid would, in the determination of that Government, be excessive having regard to the value of the property at that time, the property may be acquired by that Government.

(2) When any Government as aforesaid decides to acquire any immovable property, it shall serve on the owner thereof or where the owner is not readily traceable or the ownership is in dispute, by publishing in the Official Gazette, a notice stating that the Government has decided to acquire it in pursuance of this section.

(3) Where a notice of acquisition is served on the owner of the property or is published in the Official Gazette under sub-section (2), then, at the beginning of the day on which the notice is so served or published, the property shall vest in the Government free from any mortgage, pledge, lien or other similar encumbrances and the period of requisition thereof shall come to an end.

(4) Any decision or determination of a Government under sub-section (1) shall be final, and shall not be called in question in any court.

(5) For the purposes of this section, "works" includes every description of buildings, structures and improvements of the property.

31. Compensation for acquisition of requisitioned property.— (1) The compensation payable for the acquisition of any property under Section 30 shall be the price which the requisitioned property would have fetched in the open market if it had remained in the same condition as it was at the time of requisitioning and been sold on the date of acquisition.

(2) Where any person interested is aggrieved by the amount of compensation determined in accordance with sub-section (1), he may make an application within the prescribed time to the Central Government or the State Government, as the case may be, for referring the matter to an arbitrator appointed in this behalf by the Central Government or the State Government; and the amount of compensation to be paid shall be such as may be determined by the arbitrator in accordance with sub-section (1).

(3) The provisions of Section 25 and Section 26 shall apply in relation to the acquisition of any property or the determination of compensation for such acquisition as they apply in relation to the requisitioning of any property or the determination of compensation for such requisitioning.

(4) Where there is any dispute as to the title to receive the compensation or as to the apportionment of the amount of compensation, it shall be referred to an arbitrator appointed in this behalf by the Central Government or the State Government, as the case may be, for determination, and his decision thereon shall be final.

32. Power to make rules.— (1) The Central Government or the State Government, as the case may be, may, by notification in the Official Gazette, make rules for carrying out the purposes of this Chapter.

(2) In particular, and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing powers, such rules may prescribe—

(a) the procedure to be followed in arbitration proceedings under this Chapter;

(b) the period within which the owner of any property or any other person interested in the amount of compensation may apply to the Government concerned for referring the matter to an arbitrator;

(c) the principles to be followed in apportioning the costs of proceedings before the arbitrator;

(d) the method of payment of compensation;

(e) the manner of service of notices and orders;

(f) any other matter which has to be, or may be, prescribed.

33. Certain properties requisitioned under previous law to be deemed to be requisitioned under this Chapter.— Any property referred to in sub-section (1) of Section 25 of the Requisitioning and Acquisition of Immovable Property Act, 1952, which continued to be subject to requisition under the said Act and has not, immediately before the commencement of this Act, been released from requisitioning shall, notwithstanding anything contained in any other law for the time being in force, be deemed to be the property requisitioned under sub-section (1) of Section 23 if such property is, in the opinion of the Central Government, now required for any of the purposes specified in that sub-section:

Provided that—

(a) all determinations, agreements or awards for the payment of compensation in respect of any such property for any period of requisition before the commencement of this Act and in force immediately before such commencement, shall continue to be in force and shall apply to the payment of compensation in respect of that property for any period after such commencement.

(b) anything done or deemed to have been done or any action taken or deemed to have been taken (including any orders, notifications or rules made or issued or deemed to have been made or issued) under the Requisitioning and Acquisition of Immovable Property Act, 1952, shall, in so far as it is not inconsistent with the provisions of this Chapter or any rules or orders made thereunder, be deemed to have been done or taken under this Chapter.

CHAPTER VI SUPPLEMENTAL

34. Power to delegate.— (1) The Central Government may, by order, direct that any power or duty which by this Act or by any rule made under this Act is conferred or imposed upon the Central Government shall, in such circumstances and under such conditions, if any, as may be specified in the direction, be exercised or discharged also—

(a) by any officer or authority subordinate to the Central Government, or

(b) whether or not the power or duty relates to a matter with respect to which a State Legislature has power to make laws, by any State Government or by any officer or authority subordinate to such Government, or

(c) by any other authority.

(2) The State Government may, by order, direct that any power or duty which by this Act or by any rule made under this Act is conferred or imposed on the State Government or which, being by this Act or any such rule conferred or imposed on the Central Government has been directed under sub-section (1) to be exercised or discharged by the State Government, shall, in such circumstances and under such conditions, if any, as may be specified in the direction, be exercised or discharged by any officer or authority not being (except in the case of a Union territory) an officer or authority subordinate to the Central Government.

(3) The Government of Assam may, by order, direct that any power or duty which by this Act or by any rule made under this Act is conferred or imposed on it shall, in relation to the autonomous State of Meghalaya, be exercised or discharged in such circumstances and under such conditions, if any, as may be specified in the direction by the Government of Meghalaya or by any officer or authority subordinate to that Government.

35. Rules to be laid before Houses of Parliament.— Every rule made by the Central Government under this Act shall be laid, as soon as may be after it is made, before each House of Parliament while it is in session for a total period of thirty days which may be comprised in one session or in two successive sessions, and if, before the expiry of the session in which it is so laid or the session immediately following, both Houses agree in making any modification in the rule or both Houses agree that the rule should not be made, the rule shall thereafter have effect only in such modified form or be of no effect, as the case may be; so, however, that any such modification or annulment shall be without prejudice to the validity of anything previously done under that rule.

36. Jurisdiction of ordinary courts.— (1) Except as may be provided in this Act or in any rule made thereunder or in any order made under any such rule by the Central Government or the State Government or by any officer not below the rank of Collector empowered under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) of Section 34 to make such order, the ordinary criminal and civil courts shall continue to exercise jurisdiction.

(2) For the removal of doubts, it is hereby declared that any provision in any such rule or order as aforesaid to the effect that the decision of any authority not being a court shall be final or conclusive shall be a sufficient excepting provision within the meaning of sub-section (1).

37. Effect of Act and rules, etc., inconsistent with other enactments.— The provisions of this Act or any rule made thereunder or any order made under any such rule shall have effect notwithstanding anything inconsistent therewith contained in any enactment other than this Act or in any instrument having effect by virtue of any enactment other than this Act.

38. Ordinary avocations of life to be interfered with as little as possible.— Any authority or person acting in pursuance of this Act shall interfere with the ordinary avocations of life and the enjoyment of property as little as may be consonant with the purpose of ensuring the public safety and interest and the defence of India and civil defence.

39. Savings as to orders.— (1) No order made in exercise of any power conferred by or under this Act shall be called in question in any court.

(2) Where an order purports to have been made and signed by any authority in exercise of any power conferred by or under this Act a court shall, within the meaning of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, presume that such order was so made by that authority.

40. Protection of action taken under the Act.— (1) No suit, prosecution or other legal proceeding shall lie against any person for anything which is in good faith done or intended to be done in pursuance of this Act or any rules made thereunder or any orders issued under any such rule.

(2) Save as otherwise expressly provided under this Act, no suit or other legal proceeding shall lie against the Government for any damage caused or likely to be caused by anything in good faith done or intended to be done in pursuance of this Act or any rule made thereunder or any order issued under any such rule.

THE INTERNATIONAL AIRPORTS AUTHORITY ACT, 1971

(8th December, 1971)

An Act to provide for the constitution of an authority for the management of certain aerodromes whereat international air transport services are operated or are intended to be operated and for matters connected therewith.

BE it enacted by Parliament in the Twenty-second Year of the Republic of India as follows:—

CHAPTER I

PRELIMINARY

1. Short title, commencement and application.— (1) This Act may be called THE INTERNATIONAL AIRPORTS AUTHORITY ACT, 1971.

(2) It shall come into force on such date as the Central Government may by notification in the Official Gazette, appoint.

(3) It applies, in the first instance, to the aerodromes of Bombay (Santa Cruz), Calcutta (Dum Dum), Delhi (Palam) and Madras (Meenambakkam) and the Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, apply the provisions of this Act to any other aerodrome whereat international air transport services are operated or are intended to be operated and with effect from such date as may be specified in the notification.

2. Definitions.— In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires,—

(a) "airport" means an aerodrome as defined in Clause (2) of Section 2 of the Aircraft Act, 1934 and to which this Act applies or is made applicable;

(b) "airstrip" means an area used or intended to be used for the landing and take-off of aircraft with short take-off and landing characteristics and includes all buildings and structures thereon or appertaining thereto;

(c) "Authority" means the International Airports Authority of India constituted under section 3;

(d) "Chairman" means the Chairman of the Authority;

(e) "heliport" means an area, either at ground level or elevated on a structure, used or intended to be used for the landing and take-off of helicopters and includes an area for parking helicopters and all buildings and structures thereon or appertaining thereto;

(f) "member" means a member of the Authority and includes the Chairman but for the purposes of Sections 4, 5, 6 and 7 does not include the ex-officio member referred to in clause (b) of sub-section (3) of section 3;

*Received the assent of the President on 8-12-1971. Act published in Gaz. of India; 9-12-1971, Pt. II-S. 1, Ext. P. 569. For Statement of Objects and Reasons, see Gaz. of India; 9-7-1971, Pt. II-S. 2, Ext. P. 412.

(g) "prescribed" means prescribed by rules made under this Act; and

(h) "regulations" means regulations made under this Act.

CHAPTER II

THE INTERNATIONAL AIRPORTS AUTHORITY OF INDIA

3. Constitution and incorporation of the Authority.— (1) With effect from the commencement of this Act, the Central Government shall constitute an authority to be called the International Airports Authority of India.

(2) The Authority shall be a body corporate by the name aforesaid having perpetual succession and a common seal with power, subject to the provisions of this Act, to acquire, hold and dispose of property both moveable and immovable, and to contract and shall by the said name sue and be sued.

(3) The Authority shall consist of—

(a) a Chairman to be appointed by the Central Government;

(b) the Director-General of Civil Aviation, ex-officio; and

(c) not less than six and not more than thirteen members to be appointed by the Central Government.

(4) The Chairman shall be a whole-time member and the other members referred to in clause (c) of sub-section (3) may be appointed as whole-time or part-time members as the Central Government may think fit.

(5) The names of persons appointed as members shall be notified by the Central Government in the Official Gazette.

(6) During the temporary absence of the Chairman, the Central Government may appoint another member to act as the Chairman.

4. Disqualification for office of member.— A person shall be disqualified for being appointed as a member if he—

(a) has been convicted and sentenced to imprisonment for an offence, which, in the opinion of the Central Government, involves moral turpitude; or

(b) is an undischarged insolvent; or

(c) is of unsound mind and stands so declared by a competent Court; or

(d) has been removed or dismissed from the service of the Government or a corporation owned or controlled by the Government; or

(e) has, in the opinion of the Central Government, such financial or other interest in the Authority as is likely to affect prejudicially the discharge by him of his functions as a member.

5. Term of office and conditions of service of members.— (1) Subject to the provisions of Section 6, every member shall hold office for a period of three years from the date on which he assumes office:

Provided that Central Government may—

(a) terminate the appointment of any whole-time member, who is not a servant of the Government, after giving him notice for a period of not less than three months or in lieu thereof on payment of an amount equal to his salary and allowances, if any, for a period of three months;

(b) terminate the appointment of any part-time member who is not a servant of the Government after giving him notice for such period as may be prescribed; and

(c) terminate at any time the appointment of any member who is a servant of the Government.

(2) The other conditions of service of the members shall be such as may be prescribed.

(3) Any member may resign his office by giving notice in writing for such period as may be prescribed to the Central Government and, on such resignation being notified in the Official Gazette by that Government, such member shall be deemed to have vacated his office.

(4) A casual vacancy caused by the resignation of a member under sub-sec. (3) or otherwise may be filled by fresh appointment and the person so appointed shall hold office for the remaining period for which the member in whose place he is appointed would have held office.

6. Vacation of office of member.— The Central Government shall remove a member if he—

(a) becomes subject to any of the disqualifications mentioned in Section 4:

Provided that no member shall be removed on the ground that he has become subject to the disqualification mentioned in clause (e) of that section, unless he has been given a reasonable opportunity of being heard in the matter; or

(b) refuses to act or becomes incapable of acting; or

(c) is, without obtaining leave of absence from the Authority, absent from three consecutive meetings of the Authority; or

(d) in the opinion of the Central Government, has so abused his position as to render his continuance in office detrimental to the public interest.

Provided that no member shall be removed under this clause unless he has been given a reasonable opportunity of being heard in the matter.

7. Eligibility of member for reappointment.— Any person ceasing to be a member shall, unless disqualified under S. 4, be eligible for re-appointment as such.

8. Meetings.— (1) The Authority shall meet at such times and places and shall observe such rules of procedure in regard to the transaction of business at its meetings (including the quorum at meetings) as may be provided by regulations.

(2) The Chairman, or, if for any reason he is unable to attend any meeting, any other member chosen by the members present at the meeting, shall preside at the meeting.

(3) All questions which come up before any meeting of the Authority shall be decided by a majority of the votes of the members present and voting, and, in the event of an equality of votes, the Chairman, or in his absence, the person presiding, shall have and exercise a second or casting vote.

9. Vacancy in the Authority not to invalidate proceedings.— No act or proceeding of the Authority shall be deemed to be invalid by reason merely of any vacancy in, or any defect in the constitution of, the Authority.

10. Appointment of officers and other employees of the Authority.— (1) For the purpose of enabling it efficiently to discharge its functions under this Act, the Authority shall, subject to the provisions of Section 12 and to such rules as may be prescribed in this behalf, appoint (whether on deputation or otherwise) such number of officers and other employees as it may consider necessary:

Provided that the appointment of such category of officers as may be specified after consultation with the Chairman in such rules, shall be subject to the approval of the Central Government.

(2) Subject to the provisions of Section 12, every officer or other employee appointed by the Authority shall be subject to such conditions of service and shall be entitled to such remuneration as may be determined by regulations.

11. Authority to act on business principles.— In the discharge of its functions under this Act, the Authority shall act, so far as may be, on business principles.

CHAPTER III PROPERTY AND CONTRACTS

12. Transfer of assets and liabilities of Central Government to the Authority.—

(1) Save as otherwise provided in sub-s. (2), as from such date as the Central Government may appoint by notification in the Official Gazette in relation to any airport,—

(a) all properties and other assets vested in the Central Government for the purposes of the airport and administered by the Director-General of Civil Aviation immediately before such day shall vest in the Authority;

(b) all debts, obligations and liabilities incurred, all contracts entered into and all matters and things engaged to be done by, with, or for the Central Government immediately before such day for or in connection with purposes of the airport shall be deemed to have been incurred, entered into and engaged to be done by, with, or for the Authority;

(c) all non-recurring expenditure incurred by the Central Government for or in connection with the purposes of the airport up to such day and declared to be capital expenditure by the Central Government shall, subject to such terms and conditions as may be determined by the Central Government, be treated as the capital provided by the Central Government to the Authority;

(d) all sums of money due to the Central Government in relation to the airport immediately before such day shall be deemed to be due to the Authority;

(e) all suits and other legal proceedings instituted or which could have been instituted by or against the Central Government immediately before such day for any matter in relation to the airport may be continued or instituted by or against the Authority;

(f) every employee holding any office under the Central Government immediately before such day solely or mainly for or in connection with such affairs of the airport as are relevant to the functions of the Authority under this Act shall be treated as on deputation with the Authority but shall hold his office in the Authority by the same tenure and upon the same terms and conditions of service as respects remuneration, leave, provident fund, retirement or other terminal benefits as he would have held such office, if the Authority had not been constituted and shall continue to do so until the Central Government, either on its own motion or at the request of the Authority, recalls such employee to its service or until the Authority, with the concurrence of the Central Government, duly absorbs such employee in its regular service, whichever is earlier:

Provided that during the period of deputation of any such employee with the Authority, the Authority shall pay to the Central Government, in respect of every such employee, such contribution towards his leave salary, pension and gratuity as the Central Government may, by order, determine:

Provided further that any such employee, who has, in respect of the proposal of the Authority to absorb him in its regular service, intimated within such time as may be specified in this behalf by the Authority his intention of not becoming a regular employee of the Authority, shall not be absorbed by the Authority in its regular service.

(2) As from the date determined by the Central Government under the proviso to sub-section (2) of Section 16,—

(a) the equipment and appliances relating to air navigation services and the buildings used exclusively for such services immediately before such day shall vest in the Authority;

(b) all debts, obligations and liabilities incurred, all contracts entered into and all matters and things engaged to be done by, with, or for the Central Government immediately before such day for or in connection with air navigation services shall be deemed to have been incurred, entered into and engaged to be done by, with, or for the Authority;

(c) all sums of money due to the Central Government for or in connection with air navigation services immediately before such day shall be deemed to be due to the Authority;

(d) all suits and other legal proceedings instituted or which could have been instituted by or against the Central Government immediately before such day for any matter in connection with air navigation services may be continued or instituted by or against the Authority;

(e) every employee holding any office under the Central Government immediately before such day solely or mainly for or in connection with air navigation services shall be treated as on deputation with the Authority but shall hold his office in the Authority by the same tenure and upon the same terms and conditions of service as respects remuneration, leave, provident fund, retirement or other terminal benefits as he would have held such office if the Authority had not been constituted and shall continue to do so until the Central Government, either on its own motion or at the request of the Authority, recalls such employee to its service or until the Authority, with the concurrence of the Central Government, duly absorbs such employee in its regular service, whichever is earlier;

Provided that during the period of deputation of any such employee with the Authority, the Authority shall pay to the Central Government, in respect of every such employee, such contribution towards his leave salary, pension and gratuity as the Central Government may, order, determine;

Provided further that any such employee, who has, in respect of the proposal of the Authority to absorb him in its regular service, intimated within such time as may be specified in this behalf by the Authority his intention of not becoming a regular employee of the Authority, shall not be absorbed by the Authority in its regular service.

(3) If any dispute or doubt arises as to which of the properties, rights or liabilities of the Central Government have been transferred to the Authority or as to which of the employees serving under the Central Government are to be treated as on deputation with the Authority, under this section, such dispute or doubt shall be decided by the Central Government in consultation with the Authority and the decision of the Central Government thereon shall be final.

(4) Notwithstanding anything contained in the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947 or in any other law for the time being in force, the absorption of any employee by the Authority in its regular service under this section shall not entitle such employee to any compensation under that Act or other law and no such claim shall be entertained by any court, tribunal or other authority.

(5) In this section and in Section 16, the expression "air navigation services", in relation to any airport, means air traffic services (including aeronautical and flight information services), aeronautical communication and navigational aids and meteorological services at such airport.

13. Compulsory acquisition of land for the Authority.— Any land required by the Authority for discharging its functions under this Act shall be deemed to be needed for a public purpose and such land may be acquired for the Authority under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894 or of any other corresponding law for the time being in force.

14. Contracts by the Authority.— Subject to the provisions of Section 15, the Authority shall be competent to enter into and perform any contract necessary for the discharge of its functions under this Act.

15. Mode of executing contracts on behalf of the Authority.— (1) Every contract shall, on behalf of the Authority, be made by the Chairman or such other member or such officer of the Authority as may be generally or specially empowered in this behalf by the Authority and such contracts or class of contracts as may be specified in the regulations shall be sealed with the common seal of the Authority:

Provided that no contract exceeding such value or amount as the Central Government may, from time to time, by order, fix in this behalf shall be made unless it has been previously approved by the Authority:

Provided further that no contract for the acquisition or sale of immovable property or for the lease of any such property for a term exceeding thirty years and no other contract exceeding such value or amount as the Central Government may, from time to time, by order, fix in this behalf shall be made unless it has been previously approved by the Central Government.

(2) Subject to the provisions of subsection (1), the form and manner in which any contract shall be made under this Act shall be such as may be prescribed by regulations.

(3) No contract which is not in accordance with the provisions of this Act and the regulations shall be binding on the Authority.

CHAPTER IV FUNCTIONS OF THE AUTHORITY

16. Functions of the Authority.— (1) Subject to the rules, if any, made by the Central Government in this behalf, it shall be the function of the Authority to manage the airports efficiently.

(2) It shall be the duty of the Authority to provide at the airports such services and facilities as are necessary or desirable for the efficient operation of air transport services thereat:

Provided that the function of providing air navigation services at the airports shall continue to be discharged by the Central Government until such date as that Government may, by order, determine.

(3) Without prejudice to the generality of the provisions contained in sub-Ss. (1) and (2), the Authority may—

(a) plan, develop, construct and maintain runways, taxiways, aprons and terminal and ancillary buildings at the airports;

(b) construct residential buildings and create townships for its employees;

(c) establish and maintain hotels, restaurants and rest-rooms at or near the airports;

(d) establish warehouses at the airports for the storage or processing of goods;

(e) arrange for postal, money exchange, insurance and telephone facilities for the use of passengers and other persons at the airports;

(f) make appropriate arrangements for watch and ward at the airports;

(g) regulate and control the plying of vehicles, and the entry and exit of passengers and visitors, in the airports with due regard to the protocol functions of the Government of India;

(h) develop and provide consultancy services in India and abroad in relation to planning and development of airports or any facilities thereat;

(i) establish and manage heliports and airstrips;

(j) provide such transport facilities as are, in the opinion of the Authority, necessary to the passengers travelling by air;

(k) form one or more companies under the Companies Act, 1956 or under any other law relating to companies to further the efficient discharge of the functions imposed on it by this Act; and

(l) take all such steps as may be necessary or convenient for, or may be incidental to, the exercise of any power or the discharge of any function conferred or imposed on it by this Act.

(4) In the discharge of its functions under this section, the Authority shall have due regard to the development of air transport service and to the efficiency, economy and safety of such service.

(5) Nothing contained in this section shall be construed as—

(a) imposing an obligation on the Authority to discharge any function or duty under this section with respect to any airport in relation to which a notification has not been issued under sub-sec. (1) of Section 12;

(b) authorising the disregard by the Authority of any law for the time being in force; or

(c) authorising any person to institute any proceeding in respect of a duty or liability to which the Authority or its officers or other employees would not otherwise be subject.

CHAPTER V

FINANCE, ACCOUNTS AND AUDIT

17. Power of the Authority to charge fees, rent, etc.—The Authority may—

(i) with the previous approval of the Central Government, charge fees or rent—

(a) for the landing, housing or parking of aircrafts or for any other service or facility offered in connection with aircraft operations, at any airport, heliport or airstrip.

Explanation.—In this sub-clause "aircraft" does not include an aircraft belonging to the Indian Defence Services and "aircraft operations" do not include operations of any aircraft belonging to the said Services;

(b) for the amenities given to the passengers and visitors at any airport, heliport or airstrip;

(c) for the use and enjoyment by persons of facilities and other services provided by the Authority at any airport, heliport or airstrip;

(ii) with due regard to the instructions that the Central Government may give to the Authority, from time to time, charge fees or rent from persons who are given by the Authority any facility for carrying on any trade or business at any airport.

18. Additional capital and grants to the Authority by the Central Government.—The Central Government may, after due appropriation made by Parliament by law in this behalf,—

(a) provide any capital over and above the capital provided under clause (c) of sub-section (1) of Section 12, that may be required by the Authority for the discharge of its functions under this Act or for any purpose connected therewith on such terms and conditions as that Government may determine;

(b) pay to the Authority, on such terms and conditions as the Central Government may determine, by way of loans or grants such sums of money as that Government may consider necessary for the efficient discharge by the Authority of its functions under this Act.

19. Fund of the Authority.—(1) The Authority shall have its own fund and all receipts of the Authority shall be credited thereto and all payments of the Authority shall be made therefrom.

(2) The Authority shall have power, subject to the provisions of this Act, to spend such sums as it thinks fit to cover all administrative expenses of the Authority and on objects or for purposes authorised by this Act and such sums shall be treated as expenditure out of the fund of the Authority.

(3) All moneys standing at the credit of the Authority which cannot immediately be applied as provided in sub-section (2) shall be deposited in the State Bank of India or in such scheduled bank or banks and subject to such conditions as may from time to time be specified by the Central Government.

Explanation.—In this sub-section "scheduled bank" has the same meaning as in clause (e) of Section 2 of the Reserve Bank of India Act, 1934.

20. Allocation of surplus funds.—(1) The Authority may, from time to time, set apart such amounts as it thinks fit as a reserve fund or funds for the purpose of expanding existing facilities or services or creating new facilities or services at any airport or for the purpose of providing against any temporary decrease of revenue or increase of expenditure from transient causes or for purposes of replacement or for meeting expenditure arising from loss or damage from fire, cyclone, air-crash or other accident or for meeting any liability arising out of any act or omission in the discharge of its functions under this Act:

Provided that without prejudice to the right of the Authority to establish specific reserves for one or more specific purposes, the Authority shall also have the power to establish a general reserve:

Provided further that the sums set apart annually in respect of each or any of the specific and general reserves and the aggregate at any time of such sums shall not exceed such limits as may, from time to time, be fixed in that behalf by the Central Government.

(2) After making provision for such reserve fund or funds and for bad and doubtful debts, depreciation in assets and all other matters which are usually provided for by companies registered and incorporated under the Companies Act, 1956, the Authority shall pay the balance of its annual net profits to the Central Government.

21. Submission of programme of activities and financial estimates.—(1) The Authority shall before the commencement of each financial year, prepare a statement of the programme of its activities during the forthcoming financial year as well as a financial estimate in respect thereof.

(2) The statement prepared under sub-section (1) shall, not less than three months before the commencement of each financial year, be submitted for approval to the Central Government.

(3) The statement and the financial estimates of the Authority may, with the approval of the Central Government, be revised by the Authority.

22. Investment of funds.—The Authority may invest its funds (including any reserve fund) in the securities of the Central Government or in such other manner as may be prescribed.

23. Borrowing powers of the Authority.—(1) The Authority may, with the consent of the Central Government or in accordance with the terms of any general or special authority given to it by the Central Government, borrow money from any source by the issue of bonds, debentures or such other instruments as it may deem fit for discharging all or any of its functions under this Act.

(2) The Central Government may guarantee in such manner as it thinks fit the repayment of the principal and the payment of interest thereon with respect to the loans borrowed by the Authority under sub-section (1).

(3) Subject to such limits as the Central Government may, from time to time, lay down, the Authority may borrow temporarily by way of overdraft or otherwise such amounts as it may require for discharging its functions under this Act.

24. Accounts and audit.—(1) The Authority shall maintain proper accounts and other relevant records and prepare an annual statement of accounts including the profit and loss account and the balance-sheet in such form as may be prescribed by the Central Government in consultation with the Comptroller and Auditor-General of India.

(2) The accounts of the Authority shall be audited annually by the Comptroller and Auditor-General of India and any expenditure incurred by him in connection with such audit shall be payable by the Authority to the Comptroller and Auditor-General of India.

(3) The Comptroller and Auditor-General of India and any person appointed by him in connection with the audit of the accounts of the Authority shall have the same rights and privileges and authority in connection with such audit as the Comptroller and Auditor-General has in connection with the audit of Government accounts and, in particular, shall have the right to demand the production of books, accounts, connected vouchers, documents and papers and inspect any of the offices of the Authority.

(4) The accounts of the Authority as certified by the Comptroller and Auditor-General of India or any other person appointed by him in this behalf together with the audit report thereon shall be forwarded annually to the Central Government and that Government shall cause the same to be laid before both Houses of Parliament.

CHAPTER VI

MISCELLANEOUS

25. Submission of annual reports to Parliament.—(1) The Authority shall, as soon as may be after the end of each financial year, prepare and submit to the Central Government in such form as may be prescribed a report giving an account of its activities during that financial year and the report shall also give an account of the activities which are likely to be undertaken by the Authority during the next financial year.

(2) The Central Government shall cause such report to be laid before both Houses of Parliament as soon as may be after it is submitted.

26. Delegation.—The Authority may, by general or special order in writing, delegate to the Chairman or any other member or to any officer of the Authority, subject to such conditions and limitations, if any, as may be specified in the order, such of its powers and functions under this Act (except the powers under Section 37) as it may deem necessary.

27. Authentication of orders and other instruments of the Authority.—All orders and decisions of the Authority shall be authenticated by the signature of the Chairman or any other member authorised by the Authority in this behalf and all other instruments executed by the Authority shall be authenticated by the signature of an officer of the Authority authorised by the Authority in this behalf.

28. Officers and employees of the Authority to be public servants.—All officers and employees of the Authority shall, when acting or purporting to act in pursuance of the provisions of this Act or of any rule or regulation made thereunder, be deemed to be public servants within the meaning of Section 21 of the Indian Penal Code.

29. Protection of action taken under the Act.—No suit, prosecution or other legal proceeding shall lie against the Authority or any member or any officer or other employee of the Authority for anything which is in good faith done or intended to be done in pursuance of this Act or of any rule or regulation made thereunder or for any damage sustained by any aircraft or vehicle in consequence of any defect in any of the airports or other things belonging to or under the control of the Authority.

30. Custody and disposal of lost property.—Subject to such regulations as the Authority may make in this behalf, the Authority shall provide for securing the safe custody and restoration of any property which, while not in proper custody, is found on any premises belonging to the Authority or under its overall control or in any aircraft on any such premises.

31. Provisions relating to income-tax.—For the purposes of the Income-tax Act, 1961 or any other enactment for the time being in force relating to income-tax or any other tax on income, profits or gains, the Authority shall be deemed to be a company within the meaning of the Income-tax Act, 1961 and shall be liable to tax accordingly on its income, profits and gains.

32. Power of the Authority to undertake certain works.—The Authority may undertake to carry out on behalf of any person any works or services or any class of works or services on such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon between the Authority and the person concerned.

33. Power of Central Government to temporarily divest the Authority from the management of any airport.—(1) If at any time the Central Government is of opinion that in the public interest it is necessary or expedient so to do, it may, by order, direct the Authority to entrust the management of any airport with effect from such date and to such person as may be specified in the order and the Authority shall be bound to comply with such direction:

Provided that before an order is made under this sub-section the Authority shall be given a reasonable opportunity of being heard in the matter.

(2) Where the management of any airport is entrusted to any person specified under sub-section (1) (hereafter in this section referred to as the authorised person), the Authority shall cease to exercise and discharge all its powers and functions under this Act in relation to such airport and such powers and functions shall be exercised and discharged by the authorised person in accordance with the instructions, if any, which the Central Government may give to the authorised person from time to time:

Provided that no such power or function as may be specified by the Central Government by a general or special order shall be exercised or discharged by the authorised person except with the previous sanction of the Central Government.

(3) An order made under sub-section (1) shall, unless rescinded, be in operation for a period of six months from the date on which the management of the airport is entrusted to the authorised person:

Provided that the Central Government may extend such period for a further period or periods not exceeding eighteen months.

(4) During the operation of an order made under sub-section (1), it shall be competent for the Central Government to issue, from time to time, such directions to the Authority as are necessary to enable the authorised person to exercise the powers and discharge the functions of the Authority under this Act in relation to the airport, the management of which has been entrusted to him and in particular to transfer any sum of money from the fund of the Authority to the authorised person for the management of the airport and every such direction shall be complied with by the Authority.

(5) On the cesser of operation of any order made under sub-section (1) in relation to any airport, the authorised person shall cease to exercise and perform the powers and functions of the Authority under this Act in relation to such airport and the Authority shall continue to exercise and perform such powers and functions in accordance with the provisions of this Act.

(6) On the cesser of operation of any order made under sub-section (1) in relation to any airport, the authorised person shall hand over to the Authority any property (including any sum of money or other asset) remaining with him in connection with the management of such airport.

(7) Anything done or any action taken lawfully by the authorised person in relation to any airport during the period of operation of an order made under sub-section (1) shall be deemed to have been done or taken by the Authority and shall be binding on the Authority.

34. Power of Central Government to supersede the Authority.— (1) If, at any time, the Central Government is of opinion—

(a) that on account of a grave emergency, the Authority is unable to discharge the functions and duties imposed on it by or under the provisions of this Act; or

(b) that the Authority has persistently made default in complying with any direction issued by the Central Government under this Act or in the discharge of the functions and duties imposed on it by or under the provisions of this Act and as a result of which default the financial position of the Authority or the administration of any airport has deteriorated; or

(c) that circumstances exist which render it necessary in the public interest so to do, the Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, supersede the Authority for such period, not exceeding six months, as may be specified in the notification:

Provided that before issuing a notification under this sub-section for the reasons mentioned in clause (b), the Central Government shall give a reasonable opportunity to the Authority to show cause why it should not be superseded and shall consider the explanations and objections, if any, of the Authority.

(2) Upon the publication of a notification under sub-section (1) superseding the Authority,—

(a) all the members shall, as from the date of supersession, vacate their offices as such;

(b) all the powers, functions and duties which may, by or under the provisions of this Act, be exercised or discharged by or on behalf of the Authority, shall, until the Authority is re-constituted under sub-section (3), be exercised and discharged by such person or persons as the Central Government may direct;

(c) all property owned or controlled by the Authority shall, until the Authority is re-constituted under sub-section (3), vest in the Central Government.

(3) On the expiration of the period of supersession specified in the notification issued under sub-section (1), the Central Government may—

(a) extend the period of supersession for such further term, not exceeding six months, as it may consider necessary; or

(b) re-constitute the Authority by fresh appointment and in such case any persons who vacated their offices under clause (a) of sub-section (2) shall not be deemed disqualified for appointment:

Provided that the Central Government may, at any time before the expiration of the period of supersession, whether as originally specified under sub-section (1) or as extended under this sub-section, take action under clause (b) of this sub-section.

(4) The Central Government shall cause a notification issued under sub-section (1) and a full report of any action taken under this section and the circumstances leading to such action to be laid before both Houses of Parliament at the earliest opportunity.

35. Power of Central Government to issue directions.— (1) Without prejudice to the foregoing provisions of this Act, the Authority shall, in the discharge of its functions and duties under this Act, be bound by such directions on questions of policy as the Central Government may give in writing to it from time to time:

Provided that the Authority shall, as far as practicable, be given opportunity to express its views before any direction is given under this sub-section.

(2) The decision of the Central Government whether a question is one of policy or not shall be final.

36. Power of Central Government to make rules.— (1) The Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, make rules for carrying out the purposes of this Act.

(2) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, such rules may provide for—

(a) the conditions of service of the Chairman and other members under Section 5 including the salaries payable to the Chairman and to the members who are required to render whole-time service and the fees and allowances payable to the members who are required to render part-time service;

(b) the period of notice required to terminate the appointment of any member, who is required to render part-time service and who is not a servant of the Government, under Section 5, and the period of notice that may be given to the Central Government by a member before he resigns his office, under that section;

(c) the conditions and limitations subject to which the Authority may appoint officers and other employees under sub-section (1) of Section 10;

(d) the terms and conditions subject to which the non-recurring expenditure incurred by the Central Government for or in connection with the purposes of any airport shall be treated as the capital provided by the Central Government to the Authority under clause (c) of sub-section (1) of Section 12;

(e) the manner in which the Authority may invest its funds under Section 22;

(f) the form in which the Authority shall prepare the annual statement of accounts including the profit and loss account and the balance-sheet under Section 24; and

(g) any other matter which is to be or may be prescribed.

(3) Every rule made under this section shall be laid as soon as may be after it is made before each House of Parliament while it is in session for a total period of thirty days which may be comprised in one session or in two successive sessions and if before the expiry of the session in which it is so laid or the session immediately following both Houses agree in making any modification in the rule, or both Houses agree that the rule should not be made, the rule shall, thereafter have effect only in such modified form or be of no effect, as the case may be; so, however, that any such modification or annulment shall be without prejudice to the validity of anything previously done under that rule.

37. Power of the Authority to make regulations.—(1) The Authority may make regulations not inconsistent with this Act and the rules made thereunder to provide for all matters for which provision is necessary or expedient for the purpose of giving effect to the provisions of this Act.

(2) Without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, such regulations may provide for—

(a) the times and places of the meetings of the Authority and the procedure to be followed for the transaction of business at such meetings under sub-section (1) of Section 8;

(b) the conditions of service and the remuneration of officers and other employees appointed by the Authority;

(c) the contracts or class of contracts which are to be sealed with the common seal of the Authority and the form and manner in which a contract may be made by the Authority;

(d) the storage or processing of goods in any warehouse established by the Authority under clause (d) of sub-section (3) of Section 16 and the charging of fees for such storage or processing;

(e) the custody and restoration of lost property and the terms and conditions under which lost property may be restored to the person entitled thereto, under Section 30;

(f) the disposal of any lost property in cases where such property is not restored under Section 30;

(g) securing the safety of aircraft, vehicles, and persons using the airport and preventing danger to the public arising from the use and operation of aircraft in the airport;

(h) preventing obstruction within the airport for its normal functioning;

(i) prohibiting the parking or waiting of any vehicle or carriage within the airport except at places specified by the Authority;

(j) prohibiting or restricting access to any part of the airport;

(k) preserving order within the airport and preventing damage to property therein;

(l) regulating or restricting advertising within the airport;

(m) requiring any person, if so directed by an officer appointed by the Authority in this behalf, to leave the airport or any particular part of the airport; and

(n) generally for the efficient and proper management of the airport.

38. Supplemental provisions respecting regulations.—(1) Any regulation which may be made by the Authority under this Act may be made by the Central Government by notification in the Official Gazette within one year of the constitution of the Authority and any regulation so made may be altered or rescinded by the Authority by means of a regulation made by it under this Act.

(2) No regulation made by the Authority under this Act shall have effect until it has been approved by the Central Government and published in the Official Gazette.

39. Penalty for breach of certain regulations.—Any regulation made under any of the clauses (g) to (m) (inclusive) of sub-section (2) of Section 37 may provide that a contravention thereof shall be punishable with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees and in the case of a continuing contravention with an additional fine which may extend to twenty rupees for every day during which such contravention continues after conviction for the first such contravention.

40. Power to remove difficulties.—(1) If any difficulty arises in giving effect to the provisions of this Act, the Central Government may, by general or special order published in the Official Gazette, make such provisions not inconsistent with the provisions of this Act as appear to it to be necessary or expedient for the removal of the difficulty:

Provided that no such order shall be made after the expiration of one year from the commencement of this Act.

(2) Every order made under sub-section (1) shall be laid, as soon as may be after it is made, before each House of Parliament while it is in session for a total period of thirty days which may be comprised in one session or in two successive sessions and if before the expiry of the session in which it is so laid, or the session immediately following both Houses agree in making any modification in the order or both Houses agree that the order should not be made, the order shall thereafter have effect only in such modified form or be of no effect, as the case may be; so, however, that any such modification or annulment shall be without prejudice to the validity of anything previously done under that order.

41. Amendment of Act 22 of 1934.—In sub-section (2) of Section 5 of the Aircraft Act, 1934, for clause (b), the following clause shall be substituted, namely:—

“(b) the licensing, inspection and regulation of aerodromes, the conditions under which aerodromes may be maintained, the prohibition or regulation of the use of unlicensed aerodromes and the fees which may be charged at those aerodromes to which the International Airports Authority Act, 1971 does not apply or is not made applicable;

Provided that until the date determined by the Central Government under the proviso to sub-section (2) of Section 16 of the International Airports Authority Act, 1971 any rule made under this clause may provide for the charging of fees for providing air traffic services (including aeronautical and flight information services), aeronautical communication and navigational aids and meteorological services at any aerodrome to which the said Act applies or is made applicable;”.

"11A. Powers of Labour Courts, Tribunals and National Tribunals to give appropriate relief in case of discharge or dismissal of workmen.— Where an industrial dispute relating to the discharge or dismissal of a workman has been referred to a Labour Court, Tribunal or National Tribunal for adjudication and, in the course of the adjudication proceedings, the Labour Court, Tribunal or National Tribunal, as the case may be, is satisfied that the order of discharge or dismissal was not justified, it may, by its award, set aside the order of discharge or dismissal and direct reinstatement of the workman on such terms and conditions, if any, as it thinks fit, or give such other relief to the workman including the award of any lesser punishment in lieu of discharge or dismissal as the circumstances of the case may require:

Provided that in any proceeding under this section the Labour Court, Tribunal or National Tribunal, as the case may be, shall rely only on the materials on record and shall not take any fresh evidence in relation to the matter."

4. Amendment of Section 25FFF.—In Section 25FFF of the principal Act,—

(a) in sub-section (1), for the existing Explanation, the following Explanation shall be substituted, namely:—

"Explanation.— An undertaking which is closed down by reason merely of—

(i) financial difficulties (including financial losses); or

(ii) accumulation of undisposed of stocks; or

(iii) the expiry of the period of the lease or licence granted to it; or

(iv) in a case where the undertaking is engaged in mining operations, exhaustion of the minerals in the area in which such operations are carried on; shall not be deemed to be closed down on account of unavoidable circumstances beyond the control of the employer within the meaning of the proviso to this sub-section;'

(b) after sub-section (1), the following sub-sections shall be inserted, namely:—

"(1A) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1), where an undertaking engaged in mining operations is closed down by reason merely of exhaustion of the minerals in the area in which such operations are carried on, no workman referred to in that sub-section shall be entitled to any notice or compensation in accordance with the provisions of Section 25F, if—

(a) the employer provides the workman with alternative employment with effect from the date of closure at the same remuneration as he was entitled to receive, and on the same terms and conditions of service as were applicable to him, immediately before the closure;

(b) the service of the workman has not been interrupted by such alternative employment; and

(c) the employer is, under the terms of such alternative employment or otherwise, legally liable to pay to the workman, in the event of his retrenchment, compensation on the basis that his service has been continuous and has not been interrupted by such alternative employment.

(1B) For the purposes of sub-sections (1) and (1A), the expressions "minerals" and "mining operations" shall have the meanings respectively assigned to them in clauses (a) and (d) of Section 3 of the Mines and Minerals (Regulation and Development) Act, 1957*.

5. Amendment of Section 33.— In the Explanation to sub-section (3) of Section 33 of the principal Act, for the words "an officer", the words "a member of the executive or other office bearer" shall be substituted.

6. Amendment of Section 36.— In sub-section (1) of Section 36 of the principal Act, for the words "an officer", wherever they occur, the words "any member of the executive or other office bearer" shall be substituted.

7. Amendment of First Schedule.— In the First Schedule to the principal Act, item 18 shall be omitted.

THE RAILWAY PASSENGER FARES ACT, 1971

(9th December, 1971)

An Act to provide for the levy of a tax on railway fares.

BE it enacted by Parliament in the Twenty-second Year of the Republic of India as follows:—

1. Short title and commencement.— (1) This Act may be called THE RAILWAY PASSENGERS FARES ACT, 1971.

(2) It shall be deemed to have come into force on the 22nd day of October, 1971.

2. Definitions.— In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires,—

(a) "fare" means the total amount of all charges of whatever nature payable by a passenger or group of passengers in respect of his or their carriage, and includes—

(i) haulage charges for supply of carriages of particular types;

(ii) empty haulage charges on tourist cars and saloons;

(iii) charges for pilot engines; and
(iv) charges for dining cars attached to special trains, but does not include—

(i) the tax payable under this Act;

(ii) terminal taxes, pilgrim taxes and tolls on bridges;

(iii) reservation charges (including reservation charges for sleeping accommodation); and

(iv) hire, detention and stabling charges in respect of passenger traffic booked in reserved carriages and special trains;

(b) "passenger" means any person travelling on a railway in any description or class of train or carriage on payment of his fare, whether at full rates or at concessional rates;

(c) "railway" and "railway administration" have the meanings respectively assigned to them in the Indian Railways Act, 1890.

3. Levy of tax on passenger fares.—

(1) Subject to the provisions of this Act, there shall be levied and collected on fares paid by passengers carried by any railway in India, whether by itself or in conjunction with any other mode of transport or in conjunction with any railways in any adjacent country, a tax at the rate specified in that behalf in the Schedule:

Provided that no tax shall be levied under this sub-section on fares paid by passengers for journeys commencing on or before the 14th day of November, 1971.

(2) The tax levied under sub-section (1) shall be collected by the railway administration as an addition to the fares and the railway administration shall have all the powers and remedies for the recovery thereof as though the same were a rate or fare which the railway administration is empowered to levy under the Indian Railways Act, 1890.

4. Rules for computing tax on passenger fares.— In computing the tax payable under this Act, the following rules shall apply, namely:—

Rule 1.— The tax leviable shall, wherever necessary, be rounded off to the nearest multiple of five paise, two and one-half paise and over being counted as five paise and less than two and one-half paise being disregarded.

Rule 2.— In the case of return tickets, the tax shall be computed separately with reference to each of the journeys covered by the return ticket as if the said journeys had been performed on separate tickets.

Rule 3.— In the case of tickets issued from or to out-agencies or city booking offices, the tax shall be leviable only in respect of the fare attributable to the actual journey by railway.

5. Power to exempt.— Where the Central Government is of opinion that it is necessary or expedient in the public interest so to do, it may, by notification in the Official Gazette, exempt, either in whole or in part, and either absolutely or subject to such conditions as it may specify in the notification, any passengers or class of passengers from the tax leviable under this Act.

* Received the assent of the President on 9-12-1971. Act published in Gaz. of India: 10-12-1971, Pt. II-S. 1, Ext. P. 593.

6. Distribution of proceeds of tax.—

During each financial year ending on or after the 31st day of March, 1972, there shall be paid to each State (not being a Union territory) such sum of money as bears to the net proceeds of the tax collected under this Act during that year in all the territories of India, the same proportion as the aggregate of the fares collected in that State during that year bears to the aggregate of the fares collected in all the territories of India during that year.

7. Power to make rules.— (1) The Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, make rules to carry out the purposes of this Act.

(2) In particular, and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, rules so made may—

(a) regulate the collection by or on behalf of the railway administration of the tax levied under this Act and provide for the authority to which, and the time and manner in which, the tax shall be paid;

(b) prescribe the form of the returns to be submitted by any authority collecting the tax and the particulars to be contained therein and the manner in which it is to be verified;

(c) Provide for the time at which, and the manner in which, any payments to States under this Act are to be made, for the making of adjustments between one financial year and another and for any other incidental or ancillary matters relating to such payments.

(3) In making rules under this section, the Central Government may direct that a breach of any of those rules shall be punishable with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees for each such breach.

(4) Every rule made under this section shall be laid, as soon as may be after it is made, before each House of Parliament while it is in session for a total period of thirty days which may be comprised in one session or in two successive sessions and if, before the expiry of the session in which it is so laid or the session immediately following both Houses agree in making any modification in the rule or both Houses agree that the rule should not be made, the rule shall thereafter have effect only in such modified form or be of no effect, as the case may be; so, however, that any such modification or annulment shall be without prejudice to the validity of anything previously done under that rule.

8. Repeal and saving.— (1) The Railway Passenger Fares Ordinance, 1971, is hereby repealed.

THE TAX ON POSTAL ARTICLES ACT, 1971

(No. 47 of 1971)*

(9th December, 1971)

An Act to provide for the levy of a tax on certain postal articles.

BE it enacted by Parliament in the Twenty-second Year of the Republic of India as follows:—

1. Short title, extent and commencement.— (1) This Act may be called THE TAX ON POSTAL ARTICLES ACT, 1971.

(2) It extends to the whole of India except the State of Jammu and Kashmir.

(3) It shall be deemed to have come into force on the 15th day of November, 1971.

2. Definitions.— In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires,—

(a) "money order" means a money order referred to in Chapter IX of the Indian Post Office Act, 1898;

(b) "phonogram" means a telegraphic message sent to or received from a telegraph office by a subscriber over the telephone;

(c) "postal article" means any letter, letter-card, book, pattern or sample packet, parcel or any other article or thing (not being a postcard or a newspaper transmissible by post as a registered newspaper) which is transmissible by post and for the transmission of which postage is chargeable under the Indian Post Office Act, 1898 and includes a money order, a phonogram and a telegram;

(d) "rules" means rules made under this Act;

(e) "telegram" means written matter intended to be transmitted by telegraph;

(f) "telegraph" shall have the same meaning as in clause (1) of Section 3 of the Indian Telegraph Act, 1885;

(g) "telegraph office" includes a Government telegraph office and a licensed telegraph office, but does not include a military field telegraph office;

(h) words and expressions used but not defined in this Act and defined in the Indian Post Office Act, 1898, shall have the same meanings as in that Act.

3. Levy of tax.— (1) Subject to the provisions of this Act, there shall be levied and collected on all postal articles transmitted by post or through any telegraph office in the territories to which this Act extends a tax at the rate of five paise for each such article.

(2) The tax levied under sub-sec. (1) on any postal article shall be collected, as an addition to the postage, fees or charges payable in respect of such article, by the authority empowered under the Indian Post Office Act, 1898 or, as the case may be, the Indian Telegraph Act, 1885 to collect such postage, fees or charges:

Provided that where the postage, fees or charges payable in respect of a postal article is collected by means of postage stamps, the tax levied under sub-sec. (1) on such postal article shall be paid and such payment shall be indicated on such article by means of postage stamps issued under the Indian Post Office Act, 1898, and bearing the inscription "refugee relief" whether with or without any other design, picture or inscription.

(3) Save as otherwise expressly provided in sub-section (2) or in the rules—

(a) the provisions of the Indian Post Office Act, 1898 and the rules made thereunder shall so far as may be apply in relation to the tax levied under sub-sec. (1) on any postal article (not being a phonogram or telegram) as they apply in relation to the postage, fees or charges payable under that Act and those rules in respect of such postal article;

(b) the provisions of the Indian Telegraph Act, 1885 and the rules made thereunder shall, so far as may be, apply in relation to the tax levied under sub-sec. (1) on any postal article being a phonogram or telegram as they apply in relation to the postage, fees or charges payable under that Act and those rules in respect of such article.

4. Power to reduce or remit.— Where the Central Government is of opinion that it is necessary or expedient in the public interest so to do, it may, by notification in the Official Gazette, reduce or remit, whether prospectively or retrospectively, and subject to such conditions, if any, as it may specify in the notification, the tax payable under this Act in respect of any such postal articles or class of postal articles as may be, specified in the notification.

5. Power to make rules.— (1) The Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, make rules to carry out the purposes of this Act.

(2) Every rule made under this section shall be laid, as soon as may be after it is made, before each House of Parliament while it is in session for a total period of thirty days which may be comprised in one session or in two successive sessions and if, before the expiry of the session in which it is so laid or the session immediately following, both Houses agree in making any modification in the rule or both Houses agree that the rule should not be made, the rule shall thereafter have effect only in such modified form or be of no effect, as the case may be; so, however, that any such modification or annulment shall be without prejudice to the validity of anything previously done under that rule.

6. Repeal and saving.— (1) The Tax on Postal Articles Ordinance, 1971, is hereby repealed.

*Received the assent of the President on 9-12-1971. Act published in Gaz. of India; 10-12-1971, Pt. II-S. 1, Ext. P. 597.

(2) Notwithstanding such repeal, anything done or any action taken under the said Ordinance shall be deemed to have been done or taken under the corresponding provision of this Act.

INLAND AIR TRAVEL TAX ACT, 1971 (Act No. 48 of 1971)*

(9th December, 1971)

An Act to provide for the levy of a tax on inland air travel.

BE it enacted by Parliament in the Twenty-second year of the Republic of India as follows:—

1. Short title, extent and commencement.— (1) This Act may be called THE INLAND AIR TRAVEL TAX ACT, 1971.

(2) It extends to the whole of India except the State of Jammu and Kashmir.

(3) It shall be deemed to have come into force on the 30th day of October, 1971.

2. Definitions.— In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires,—

(a) "aircraft" means any aircraft as defined in Section 2 of the Aircraft Act, 1934 (22 of 1934), which is used (whether exclusively or not) for the carriage of passengers;

(b) "carrier" means a corporation, company or other person undertaking the carriage of a passenger on an inland journey;

(c) "fare" means the total amount of all charges of whatever nature (including charges, if any, for provision of food or accommodation) payable to the carrier by or on behalf of a passenger in respect of his inland journey;

(d) "inland journey", in relation to a passenger, means—

(i) his journey from any place within the territories to which this Act extends to any other place within the said territories; or

(ii) if his journey is from or to any place in the territories to which this Act extends to or from a place in the State of Jammu and Kashmir, so much of his journey as falls within the said territories, but does not include, in either case, a journey which is performed on a through international ticket and which precedes, or forms part of a series of journeys proceeding, or follows, or forms part of a series of journeys following, a journey to or from a place outside India on the same ticket.

Explanation:— For the purpose of determining the portion of journey referred to in sub-clause (ii) falling within the terri-ties to which this Act extends, the journey referred to therein shall be deemed to terminate at, or, as the case may be, commence from, Amritsar irrespective of whether the aircraft by which the passenger is travelling overflies or halts at Amritsar;

(e) "passenger" means any person travelling on board an aircraft on an inland journey on payment of his fare whether at full rates or concessional rates.

3. Inland air travel tax:— (1) Subject to the provisions of this Act, there shall be levied and paid to the Central Government in respect of every inland journey by a passenger, a tax (hereinafter referred to as the inland air travel tax) at the rate of five per cent, of the fare for such journey:

Provided that no such tax shall be levied under this sub-section in respect of any journey commencing on or before the 14th day of November, 1971.

(2) In accordance with rules made under this Act, the inland air travel tax shall be collected by the carrier undertaking the carriage of the passengers, or, where the tickets or other relevant documents for such carriage are not issued by such carrier by the carrier to whom such tickets or other documents relate, as an addition to the fares payable by such passengers and shall be paid to the Central Government.

4. Rules for computing inland air travel tax.— In computing the tax leviable under this Act, the following rules shall apply, namely:—

Rule 1.— The tax leviable shall, wherever necessary, be rounded off to the nearest rupee, fifty paise and over being counted as one rupee and less than fifty paise being disregarded.

Rule 2.— In the case of a journey by a passenger from a place in the territories to which this Act extends to a place in the State of Jammu and Kashmir, the tax leviable shall be computed as if such journey were up to Amritsar.

Rule 3.— In the case of a journey by a passenger from a place in the State of Jammu and Kashmir to a place in the territories to which this Act extends, the tax leviable shall be computed as if such journey were from Amritsar.

5. Power to exempt.— Where the Central Government is of opinion that it is necessary or expedient in the public interest so to do, it may, by notification in the Official Gazette, exempt, either in whole or in part, and either absolutely or subject to such conditions as it may specify in the notification, any passengers or class of passengers from the tax leviable under this Act.

6. Penalty.— Any person contravening the provisions of this Act or of any rule made under this Act shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding one thousand rupees for every such contravention and such penalty may be adjudged by such authority and in such manner as may be specified in the rules made under this Act.

7. Protection of action taken in good faith.— No suit or other legal proceeding shall lie against the Central Government and no suit, prosecution or other legal proceeding shall lie against any officer or authority of that Government for anything in good faith done or intended to be done in pursuance of this Act or the rules made thereunder.

8. Power to make rules.—(1) The Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, make rules for carrying out the purposes of this Act.

(2) In particular, and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, such rules may provide for—

(a) the returns and other particulars and information which carriers shall furnish, the authorities to whom, and the intervals at which, such returns, particulars and information shall be furnished;

(b) the assessment and collection of the inland air travel tax including the charges for collection payable to carriers, the authorities by whom adjudication of penalty and other functions under this Act are to be discharged, the issue of notices requiring payment of such tax, the manner in which such tax shall be payable, the recovery of any such tax due to the Central Government in the same manner as an arrear of land revenue or in any other manner, and the procedure for claiming refund of any amount paid under this Act;

(c) the powers of authorities referred to in clause (b) to enter, inspect and search any aircraft or any premises of a carrier and to examine any tickets, books of account, returns or other documents for the purpose of carrying out any duty imposed on any such authority by or under this Act;

Provided that the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (5 of 1898), relating to searches shall, so far they are applicable, apply in relation to searches under rules made under this clause;

(d) the procedure for adjudication of penalty;

(e) appeal and revision in the case of any order made under this Act, the manner in which and the time within which appeal may be preferred or application for revision may be made and the fees payable herefor;

(f) any other matter which is to be, or may be, provided for by rules under this Act.

(3) Every rule made under this Act shall be laid as soon as may be after it is made, before each House of Parliament while it is in session for a total period of thirty days which may be comprised in one session or in two successive sessions, and if, before the expiry of the session in which it is so laid or the session immediately following, both Houses agree in making any modification in the rule or both Houses agree that the rule should not be made, the rule shall thereafter have effect only in such modified form or be of no effect, as the case may be; so, however, that any such modification or annulment shall be without prejudice to the validity of anything previously done under that rule.

9. Repeal and saving.—(1) The Inland Air Travel Tax Ordinance, 1971 (Ord. 19 of 1971), is hereby repealed.

(2) Notwithstanding such repeal, anything done or any action taken under the said Ordinance shall be deemed to have been done or taken under the corresponding provisions of this Act.

THE AIR CORPORATIONS (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1971

(Act No. 49 of 1971)*

An Act further to amend the Air Corporations Act, 1953.

BE it enacted by Parliament in the Twenty-second Year of the Republic of India as follows:—

1. Short title and commencement.—

(1) This Act may be called THE AIR CORPORATIONS (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1971.

(2) The provisions of this Act, except clause (iii) of Section 4 which shall be deemed to have come into force on the 19th day of May, 1971, shall come into force on such date as the Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, appoint.

1. Short title, extent and duration.—

(1) This Act may be called THE EMERGENCY RISKS (GOODS) INSURANCE ACT, 1971.

(2) It extends to the whole of India.

(3) It shall remain in force during the period of operation of the Proclamation of Emergency issued by the President under clause (1) of Article 352 of the Constitution of India on the 3rd day of December, 1971, and for such further period as the Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, declare to be the period of emergency for the purposes of this Act, but its expiry shall not affect anything done or omitted to be done before such expiry and Section 6 of the General Clauses Act, 1897, shall, apply upon the expiry of this Act as if it had been repealed by a Central Act.

2. Definitions.— In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires,—

(a) "emergency risks" means such risks arising from,—

(i) action taken by an enemy or action taken in combating an enemy or in repelling an imagined attack by an enemy;

(ii) any explosion or fire which involves explosives or munitions or other dangerous things required for the purposes of defence against any action of an enemy and which happens or is caused by, through, or in connection with, the manufacture, storage or transportation of any such explosives, munitions or other dangerous things;

(iii) measures taken under proper authority to avoid the spreading of or otherwise to mitigate, the consequences of damage occurring (whether accidentally or not) as a direct result of any such action as is described in sub-clause (i) or of any such explosion or fire as is described in sub-clause (ii);

(iv) precautionary or preparatory measures taken under proper authority with a view to preventing or hindering the carrying out of any attack by an enemy, being measures involving a substantial degree of risk to property;

(v) precautionary or preparatory measures involving the doing of work on land and taken under proper authority in any way in anticipation of enemy action, being measures involving a substantial degree of risk to property;

(vi) precautionary or preparatory measures taken under proper authority with a view to denying facilities to an enemy being measures involving a substantial degree of damage to or diminution of value of property;

(b) "enemy" means—

(i) any person or country committing external aggression against India;

(ii) any person belonging to a country committing such aggression;

(iii) such other country as may be declared by the Central Government to be assisting the country committing such aggression;

(iv) any person belonging to such other country;

(c) "Fund" means the Emergency Risks (Goods) Insurance Fund constituted under Section 10;

(d) "goods" means any materials, commodities or articles and includes materials, commodities or articles used in or for the construction or repair of any ship up to the time at which the ship after completion of construction, or repair, is launched;

(e) "insurable value" means the value of goods as ascertained for the purposes of insurance under this Act;

(f) "policy" or "policy of insurance" means a contract of insurance issued under the Scheme and includes a policy of insurance and renewal endorsement;

(g) "quarter" means a period of three months commencing on the first day of January, April, July or October;

(h) "Scheme" means the Emergency Risks (Goods) Insurance Scheme made under this Act;

(i) "seller of goods" includes a seller of goods acting as an agent;

(j) "supplier of goods" means a person carrying on a business in the course of which he supplies goods for the purpose of, or in pursuance of, contracts made by him for work, labour, or materials.

CHAPTER II INSURABLE GOODS AND INSURANCE SCHEME

3. Goods insurable under this Act.—

(1) Subject to the provisions of this section, the following goods shall, in relation to any person carrying on business in India as a seller or supplier of goods of any description, be deemed to be goods insurable under this Act, that is to say, all goods situated in India or, consigned from one place in India to another place in India and in transit, being either—

(i) goods of that description, or

(ii) goods used as material from which goods of that description are produced or as ingredients or component parts of goods of that description:

Provided that no goods shall be deemed to be insurable under this Act—

(a) in relation to any person, being the owner of the goods, who carries on business as a seller of goods, unless they are owned by him with a view to being sold, or to being used as material for the production of goods to be sold, or as ingredients or component parts of goods to be sold;

(b) in relation to any person, being the owner of the goods, who carries on business as a supplier of goods, unless they are owned by him with a view to being supplied for the purpose of, or in pursuance of, a contract made by him for work, labour or materials or to being used as material for the production of goods to be supplied as aforesaid, or as ingredients or component parts of goods to be supplied;

(c) in respect of a period in relation to any person carrying on business in India as a seller or supplier of goods of any description, if such goods are, before payment has been made of the premium under this Act for that period, in the custody, control or possession of the enemy.

(2) The Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, direct that goods of any description specified in the notification shall, notwithstanding anything contained in this section, be deemed not to be goods insurable under this Act and a copy of such notification shall be laid after it is made, on the Table of each House of Parliament when such House is in session for a period of thirty days or for the duration of the session in which it is laid, whichever period is less.

(3) Nothing in sub-section (1) shall apply in relation to goods which are owned by Government or in respect of which the Government is the seller or supplier.

4. Ownership.—(1) Save in so far as is otherwise expressly provided in this Act, any goods shall, subject to the provisions of this section, be deemed, for the purposes of this Act, to be owned,—

(a) if the property in the goods is for the time being vested in a person in relation to whom they are insurable under this Act, by that person;

(b) if the property in the goods is not so vested, by any person in relation to whom the goods are insurable under this Act and who is for the time being entitled, either unconditionally or conditionally, to have the property in the goods vested in him:

Provided that where—

(i) any goods would, under the foregoing provisions of this section, be deemed to be owned by a person in whom the property therein is vested otherwise than in the course of a business carried on by him in India, or who is entitled to have the property therein vested in him otherwise than in the course of such business, and

(ii) any person carrying on business in India is for the time being entitled to sell the goods as agent, the goods shall be deemed to be owned by the last mentioned person.

(2) Where in the course of any business a ship is being, or has been, constructed under contract, and the ship or any part thereof or any goods appropriated for the construction thereof—

(a) would, apart from the provisions of this sub-section, have been deemed for the purposes of this Act to be owned at any time by the person from time to time carrying on the business, or

(b) have at any time been accepted, in pursuance of a contract made with him, by the person from time to time carrying on the business, then, notwithstanding that they would not, apart from the said provisions, be deemed for the said purposes to be owned by the person from time to time carrying on the business, the ship and any part thereof and any goods so appropriated as aforesaid shall, subject to the provisions of sub-section (3), be deemed, in a case to which clause (a) of this sub-section applies, to continue to be owned by the person from time to time carrying on the business until the acceptance of the ship, in pursuance of the contract in question, by the person for whom it is being or has been, constructed, and in a case to which clause (b) of this sub-section applies, to be owned by the person from time to time carrying on the business at all times between the acceptance referred to in the said clause (b) and the acceptance of the ship as aforesaid by the person for whom it is being, or has been, constructed.

(3) The provisions of sub-section (2) shall apply in relation to the construction under contract in the course of a business of part of a ship, not being part of a ship which is being, or has been, constructed by the person from time to time carrying on the business, as they apply in relation to the construction of a ship—

(a) with the substitution for references to a ship or references to part of a ship;

(b) where the contract for the part of the ship is with the person for whom the ship is being constructed, with the substitution for references to the acceptance of the ship under the contract in question of references to the acceptance of the ship under the contract for the construction thereof;

(c) where the contract for the part of the ship is with any other person, with the substitution for references to the acceptance of the ship under the contract in question of references to the acceptance of the part of the ship under the contract for the construction of the part by the person for whom it is being, or has been, constructed.

(4) Where the person from time to time carrying on a business receives any money, under a policy issued in pursuance of the Scheme, in respect of the loss of or damage to a ship, part of a ship or goods which are deemed to be owned by him by virtue of sub-section (2) or sub-section (3), the money shall be held by him on trust for the person who, apart from the provisions of those sub-sections, would be deemed for the purposes of this Act to be the owner of the ship, part or goods, subject, however, to any lien or charge which would otherwise be enforceable against the ship, part or goods and subject also to the right to retain out of the money the amount of any expenses reasonably incurred by the first mentioned person in making good any part of the loss or damage which he is liable to make good.

5. Emergency Risks (Goods) Insurance Scheme.—(1) The Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, put into operation a scheme to be called the Emergency Risks (Goods) Insurance Scheme,† whereby the Central Government undertakes in relation to persons carrying on business in India as sellers or suppliers of goods, the liability of insurance of such persons against emergency risks, to the extent provided by or under this Act, in respect of goods insurable under this Act which are from time to time owned by such persons in the course of such business.

(2) The Scheme may also extend—

(a) to the undertaking by the Central Government, in relation to any person carrying on business in India as seller or supplier of goods, of the liability of insuring such a person against emergency risks in respect of goods insurable under this Act which are not owned by him but in which he has an interest arising in the course of that business;

(b) without prejudice to the provisions of clause (a) of this sub-section, to the undertaking by the Central Government, in relation to a person carrying on any business in India, of the liability of insuring such a person against emergency risks in respect of—

(i) any goods situated in India which are in his possession, otherwise than under a hire-purchase agreement, for the purposes of that business;

(ii) any goods situated in India which are subject to a mortgage, pledge or charge in his favour held by him in the course of that business, being in either case goods which are not owned by him but which are insurable under this Act in relation to the person by whom they are owned;

(c) to the undertaking by the Central Government, in relation to a person carrying on any business in India, of the liability of insuring such person against emergency risks in respect of any goods situated in India, which having been sold in India, for export from India, are in his possession for the purpose of such export and are goods which were prior to such sale insurable under this Act in relation to the person by whom they were then owned;

(d) to the undertaking by the Central Government, in relation to any person carrying on any business in India as a seller or supplier of goods, of the liability of insuring such a person against emergency risks in respect of goods imported into India through any port of India, while such goods are situated at such port or are in transit to a place in India.

(3) The Scheme shall be such as to secure—

(a) that the liability of the Central Government as insurer shall not extend to more than eighty per cent. of the insurable value of the property insurable;

(b) that any liability of the Central Government as insurer under the Scheme is determined by a policy of insurance issued, in the form and in respect of a period not exceeding the period specified in the Scheme, by a person acting on behalf of the Central Government;

†For Emergency Risks (Goods) Insurance Scheme—See Gaz. of India, 10-12-1971, Pt. II-S. 3 (ii), Ext. P. 3317.

Provided that the form of policy may be such as to limit the extent and nature of the indemnity provided by the Central Government and to impose conditions subject to which the indemnity is provided:

Provided further that the form of policy shall be such as to provide that no liability shall arise thereunder unless the premium in relation to the period in which any loss or damage occurs has been paid before the occurrence of such loss or damage;

(c) that any premium under a policy so issued is payable at a rate not exceeding three per cent. per annum of the sum insured as may be specified in the Scheme; and

(d) that the amount of any one premium payable under a policy so issued is not less than such sum as may be specified in the Scheme.

(4) Different forms of policies may be specified under sub-section (3) in relation to different descriptions of goods.

(5) The Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, add to, amend or vary any Scheme made under this Act.

(6) Every Scheme shall be laid, as soon as may be after it is made, before each House of Parliament while it is in session for a total period of thirty days which may be comprised in one session or in two successive sessions, and if before the expiry of the session in which it is so laid or the session immediately following, both Houses agree in making any modification in the Scheme or both Houses agree that the Scheme should not be made, the Scheme shall thereafter have effect only in such modified form or be of no effect as the case may be; so, however, that any such modification or annulment shall be without prejudice to the validity of anything previously done under the Scheme.

6. Employment of agents by Central Government.—The Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, employ or authorise the employment of any person to act as its agent for the issue of policies, and making recommendations for the settlement of claims, under the Scheme, and may pay to the person so employed such remuneration as it may think fit.

CHAPTER III

COMPULSORY INSURANCE

7. Power to make insurance compulsory.—(1) While the Scheme is in operation, no person shall, after such date as may be specified in this behalf by the Central Government by notification in the Official Gazette, carry on any business in India as a seller or supplier of goods, unless, in respect of any goods insurable under this Act which are for the time being owned by him in the course of that business, there is in force a policy of insurance against emergency risks issued in accordance with the Scheme, whereby he is insured in respect of such goods for a sum not less than the value thereof for the time being;

Provided that the Scheme shall not restrict the carrying on of business as aforesaid by any person, if and so long as the value of all goods insurable under this Act which are for the time being owned by him within one and the same Presidency town or district in the course of that business does not exceed fifty thousand rupees.

(2) Whoever contravenes the provisions of this section shall be punishable with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees and with further fine which may extend to five hundred rupees for every day after the first on which the contravention continues.

8. Omission to insure or to insure up to the full amount.—(1) Where any person has failed to insure as, or to the full amount, required by this Act, and has thereby evaded the payment by way of premium of any money which he would have had to pay but for such failure, an officer authorised in this behalf by the Central Government may determine the amount of payment of which has been so evaded, and thereupon such person shall be liable, without prejudice to any other action that may be taken against him under this Act, to pay to the Central Government, as a penalty, an amount equal to the amount so determined, and if no such payment is made on demand by the authorised officer, the amount of the penalty shall be recoverable from such person as an arrear of land revenue.

(2) A person against whom a determination is made under sub-section (1) may, within the period specified in the Scheme, appeal against such determination to the Central Government whose decision thereon shall be final.

9. Restrictions on carrying on of certain insurance business.—(1) After the date on which the Scheme is put into operation, no person shall, except as a person authorised by the Central Government as its agent to issue policies in pursuance of the Scheme, carry on any business of insuring persons carrying on business in India as sellers or suppliers of goods against emergency risks in respect of goods insurable under this Act which are from time to time owned by such persons in the course of such business as is last mentioned.

(2) Whoever contravenes the provisions of sub-section (1) shall be punishable with fine which may extend to five thousand rupees and with further fine which may extend to one thousand rupees for every day after the first on which the contravention continues.

10. Emergency Risks (Goods) Insurance Fund.—(1) The Central Government may, after due appropriation made by Parliament by law in this behalf, transfer in each financial year to a fund to be called the Emergency Risks (Goods) Insurance Fund such sums, as may be considered necessary, not exceeding the sums received by the Central Government by way of insurance premiums under the Scheme, or by way of payment made on composition of offences under Section 15 or by way of expenses or compensation awarded by a Court, under Section 545 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, out of any fine imposed in any prosecution under this Act.

(2) There shall be paid from out of the Fund all sums required for the discharge by the Central Government of any of its liabilities under the Scheme or for the payment by the Central Government of the remuneration and expenses of agents employed for the purposes of the Scheme.

(3) If at any time when a payment is to be made out of the Fund, the sum standing to the credit of the Fund is less than the sum required for the making of that payment, an amount equal to the deficiency shall, after due appropriation made by Parliament by law, be paid into the Fund as an advance out of the Consolidated Fund of India.

(4) If at any time the amount standing to the credit of the Fund exceeds the sum which, in the opinion of the Central Government, is likely to be required for the making of payments out of the Fund, the excess shall be disposed of in such manner as the Central Government may think fit.

(5) The Central Government shall prepare, in such form and manner as may be specified in the Scheme and shall publish either annually or at such shorter intervals as may be specified therein, an account of all sums received into and paid out of the Fund.

CHAPTER IV

MISCELLANEOUS

11. Power of Central Government to obtain information.—(1) Any person authorised in this behalf by the Central Government may, for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not the requirements of this Act have been complied with,—

(a) require any person carrying on in India the business of fire insurance or of a seller or supplier of goods to submit to him such accounts, books or other documents or to furnish to him such information as he may reasonably think necessary, or

(b) at any reasonable time, enter any premises occupied by any person carrying on in India the business of a seller or supplier of goods for the purposes of that business and may inspect the premises and require any person found therein who is for the time being in charge thereof, or in control of the business carried on therein, to produce to him and allow him to examine such accounts, books or other documents as may relate to the business carried on in the premises and to furnish to him such other information as he may reasonably require for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not and, if so, to what extent, the person carrying on the business is insured under the Scheme in respect of goods owned by him in the course of that business, and of ascertaining the value of any goods insurable under the Scheme which are, or were at any relevant time, owned by him in the course of that business and the maximum amount which would be recoverable in respect of any such goods under a policy issued under this Act.

(2) Whoever wilfully obstructs any person in the exercise of his powers under this section or fails without any reasonable excuse to comply with a demand made thereunder, shall, in respect of each occasion on which any such obstruction or failure takes place, be punishable with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees.

(3) Whoever, in purporting to comply with his obligations under this section, knowingly or recklessly makes a statement which is false in a material particular, shall be punishable with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees.

(4) Where in any proceedings in respect of a contravention of Section 7 in relation to any business, it is proved, in relation to that business,—

(a) that a demand for the production of a policy of insurance issued in accordance with the Scheme insuring the person carrying on the business was duly made under this section and was not complied with, and

(b) that the person making the demand was not satisfied that there was such a policy in existence, it shall be presumed, except in so far as the contrary is proved, that the said Section 7 was being contravened in relation to that business at the time when the demand was made and continued to be contravened in relation to that business at all times thereafter.

12. Punishment for giving false information.— If any person, for the purpose of obtaining for himself or any other person any payment in respect of any damage due to the action of the enemy or under a policy issued in pursuance of the Scheme,—

(a) furnishes any information which he knows to be false in a material particular, or recklessly furnishes any information which is false in a material particular, or

(b) with intent to deceive, produces, furnishes, sends or otherwise makes use of any book, account or other document which is false in a material particular, or

(c) with intent to deceive, withholds any material information, he shall be punishable with fine which may extend to five thousand rupees, or with imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months, or with both.

13. Refund of premiums in certain cases.— (1) Where goods of any description have been insured by a seller or supplier of goods for any period, and before that period has elapsed the goods of that description have ceased, by virtue of a notification under sub-section (2) of Section 3 to be goods insurable under this Act, the person who has insured such goods shall be entitled to a proportionate refund of the premium.

(2) Where a policy of insurance has been taken out in relation to goods which are not insurable under this Act and premium has been paid in relation to such policy, or where any premium has been paid in respect of goods which have ceased to be insurable under this Act, or where, in relation to goods insurable under this Act, premium has been made in excess of the amount due under the policy, the person making such payment or excess payment, as the case may be, shall be entitled to a refund of the whole of the amount so paid or paid in excess, as the case may be.

(3) If it is established to the satisfaction of the Central Government that a policy of insurance under the Scheme has been taken out separately by two or more persons in respect of the same goods, the policy taken out by any one such person may, on an application made by him and after such inquiry as the Central Government may think fit, be cancelled and thereupon the premium paid on such policy shall be refunded to the person by whom it was paid unless such person has recovered the premium from any other person, in which case, the refund shall be made to that other person:

Provided that no refund shall be made under this section unless the application for the refund is made before the expiry of six months from the date when the premium was paid.

(4) No suit shall be maintainable in any civil Court against the Central Government or any person acting as the agent of the Central Government under Section 6 for the refund of money paid or purporting to have been paid as premium in respect of any policy issued or purporting to have been issued under this Act.

14. Limitation on prosecution.— No prosecution for any offence punishable under this Act shall be instituted against any person except by, or with the consent of, the Central Government or an authority authorised in this behalf by the Central Government.

15. Composition of offences.— Any offence punishable under sub-section (2) of Section 7, or sub-section (2) of Section 9 may, either before or after the institution of the prosecution, be compounded by the Central Government or by any authority authorised in this behalf by the Central Government, on payment for credit to the Fund of such sum as the Central Government or such authority, as the case may be, thinks fit.

16. Bar of legal proceedings.— No suit, prosecution or other legal proceeding shall lie against the Central Government or against any person for anything which is in good faith done or intended to be done under this Act.

17. Removal of doubts.— If any doubt arises as to whether a person is insurable in respect of any goods under this Act, the Central Government may, by order, make such provision or give such direction, not inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, as appear to it to be necessary or expedient for the removal of such doubt.

THE EMERGENCY RISKS (UNDERTAKINGS) INSURANCE ACT, 1971

(10th December, 1971).

An Act to make certain provisions for the insurance of certain property in India against damage arising from emergency risks and for matters connected therewith or incidental thereto.

BE it enacted by Parliament in the Twenty-second Year of the Republic of India as follows:—

CHAPTER I

PRELIMINARY

1. Short title, extent and duration.—

(1) This Act may be called the Emergency Risks (Undertakings) Insurance Act, 1971.

(2) It extends to the whole of India.

(3) It shall remain in force during the period of operation of the Proclamation of Emergency issued by the President under clause (1) of Article 352 of the Constitution on the 3rd day of December, 1971, and for such further period as the Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, declare to be the period of emergency for the purposes of this Act, but its expiry shall not affect anything done or omitted to be done before such expiry and Section 6 of the General Clauses Act, 1897, shall apply upon the expiry of this Act as if it had been repealed by a Central Act.

2. Definitions.— In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires,—

(a) "building" includes foundations, plinths, floors, staircases, tanks, engine and boiler beds, chimneys, flues and boundary walls;

CHAPTER II

EMERGENCY RISKS (UNDERTAKINGS) INSURANCE SCHEME

3. Emergency Risks (Undertakings) Insurance Scheme.— (1) The Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette put into operation a scheme to be called the Emergency Risks (Undertakings) Insurance Scheme,† whereby the Central Government undertakes the liability of insuring property insurable under this Act against emergency risks, to the extent provided by or under this Act.

(2) The Scheme may extend to the undertaking by the Central Government in relation to any person in India of the liability of insuring such person against emergency risks in respect of any property insurable under this Act which is not owned by him but in which he has an interest, up to the extent of such interest.

(3) The Scheme shall be such as to secure—

(a) that the liability of the Central Government as insurer shall not extend to more than eighty per cent. of the insurable value of the property insurable;

(b) that any liability of the Central Government as insurer under the Scheme is determined by a policy of insurance issued, in the form and in respect of a period not exceeding the period specified in the Scheme, by a person acting on behalf of the Central Government;

Provided that the form of policy may be such as to limit the extent and nature of the indemnity provided by the Central Government and to impose conditions subject to which the indemnity is provided;

Provided further that the form of policy shall be such as to provide that no liability shall arise thereunder unless the premium in relation to the period in which any loss or damage occurs has been paid before the occurrence of such loss or damage;

(c) that any premium under a policy so issued is payable at a rate not exceeding three per cent. per annum of the sum insured as may be specified in the Scheme;

Provided that nothing in this clause shall prevent the securing by the Scheme of different rates of premium in relation to properties of different descriptions insurable under this Act owned by any undertaking to which this Act applies;

(d) that the amount of any one premium payable under a policy so issued is not less than such sum as may be specified in the Scheme.

(4) The Scheme may provide —

(a) for undertaking in relation to works in course of construction which, when completed, will become properties insurable under the Act and such plant and machinery

†For Emergency Risks (Undertakings) Scheme, see Gaz. of India, 10-12-1971, Pt. II-S. 3 (ii), Ext. P. 3335.

appertaining to such works as may be specified in the Scheme, the same liabilities as are undertaken by the Scheme in relation to the undertakings;

(b) that the payments due under a policy of insurance issued under the Scheme, may at the option of the Central Government, take either of the following forms, namely:—

(i) payment, within the limits of the liability assumed by the Central Government and in such manner and by such instalments as the Central Government may think fit, of the cost necessary to restore the property as far as practicable to the condition in which it existed before the occurrence of the damage, or

(ii) compensation, within the aforesaid limits, for the loss in value, ascertained on the basis of values and prices ruling at the time at which the policy of insurance was taken out, or at which the loss occurred, whichever is less, suffered by the property as a result of the damage, after due allowance has been made for depreciation during the period of insurance cover;

(c) that payments due under a policy of insurance under the Scheme may be postponed to any time before the expiry of one year from the date on which this Act ceases to be in force, or, subject to payment of interest at the rate of two per cent. per annum from the expiry of the said year, to any later date;

(d) for making it an express or implied condition of any policy of insurance issued under the Scheme—

(i) that the owner or occupier of a factory or owner of other undertakings mentioned in sub-section (1), as the case may be, shall comply with all regulations or instructions made or issued under the authority of Government for safeguarding the property against damage from emergency risks, or

(ii) that, where the Central Government exercises its option to pay the cost necessary to restore the property to its original condition the owner of the undertaking shall if so required by the Central Government, reconstruct the property or remove the property to and reconstruct it in another locality.

(5) Different forms of policies may be specified in the Scheme under sub-section (3) in relation to different classes of undertakings.

(6) The Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, add to, amend or vary any Scheme made under this Act.

(7) Every Scheme shall be laid, as soon as may be after it is made, before each House of Parliament while it is in session for a total period of thirty days which may be comprised in one session or in two successive sessions, and if before the expiry of the session in which it is so laid or the session immediately following, both Houses agree in making any modification in the Scheme or both Houses agree that the Scheme should not be made, the Scheme shall thereafter have effect only in such modified form or be of no effect, as the case may be; so, however, that any such modification or annulment shall be without prejudice to the validity of anything previously done under the Scheme.

4. Employment of agents by the Central Government.—The Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, employ or authorise the employment of any person to act as its agent for the issue of policies and making recommendations for the settlement of claims under the Scheme, and may pay to the person so employed such remuneration as it may think fit.

5. Duty of owners of undertakings to insure against emergency risks.—(1) While the Scheme is in operation, every owner of an undertaking to which this Act applies, shall,—

(a) by such date as may be specified in this behalf by the Central Government by notification in the Official Gazette, or

(b) in respect of property becoming property insurable under this Act after the date specified under clause (a), or in a case to which sub-section (2) refers, before the commencement of the quarter next following that in which,—

(i) the property becomes insurable under this Act, or

(ii) the reconstruction of the property is completed, take out a policy of insurance against emergency risks issued in accordance with the Scheme whereby he is insured in respect of all property insurable under this Act which appertains to the undertaking for a sum which is not less than the insurable value of such property;

Provided that where the undertaking is a factory and the owner thereof is not himself the occupier of the factory, the occupier of the factory shall, unless the owner has already taken out a policy of insurance as required by this sub-section, himself take out the policy, and in such a case the occupier shall be deemed to act as the agent of the owner and shall be entitled to receive from the owner all sums paid as premiums on the policy;

Provided further that in the case of a trading Corporation or body of Port Trustees or Commissioners or any other person whose inland vessels become insurable under this Act, the policy of insurance taken out shall be for a sum not less than the insurable value of such vessels, fuel and stores; and this obligation shall in the case of a trading Corporation incorporated outside India rest upon the manager of the principal place of business in India of the Corporation.

(2) The obligation imposed by sub-section (1) includes, when the owner of the undertaking is required by the Central Government to reconstruct the property which has suffered damage, an obligation to take out an additional policy of insurance as required by the sub-section in respect of the reconstructed property.

(3) When an undertaking in respect of which a policy of insurance against emergency risks has been taken out as required by this section is transferred from one owner to another or there is a change of occupier of an undertaking which is a factory, the policy may be transferred to the new owner or occupier and such new owner or occupier shall succeed to all rights and liabilities under and in relation to the policy as if the policy had been in the first instance taken out by him.

(4) Whoever contravenes the provisions of sub-section (1) or the proviso thereto, or, having taken out a policy of insurance as required by that sub-section, fails to pay any premium which is due thereon, shall be punishable with fine which may extend to two thousand rupees and with a further fine which may extend to one thousand rupees for every day after the first on which the contravention or failure continues, and such punishment shall be without prejudice to any other penalty or liability incurred in consequence of such contravention or failure.

(5) Where any offence under sub-section (4) is tried by a Presidency Magistrate or a magistrate of the first class, then, notwithstanding anything contained in the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, the magistrate trying the offence may pass any sentence authorised by that sub-section.

6. Restrictions on carrying on certain insurance business.— (1) After the date on which the Scheme is put into operation, no person shall, except as a person authorised by the Central Government as its agent to issue policies in pursuance of the Scheme, carry on the business of insuring undertakings to which this Act applies in India against emergency risks in respect of property insurable under this Act.

(2) Whoever contravenes the provisions of sub-section (1) shall be punishable with fine which may extend to five thousand rupees and with a further fine which may extend to one thousand rupees for every day after the first on which the contravention continues.

7. Emergency Risks (Undertakings) Insurance Fund.— (1) The Central Government may, after due appropriation made by Parliament by law in this behalf, transfer in each financial year, to a fund to be called the Emergency Risks (Undertakings) Insurance Fund such sums, as may be considered necessary, not exceeding the sums received by the Central Government by way of insurance premiums under the Scheme, or by way of payments made on composition of offences under Section 13 or by way of expenses or compensation awarded by a Court, under Section 545 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, out of any fine imposed in any prosecution under this Act.

(2) There shall be paid from out of the Fund all sums required for the discharge by the Central Government of any of its liabilities under the Scheme, or for payments by the Central Government under S. 10, or for the payment by the Central Government of the remuneration and expenses of agents employed for the purposes of the Scheme.

(3) If at any time when a payment is to be made out of the Fund the sum standing to the credit of the Fund is less than the sum required for the making of that payment, an amount equal to the deficiency shall, after due appropriation made by Parliament by law, be paid into the Fund as an advance out of the Consolidated Fund of India.

(4) If at any time the amount standing to the credit of the Fund exceeds the sum which, in the opinion of the Central Government, is likely to be required for the making of payments out of the Fund, the excess shall be disposed of in such manner as the Central Government may think fit.

(5) The Central Government shall prepare in such form and manner as may be specified in the Scheme and shall publish either annually or at such shorter intervals as may be specified therein, an account of all sums received into and paid out of the Fund.

CHAPTER III

MISCELLANEOUS

8. Power of Central Government to obtain information.— (1) Any person authorised in this behalf by the Central Government may, for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not the owner or occupier of any property required to be insured under this Act has taken out a policy of insurance as required by this Act in respect of such property, or for the purpose of investigating the insurable value of any property insured, or required to be insured, or proposed for insurance under this Act, or for the purpose of estimating the damage suffered by any property insured under this Act,—

(a) require the owner or occupier of the property, or any person carrying on in India the business of fire insurance in respect of the property, to submit to him such accounts, books or other documents or to furnish to him such information as he may reasonably think necessary, or

(b) at any reasonable time, enter any premises comprising or containing the property, inspect such premises or property, and require any person found on such premises, who is for the time being in charge thereof, or in control thereof, or whom he believes to be in possession of information relevant to his investigation, to produce to him and allow him to examine such accounts, books or other documents as he may think necessary, or to furnish to him such other information as he may reasonably think necessary.

(2) Whoever wilfully obstructs any person in the exercise of his powers under this section or fails without reasonable excuse to comply with any demand made thereunder shall, in respect of each occasion on which any such obstruction or failure takes place, be punishable with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees.

(3) Whoever, in purporting to comply with his obligations under this section, knowingly or recklessly makes a statement false in a material particular shall be punishable with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees.

(4) Where in any proceedings in respect of a contravention of Section 5 in relation to any undertaking, it is proved, in relation to that undertaking—

(a) that a demand for the production of a policy of insurance issued in accordance with the Scheme, insuring the owner or occupier of the insurable property was duly made under this section and was not complied with, and

(b) that the person making the demand was not satisfied that there was such a policy in existence, it shall be presumed, except in so far as the contrary is proved, that the said Section 5 was being contravened in relation to that undertaking at the time when the demand was made and continued to be contravened in relation to that undertaking at all times thereafter.

9. Punishment for giving false information.— If any person, for the purpose of obtaining for himself or any other person any payment in respect of any damage due to any action of the enemy, or under a policy issued in pursuance of the Scheme,—

(a) furnishes any information which he knows to be false in a material particular, or recklessly furnishes any information which is false in a material particular, or

(b) with intent to deceive, procures, furnishes, sends or otherwise makes use of any book, account or other document which is false in a material particular, or

(c) with intent to deceive, withholds any material information, he shall be punishable with fine which may extend to five thousand rupees, or with imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months, or with both.

10. Payment towards cost of removal and reconstruction of insurable property.— Where the Central Government requires the owner of an undertaking to remove the insurable property and to reconstruct it in another locality, the Central Government shall make to such owner, out of the Fund, such payments, in addition to any sum payable under policy of insurance, as it considers sufficient to defray the cost of the removal and, if necessary, the replacement of any part of the property in respect of which no compensation is payable.

11. Determination of premiums unpaid.— (1) Where any person has failed to insure as, or to the full amount, required by this Act, and has thereby evaded the payment by way of premium of any money which he would have had to pay but for such failure, an officer authorised in this behalf by the Central Government may determine the amount, payment of which has been so evaded, and thereupon such person shall be liable, without prejudice to any other action that may be taken against him under this Act, to pay to the Central Government, as penalty, an amount equal to the amount so determined, and if no such payment is made on demand by the authorised officer, the amount of the penalty shall be recoverable from such person as an arrear of land revenue.

(2) A person against whom a determination is made under sub-section (1) may, within the period specified in the Scheme, appeal against such determination to the Central Government whose decision thereon shall be final.

12. Limitation on prosecutions.— No prosecution for any offence punishable under this Act shall be instituted against any person except by, or with the consent of, the Central Government or an authority authorised in this behalf by the Central Government.

13. Composition of offences.— Any offence punishable under sub-section (4) of Section 5 may, either before or after the institution of the prosecution, be compounded by the Central Government, or by any authority authorised in this behalf by the Central Government, on payment for credit to the Fund of such sum as the Central Government or such authority, as the case may be, thinks fit.

14. Bar of legal proceedings.— (1) No suit, prosecution or other legal proceedings shall lie against any person for anything which is in good faith done or intended to be done under this Act.

(2) No suit shall be maintainable in any civil court against the Central Government, or a person acting as its agent under Section 4, for the refund of any money paid or purporting to have been paid as premium on a policy of insurance taken out or purporting to have been taken out under this Act.

15. Power to exempt undertakings.— (1) The Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, exempt any class or description of undertakings from the provisions of this Act requiring properties insurable in relation to such undertakings to be insured or to continue to be insured under this Act; but such exemption shall not prejudice the infliction of any penalty or the accrual of any liability incurred before the date on which the exemption takes effect.

(2) In granting any exemption under this section the Central Government may direct that the exemption shall take effect or be deemed to have taken effect on a specified date after or before the date of the notification.

16. Refund of premiums in certain cases.— (1) Where any property has been insured by any owner or occupier thereof for any period, and before that period has elapsed the property or the property of that description has ceased, by virtue of a notification under sub-section (1) of Section 15, to be insurable under this Act, the person who has insured the property shall be entitled to a proportionate refund of the premium.

(2) Where a policy of insurance has been taken out in relation to a property which is not insurable under this Act and premium has been paid in relation to such policy, or where any premium has been paid in respect of a property which has ceased to be insurable under this Act, or where, in relation to a property insurable under this Act, premium has been paid in excess of the amount due under the policy, the person making such payment, or, excess payment, as the case may be, shall be entitled to a refund of the whole of the amount so paid or paid in excess as the case may be.

(3) If it is established to the satisfaction of the Central Government that a policy of insurance under the Scheme has been taken out separately by two or more persons in respect of the same property, the policy taken out by any one such person may, on an application made by him and after such inquiry as the Central Government may think fit, be cancelled and thereupon the premium paid on such policy shall be refunded to the person by whom it was paid unless such person has recovered the premium from any other person, in which case, the refund shall be made to that other person.

Provided that no refund shall be made under this section unless the application for the refund is made before the expiry of six months from the date when the premium was paid.

17. Removal of doubts.— If any doubt arises as to whether a person is insurable in respect of any property insurable under this Act, the Central Government may, by order, make such directions, not inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, as appear to it to be necessary or expedient for the removal of such doubt.

18. Notification under section 15 to be laid before Parliament.— A copy of every notification made by the Central Government under Section 15 shall be laid after it has been made, on the Table of each House of Parliament when such House is in session for a period of thirty days or for the duration of the session in which it is so laid, whichever period is less.

THE SMALL COINS (OFFENCES) ACT, 1971

(11th December, 1971)

An Act to provide for the prevention of melting or destruction of small coins, hoarding of small coins for the purpose of melting or destruction thereof, and for matters connected therewith or incidental thereto.

WHEREAS an acute shortage of small coins has been felt in the country and it is necessary, in the interests of the general public, to take steps to relieve such shortage;

BE it enacted by Parliament in the Twenty-second Year of the Republic of India as follows:—

1. Short title and duration.— (1) This Act may be called THE SMALL COINS (OFFENCES) ACT, 1971.

(2) It shall remain in force for a period of three years.

2. Definitions.— In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires,—

(a) “mint” means a mint of the Government of India;

(b) “small coin” means any coin of the value of less than one rupee, which is legal tender under the Indian Coinage Act, 1906.

3. Prohibition on melting or destruction of small coins.— (1) No person shall—

(a) melt or destroy any small coin, or
(b) have in his possession, custody or control—

(i) any melted coin, whether in the molten state or in a solid state, or

(ii) any small coin in a destroyed or mutilated state, or

(iii) small coins substantially in excess of his reasonable requirements in such circumstances as to indicate that he is having the possession, custody or control of such small coins for the purpose of melting or destroying such small coins.

Explanation.— For the purpose of determining the reasonable requirements of small coins of a person, due regard shall be had to—

(i) his total daily requirements of small coins,

(ii) the nature of his business, occupation or profession,

(iii) the mode of his acquisition of small coins, and

(iv) the manner in which, and the place at which, such small coins are being possessed, held or controlled by him.

(2) Whoever is found to be in the possession of any metal, which contain alloys in the same proportions in which they have been used in the manufacture of any small coin, shall be presumed, until the contrary is proved, to have contravened the provisions of sub-section (1).

*Received the assent of the President on 11-12-1971. Act published in Gaz. of India, 11-12-1971, Pt. II-S. 1, Ext. P. 681.

(3) Nothing contained in sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) shall apply to the mint.

4. Penalty for contravention of Section 3.—Whoever contravenes any provision of sub-section (1) of Section 3 without any reasonable excuse, the burden of proving of which shall lie on such person, shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term of not less than three months but not more than five years.

5. Offences by companies.—(1) Where an offence against this Act has been committed by a company, every person who, at the time the offence was committed, was in charge of, and was responsible to, the company for the conduct of its business, shall be deemed to be guilty of the offence and shall be liable to be proceeded against and punished accordingly:

Provided that nothing contained in this sub-section shall render any person liable to punishment, if he proves that the offence was committed without his knowledge or that he had exercised all due diligence to prevent the commission of such offence.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1), where any offence under this Act has been committed by a company and it is proved that the offence has been committed with the consent or connivance of, or is attributable to, any neglect on the part of any director, manager, secretary or other officer of the company, such director, manager, secretary or other officer shall be deemed to be guilty of that offence and shall be liable to be proceeded against and punished accordingly.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this section,—

(a) “company” means any body corporate and includes a firm, society or other association of individuals; and

(b) “director”,—

(i) in relation to a firm, means a partner in the firm,

(ii) in relation to a society or other association of individuals, means the person who is entrusted, under the rules of the society or other association, with the management of the affairs of the society or other association, as the case may be.

6. Offences to be cognizable, bailable and not compoundable.—Notwithstanding anything contained in the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, offences against this Act shall be cognizable and bailable but shall not be compoundable.

7. Offences may be tried summarily.—Notwithstanding anything contained in Section 260 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, offences against this Act may be tried summarily by a Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class.

8. Forfeiture.—Any small coin or metal in relation to which any offence against this Act has been committed shall be forfeited to Government.

9. Provisions of Act 20 of 1958 not to apply to offences under this Act.—Nothing in the Probation of Offenders Act, 1958 shall apply to any offence against this Act.

10. Repeal.—The Small Coins (Offences) Ordinance, 1971, is hereby repealed.

THE FORWARD CONTRACTS (REGULATION) AMENDMENT ACT, 1971

(11th December, 1971)

An Act further to amend the Forward Contracts (Regulation) Act, 1952.

BE it enacted by Parliament in the Twenty-second Year of the Republic of India as follows:—

1. Short title and commencement.—

(1) This Act may be called THE FORWARD CONTRACTS (REGULATION) AMENDMENT ACT, 1971.

(2) It shall be deemed to have come into force on the 11th day of October, 1971.

2. Amendment of Section 2.—In Section 2 of the Forward Contracts (Regulation) Act, 1952 (74 of 1952) (hereinafter referred to as the principal Act),—

(a) in clause (c), the words “at a future date” shall be omitted;

(b) to clause (i), the following proviso and Explanation shall be added, namely:—

“Provided that where any such contract is performed either wholly or in part,—

(1) by tendering of the documents of title to the goods covered by the contract by any party thereto (not being a commission agent or a bank) who has acquired ownership of the said documents by purchase, exchange or otherwise, to any other person (including a commission agent but not including a bank); or

(2) by the realisation of any sum of money, being the difference between the contract rate and the settlement rate or clearing rate or the rate of any offsetting contract; or

(3) by any other means whatsoever, and as a result of which the actual tendering of the goods covered by the contract or the payment of the full price therefor is dispensed with, then, such contract shall not be deemed to be a ready delivery contract.

*Received the assent of the President on 11-12-1971. Act published in Gaz. of India; 18-12-1971 Pt. II-S. 1, Ext. P. 639. For Statement of Objects and Reasons, see Gaz. of India; 18-11-1971 Pt. II-S. 2, Ext. P. 671.

Explanation.— For the purposes of this clause,—

(i) “bank” includes any banking company as defined in the Banking Regulation Act, 1949 (110 of 1949), a co-operative bank as defined in the Reserve Bank of India Act, 1934 (2 of 1934), the State Bank of India and any of its subsidiaries and any corresponding new bank constituted under Section 3 of the Banking Companies (Acquisition and Transfer of Undertakings) Act, 1970 (5 of 1970);

(ii) “commission agent” means a person who, in the ordinary course of business, makes contract for the sale or purchase of goods for others for a remuneration (whether known as commission or otherwise) which is determined in the contract itself or determinable from the terms of the contract, in either case, only with reference to the quantity of goods or to the price therefor as stipulated in the contract.

3. Repeal and saving.— (1) The Forward Contracts (Regulation) Amendment Ordinance, 1971 (11 of 1971) is hereby repealed.

(2) Notwithstanding such repeal, anything done or any action taken under the principal Act, as amended by the said Ordinance, shall be deemed to have been done or taken under the principal Act as amended by this Act.

THE COAL BEARING AREAS (ACQUISITION AND DEVELOPMENT) AMENDMENT AND VALIDATION ACT, 1971

(11th December, 1971)

An Act further to amend the Coal Bearing Areas (Acquisition and Development) Act, 1957, and to validate certain acquisitions of land or rights in or over land under the said Act.

BE it enacted by Parliament in the Twenty-second Year of the Republic of India as follows:—

1. Short title.— This Act may be called THE COAL BEARING AREAS (ACQUISITION AND DEVELOPMENT) AMENDMENT AND VALIDATION ACT, 1971.

2. Amendment of Section 8.— In sub-section (2) of Section 8 of the Coal Bearing Areas (Acquisition and Development) Act, 1957 (hereinafter referred to as the principal Act), for the words “submit the case for the decision of the Central Government together with the record of the proceedings held by him and a report containing his recommendations on the objections”, the words, brackets and figures “either make a report in respect of the land which has been notified under sub-section (1) of Section 7 or of rights in or over such land, or make different reports in respect of different parcels of such land or of rights in or over such land, to the Central Government, containing his recommendations on the objections, together with the record of the proceedings held by him, for the decision of that Government” shall be substituted.

3. Amendment of Section 9.— In Section 9 of the principal Act,—

(a) in sub-section (1),—

(i) after the words “made by it to that effect”, the following shall be inserted, namely:—

“and different declarations may be made from time to time in respect of different parcels of any land, or of rights in or over such land, covered by the same notification under sub-section (1) of Section 7, irrespective of whether one report or different reports has or have been made (wherever required) under sub-section (2) of Section 8”;

(ii) for the words “Provided that, where the declaration”, the following shall be substituted, namely:—

“Provided that no declaration in respect of any particular land, or rights in or over such land, covered by a notification under sub-section (1) of Section 7, issued after the commencement of the Coal Bearing Areas (Acquisition and Development) Amendment and Validation Act, 1971, shall be made after the expiry of three years from the date of the said notification:

Provided further that, where a declaration”;

(b) in sub-section (2), for the words “The declaration”, the words “Every declaration” shall be substituted.

4. Amendment of Section 13.— In Section 13 of the principal Act, after sub-section (5), the following sub-section shall be inserted, namely:—

“(5A) In determining the amount of compensation for any land acquired under Section 9, any increase to the value of the other land of the person interested, likely to accrue from the use to which the land acquired will be put shall not be taken into consideration.”

5. Amendment of Section 14.— In Section 14 of the principal Act, after sub-section (7), the following sub-section shall be inserted, namely:—

“(8) The Tribunal, in the proceedings before it, shall have all the powers which a civil court has while trying a suit under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, in respect of the following matters, namely:—

(i) summoning and enforcing the attendance of any person and examining him on oath;

(ii) requiring the discovery and production of any document;

(iii) reception of evidence on affidavits;

*Received the assent of the President on 11-12-1971. Act published in Gaz. of India, 13-12-1971, Pt. II-S. 1, Ext. P. 835. For Statement of Objects and Reasons, see Gaz. of India, 2-8-1971, Pt. II-S. 2, Ext. P. 503.

(iv) requisitioning any public record from any court or office; and

(v) issuing commissions for examination of witnesses."

6. Amendment of Section 17.— In Section 17 of the principal Act, in sub-section (2), for the second proviso, the following provisos shall be substituted, namely:—

"Provided further that every person who claims to be an interested person (whether such person has been admitted to be interested or not) including the person referred to in the preceding proviso shall be entitled to prefer a claim for compensation before the Tribunal:

Provided also that no person who has received the amount otherwise than under protest shall be entitled to prefer any such claim before the Tribunal."

7. Insertion of new Section 18A.— After Section 18 of the principal Act, the following section shall be inserted, namely:—

"18A. Payment to State Governments in lieu of royalty.— Notwithstanding anything contained in this Act, where any land or any rights in or over land belonging to a State Government (other than the rights under a mining lease granted or deemed to have been granted by the State Government to any person) vest in the Central Government under S. 10 or in a Government Company under S. 11, the Central Government or the Company as the case may be, may pay to the State Government such sum of money as would have been payable as royalty by a lessee had such land or rights been under a mining lease granted by the State Government."

8. Validation of certain acquisitions.—

(1) Notwithstanding any judgment, decree or order of any court to the contrary,—

(a) no acquisition of land or of rights in or over land made or purporting to have been made under the principal Act before the commencement of this Act, and no action taken or thing done (including any order made, agreement entered into or notification published) in connection with such acquisition shall be deemed to be invalid or ever to have become invalid merely on the ground—

(i) that one or more competent authorities have performed the functions of competent authority under the principal Act in respect of the land covered by the same notification under sub-section (1) of Section 7 of the principal Act;

(ii) that one or more reports have been made under sub-section (2) of Section 8 of the principal Act, whether in respect of the entire land covered by the same notification under sub-section (1) of Section 7 of the principal Act or rights in or over such land, or in respect of different parcels of such land or of rights in or over such land;

(iii) that one or more declarations have been made under Section 9 of the principal Act in respect of different parcels of the land covered by the same notification under sub-section (1) of Section 7 of the principal Act or in respect of rights in or over such land,

(b) any acquisition in pursuance of any notification issued under sub-section (1) of Section 7 of the principal Act before the commencement of this Act may be made after such commencement and no such acquisition and no action taken or thing done (including any order made, agreement entered into or notification published) whether before or after such commencement, in connection with such acquisition shall be deemed to be invalid merely on the grounds referred to in clause (a) or any of them.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in clause (b) of sub-section (1), no declaration under Section 9 of the principal Act in respect of any land, or rights in or over such land, which has been notified before the commencement of this Act, under sub-section (1) of Section 7 of the principal Act, shall be made after the expiry of two years from the commencement of this Act.

(3) Where acquisition of any particular land (not being acquisition of rights in or over such land) covered by a notification under sub-section (1) of Section 7 of the principal Act, issued before the commencement of this Act, is or has been made in pursuance of any declaration under Sec. 9 of the principal Act, whether made before or after such commencement, and such declaration is or has been made after the expiry of three years from the date of issue of such notification, there shall be paid simple interest, calculated at the rate of six per centum per annum on the market value of such land, as determined under sub-section (5) of Section 13 of the principal Act, from the date of expiry of the said period of three years to the date of tender of payment of compensation payable for the acquisition of such land:

Provided that no such interest shall be payable for any period during which the proceedings for the acquisition of any land were held up on account of stay or injunction by order of a Court:

Provided further that nothing in this sub-section shall apply to the acquisition of any land where the amount of compensation has been paid to the persons interested before the commencement of this Act.

THE ARMS (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1971
[ACT NO. 55 OF 1971]*

(13th December, 1971)

An Act to amend the Arms Act, 1959.

BE it enacted by Parliament in the Twenty-second Year of the Republic of India as follows:—

1. Short title.— This Act may be called THE ARMS (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1971.

2. Amendment of Section 2.—In Section 2 of the Arms Act, 1959, in sub-section (1), for clause (d), the following clause shall be substituted, namely:—

(d) "district magistrate", in relation to any area for which a Commissioner of Police has been appointed, means the Commissioner of Police thereof and includes any such Deputy Commissioner of Police, exercising jurisdiction over the whole or any part of such area, as may be specified by the State Government in this behalf in relation to such area or part;

*Received the assent of the President on 13-12-1971. Act published in Gaz. of India; 14-12-1971, Pt. II-S. 1, Ext. P. 641. For Statement of Objects and Reasons, see Gaz. of India; 23-7-1971, Pt. II-S. 2, Ext. P. 478.

BE it enacted by Parliament in the Twenty-second Year of the Republic of India as follows:—

CHAPTER I

PRELIMINARY

1. Short title.— This Act may be called THE COMPTROLLER AND AUDITOR-GENERAL'S (DUTIES, POWERS AND CONDITIONS OF SERVICE) ACT, 1971.

2. Definitions.— In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires,—

(a) "accounts", in relation to commercial undertakings of a Government, includes trading, manufacturing and profit and loss accounts and balance-sheets and other subsidiary accounts;

(b) "appropriation accounts" means accounts which relate the expenditure brought

*Received the assent of the President on 15-12-1971. Act published in Gaz. of India; 15-12-1971, Pt. II-S. 1, Ext. P. 651. For Statement of Objects and Reasons, see Gaz. of India; 11-8-1971, Pt. II-S. 2, Ext. P. 583.

during a financial year, to the several items specified in the law made in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution or of the Government of Union Territories Act, 1963, for the appropriation of moneys out of the Consolidated Fund of India or of a State, or of a Union territory having a Legislative Assembly, as the case may be;

(c) "Comptroller and Auditor-General" means the Comptroller and Auditor-General of India appointed under Article 148 of the Constitution;

(d) "State" means a State specified in the First Schedule to the Constitution;

(e) "Union" includes a Union territory, whether having a Legislative Assembly or not.

CHAPTER II

SALARY AND OTHER CONDITIONS OF SERVICE OF THE COMPTROLLER AND AUDITOR-GENERAL

3. Salary.— There shall be paid to the Comptroller and Auditor-General a salary which is equal to the salary of the Judge of the Supreme Court:

Provided that if a person who, immediately before the date of assuming office as the Comptroller and Auditor-General, was in receipt of, or, being eligible so to do, had elected to draw, a pension (other than a disability or wound pension) in respect of any previous service under the Government of the Union or any of its predecessor Governments, or under the Government of a State or any of its predecessor Governments, his salary in respect of service as Comptroller and Auditor-General shall be reduced—

(a) by the amount of that pension; and

(b) if he had, before assuming office, received, in lieu of a portion of the pension due to him in respect of such previous service, the commuted value thereof, by the amount of that portion of the pension; and

(c) if he had, before assuming office, received, or become eligible for receiving, a retirement gratuity in respect of such previous service, by the pension equivalent of that gratuity.

4. Term of office.— The Comptroller and Auditor-General shall hold office for a term of six years from the date on which he assumes such office:

Provided that where he attains the age of sixty-five years before the expiry of the said term of six years, he shall vacate such office on the date on which he attains the said age:

Provided further that he may, at any time, by writing under his hand addressed to the President, resign his office.

Explanation.— For the purpose of this section, the term of six years in respect of the Comptroller and Auditor-General holding office immediately before the commencement of this Act, shall be computed from the date on which he had assumed office.

5. Leave.— (1) A person who, immediately before the date of assuming office as the Comptroller and Auditor-General, was in the service of Government may be granted during his tenure of office but not thereafter, leave in accordance with the rules for the time being applicable to the Service to which he belonged before such date and he shall be entitled to carry forward the amount of leave standing at his credit on such date, notwithstanding anything contained in Section 6.

(2) Any other person who is appointed as the Comptroller and Auditor-General may be granted leave in accordance with such rules as are for the time being applicable to a member of the Indian Administrative Service.

(3) The power to grant or refuse leave to the Comptroller and Auditor-General and to revoke or curtail leave granted to him, shall vest in the President:

6. Pension.— (1) A person who, immediately before the date of assuming office as the Comptroller and Auditor-General, was in the service of Government shall be deemed to have retired from service on the date on which he enters upon office as the Comptroller and Auditor-General but his service as the Comptroller and Auditor-General shall be reckoned as continuing approved service counting for pension in the Service to which he belonged.

(2) Every person who enters upon office as the Comptroller and Auditor-General shall, on demitting the said office, be eligible to a pension of a sum of fifteen thousand rupees per annum which sum shall include the aggregate of all pensions payable to him and the commuted portion, if any, of his pension, and the pension equivalent of the retirement gratuity, if any, which may have been admissible to him under the rules for the time being applicable to the Service to which he belonged:

Provided that if such a person is or becomes eligible, at any time, under the rules for the time being governing the Service to which he belonged, to a pension higher than the said sum of fifteen thousand rupees, he shall be eligible to draw, as pension, the said higher amount.

(3) A person who, immediately before the date of assuming office as the Comptroller and Auditor-General, was in receipt of, or, had become eligible for receiving, a pension in respect of any previous service under Government, shall, on demitting office as the Comptroller and Auditor-General, be eligible to a pension of fifteen thousand rupees per annum which sum shall include the aggregate of all pensions payable to him and the commuted portion, if any, of his pension, and the pension equivalent of the retirement gratuity, if any, which may have been admissible to him under the rules for the time being applicable to the Service to which he belonged:

Provided that if such a person is or becomes eligible, at any time, under the rules for the time being governing the Service to which he belonged, to a pension higher than the said sum of fifteen thousand rupees, he shall be eligible to draw, as pension, the said higher amount.

(4) Any other person who is appointed as the Comptroller and Auditor-General shall, on demitting the said office, be eligible to a pension of fifteen thousand rupees per annum.

(5) The person holding office immediately before the commencement of this Act as the Comptroller and Auditor-General shall be eligible to draw, at his option, pension at the rate at which it would be admissible to him if this Act had not come into force or at the rate specified in this section.

(6) A person who demits office as the Comptroller and Auditor-General by resignation shall, on such demission, be eligible to a pension at the rate of two thousand rupees per annum for each completed year of his service as the Comptroller and Auditor-General:

Provided that in the case of a person referred to in sub-section (1) or sub-section (3), the aggregate amount of pension admissible under this sub-section together with the amount of pension including the commuted portion, if any, of his pension, and the pension equivalent of the retirement gratuity, if any, which may have been admissible to him under the rules for the time being applicable to the Service to which he belonged immediately before he assumed office as the Comptroller and Auditor-General, shall not exceed fifteen thousand rupees per annum or the higher pension referred to in proviso to sub-section (2) or sub-section (3), as the case may be.

(7) If a person who demits office as the Comptroller and Auditor-General is not eligible to any pension under this section but is eligible to a pension under the rules for the time being applicable to the Service to which he belonged immediately before he assumed office as the Comptroller and Auditor-General, he shall, notwithstanding anything contained in this section, be eligible to draw such pension as is admissible to him under the said rules.

(8) Except where he demits office by resignation, a person holding office of the Comptroller and Auditor-General shall be deemed, for the purposes of this Act, to have demitted such office as such if, and only if,—

(a) he has completed the term of office specified in Section 4, or

(b) he has attained the age of sixty-five years, or

(c) his demission of office is medically certified to be necessitated by ill health.

7. Commutation of pension.— The Civil Pensions (Commutation) Rules for the time being in force shall, with such adaptations as may be made therein by the President, apply to a person who had held office as the Comptroller and Auditor-General.

8. Right to subscribe to General Provident Fund.— Every person holding office as the Comptroller and Auditor-General shall be entitled to subscribe to the General Provident Fund (Central Services).

9. Other conditions of service.— Save as otherwise expressly provided in this Act, the other conditions of service of a person holding office as the Comptroller and Auditor-General including his emoluments during any period of duty out of India and his travelling allowance while travelling on duty, shall be determined by the rules for the time being applicable to a member of the Indian Administrative Service holding the rank of Secretary to the Government of India.

Provided that nothing in this section shall have effect so as to give a person, who immediately before the date of assuming office as the Comptroller and Auditor-General, was in the service of Government, less favourable terms in respect of any of the matters aforesaid, than those to which he would be entitled as a member of the Service to which he belonged, his service as Comptroller and Auditor-General being treated for the purpose of this proviso as continuing service in the Service to which he belonged.

CHAPTER III

DUTIES AND POWERS OF THE COMPTROLLER AND AUDITOR-GENERAL

10. Comptroller and Auditor-General to compile accounts of Union and States.—

(1) The Comptroller and Auditor-General shall be responsible—

(a) for compiling the accounts of the Union and of each State from the initial and subsidiary accounts rendered to the audit and accounts offices under his control by treasuries, offices or departments responsible for the keeping of such accounts; and

(b) for keeping such accounts in relation to any of the matters specified in clause (a) as may be necessary:

Provided that the President as respects the accounts of the Union, and the Governor of a State as respects the accounts of that State, may, after consultation with the Comptroller and Auditor-General, by order, relieve him from the responsibility for compiling the accounts of any particular service or department of the Union or of a State, as the case may be:

Provided further that the President may, after consultation with the Comptroller and Auditor-General, by order, relieve him from the responsibility for keeping the accounts of any particular class or character.

(2) Where, under any arrangement, a person other than the Comptroller and Auditor-General has, before the commencement of this Act, been responsible—

(i) for compiling the accounts of any particular service or department of the Union or of a State, or

(ii) for keeping the accounts of any particular class or character, such arrangement shall, notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1), continue to be in force unless, after consultation with the Comptroller and Auditor-General, it is revoked in the case referred to in clause (i), by an order of the President or the Governor of the State, as the case may be, and in the case referred to in clause (ii), by an order of the President.

11. Comptroller and Auditor-General to prepare and submit accounts to the President, Governors of States and Administrators of Union territories having Legislative Assemblies.—The Comptroller and Auditor-General shall, from the accounts compiled by him or by any other person responsible in that behalf, prepare in each year accounts (including, in the case of accounts compiled by him, appropriation accounts) showing under the respective heads the annual receipts and disbursements for the purpose of the Union, of each State and of each Union territory having a Legislative Assembly, and shall submit those accounts to the President or the Governor of a State or Administrator of the Union territory having a Legislative Assembly, as the case may be, on or before such dates as he may, with the concurrence of the Government concerned, determine.

12. Comptroller and Auditor-General to give information and render assistance to the Union and States.—The Comptroller and Auditor-General shall, in so far as the accounts, for the compilation or keeping of which he is responsible, enable him so to do, give to the Union Government, to the State Governments or to the Governments of Union territories having Legislative Assemblies, as the case may be, such information as they may, from time to time, require, and render such assistance in the preparation of their annual financial statements as they may reasonably ask for.

13. General provisions relating to audit.—It shall be the duty of the Comptroller and Auditor-General—

(a) to audit all expenditure from the Consolidated Fund of India and of each State and of each Union territory having a Legislative Assembly and to ascertain whether the moneys shown in the accounts as having been disbursed were legally available for and applicable to the service or purpose to which they have been applied or charged and whether the expenditure conforms to the authority which governs it;

(b) to audit all transactions of the Union and of the States relating to Contingency Funds and Public Accounts;

(c) to audit all trading, manufacturing, profit and loss accounts and balance-sheets and other subsidiary accounts kept in any department of the Union or of a State; and in each case to report on the expenditure, transactions or accounts so audited by him.

14. Audit of receipts and expenditure of bodies or authorities substantially financed from Union or State Revenues.—Where any body or authority is substantially financed by grants or loans from the Consolidated Fund of India or of any State or of any Union territory having a Legislative Assembly, the Comptroller and Auditor-General shall, subject to the provisions of any law for the time being in force applicable to the body or authority, as the case may be, audit all receipts and expenditure of that body or authority and to report on the receipts and expenditure audited by him.

Explanation.—Where the grant or loan to a body or authority from the Consolidated Fund of India or of any State or of any Union territory having a Legislative Assembly in a financial year is not less than rupees five lakhs and the amount of such grant or loan is not less than seventy-five per cent. of the total expenditure of that body or authority, such body or authority shall be deemed, for the purposes of this section, to be substantially financed by such grants or loans, as the case may be.

15. Functions of Comptroller and Auditor-General in the case of grants or loans given to other authorities or bodies.—(1) Where any grant or loan is given for any specific purpose from the Consolidated Fund of India or of any State or of any Union territory having a Legislative Assembly to any authority or body not being a foreign State or international organisation, the Comptroller and Auditor-General shall scrutinise the procedures by which the sanctioning authority satisfies itself as to the fulfilment of the conditions subject to which such grants or loans were given and shall for this purpose have right of access, after giving reasonable previous notice, to the books and accounts of that authority or body:

Provided that the President, the Governor of a State or the Administrator of a Union territory having a Legislative Assembly, as the case may be, may, where he is of opinion that it is necessary so to do in the public interest, by order, relieve the Comptroller and Auditor-General, after consultation with him, from making any such scrutiny in respect of any body or authority receiving such grant or loan.

(2) Except where he is authorised so to do by the President, the Governor of a State or the Administrator of a Union territory having a Legislative Assembly, as the case may be, the Comptroller and Auditor-General shall not have, while exercising the powers conferred on him by sub-section (1), right of access to the books and accounts of any corporation to which any such grant or loan as is referred to in sub-section (1) is given if the law by or under which such corporation has been established provides for the audit of the accounts of such corporation by an agency other than the Comptroller and Auditor-General.

Provided that no such authorisation shall be made except after consultation with Comptroller and Auditor-General and except after giving the concerned corporation a reasonable opportunity of making representations with regard to the proposal to give to the Comptroller and Auditor-General right of access to its books and accounts.

16. Audit of receipts of Union or of States.— It shall be the duty of the Comptroller and Auditor-General to audit all receipts which are payable into the Consolidated Fund of India and of each State and of each Union territory having a Legislative Assembly and to satisfy himself that the rules and procedures in that behalf are designed to secure an effective check on the assessment, collection and proper allocation of revenue and are being duly observed and to make for this purpose such examination of the accounts as he thinks fit and report thereon.

17. Audit of accounts of stores and stock.— The Comptroller and Auditor-General shall have authority to audit and report on the accounts of stores and stock kept in any office or department of the Union or of a State.

18. Powers of Comptroller and Auditor-General in connection with audit of accounts.— (1) The Comptroller and Auditor-General shall in connection with the performance of his duties under this Act, have authority—

(a) to inspect any office of accounts under the control of the Union or of a State, including treasuries and such offices responsible for the keeping of initial or subsidiary accounts, as submit accounts to him;

(b) to require that any accounts, books, papers and other documents which deal with or form the basis of or are otherwise relevant to the transactions to which his duties, in respect of audit extend, shall be sent to such place as he may appoint for his inspection;

(c) to put such questions or make such observations as he may consider necessary, to the person in charge of the office and to call for such information as he may require for the preparation of any account or report which it is his duty to prepare.

(2) The person in charge of any office or department, the accounts of which have to be inspected and audited by the Comtroller and Auditor-General, shall afford all facilities for such inspection and comply with requests for information in as complete a form as possible and with all reasonable expedition.

19. Audit of Government companies and corporations.— (1) The duties and powers of the Comptroller and Auditor-General in relation to the audit of the accounts of Government companies shall be performed and exercised by him in accordance with the provisions of the Companies Act, 1956.

(2) The duties and powers of the Comptroller and Auditor-General in relation to the audit of the accounts of corporations (not being companies) established by or under law made by Parliament shall be performed and exercised by him in accordance with the provisions of the respective legislations.

(3) The Governor of a State or the Administrator of a Union territory having a Legislative Assembly may, where he is of opinion that it is necessary in the public interest so to do, request the Comptroller and Auditor-General to audit the accounts of a corporation established by law made by the Legislative (sic) (Assembly?) of the State or of the Union territory, as the case may be, and where such request has been made, the Comptroller and Auditor-General shall audit the accounts of such corporation and shall have, for the purposes of such audit, right of access to the books and accounts of such corporation.

Provided that no such request shall be made except after consultation with the Comptroller and Auditor-General and except after giving reasonable opportunity to the corporation to make representations with regard to the proposal for such audit.

20. Audit of accounts of certain authorities or bodies.— (1) Save as otherwise provided in Section 19, where the audit of the accounts of any body or authority has not been entrusted to the Comptroller and Auditor-General by or under any law made by Parliament, he shall, if requested so to do by the President or the Governor of a State or the Administrator of a Union territory having a Legislative Assembly, as the case may be, undertake the audit of the accounts of such body or authority on such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon between him and the concerned Government and shall have, for the purposes of such audit, right of access to the books and accounts of that body or authority.

Provided that no such request shall be made except after consultation with the Comptroller and Auditor-General.

(2) The Comptroller and Auditor-General may propose to the President or the Governor of a State or the Administrator of a Union territory having a Legislative Assembly, as the case may be, that he may be authorised to undertake the audit of the accounts of any body or authority, the audit of the accounts of which has not been entrusted to him by law, if he is of opinion that such audit is necessary, because a substantial amount has been invested in, or advanced to, such body or authority by the Central or State Government or by the Government of a Union territory having a Legislative Assembly, and on such request being made, the President or the Governor or the Administrator, as the case may be may empower the Comptroller and Auditor-General to undertake the audit of the accounts of such body or authority.

(3) The audit referred to in sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) shall not be entrusted to the Comptroller and Auditor-General except where the President or the Governor of a State or the Administrator of a Union territory having a Legislative Assembly, as the case may be, is satisfied that it is expedient so to do in the public interest and except after giving a reasonable opportunity to the concerned body or authority to make representations with regard to the proposal for such audit.

MISCELLANEOUS

21. Delegation of power of Comptroller and Auditor-General.— Any power exercisable by the Comptroller and Auditor-General under the provisions of this Act, or any other law may be exercised by such officer of his department as may be authorised by him in this behalf by general or special order:

Provided that except during the absence of the Comptroller and Auditor-General on leave or otherwise, no officer shall be authorised to submit on behalf of the Comptroller and Auditor-General any report which the Comptroller and Auditor-General is required by the Constitution or the Government of Union Territories Act, 1963 to submit to the President or the Governor of a State or the Administrator of a Union territory having a Legislative Assembly, as the case may be.

22. Power to make rules.— (1) The Central Government may, after consultation with the Comptroller and Auditor-General, by notification in the Official Gazette, make rules for carrying out the provisions of this Act in so far as they relate to the maintenance of accounts.

(2) In particular, and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, such rules may provide for all or any of the following matters, namely:—

(a) the manner in which initial and subsidiary accounts shall be kept by the treasuries, offices and departments rendering accounts to audit and accounts offices;

(b) the manner in which the accounts of any particular service or department or of any particular class or character, in respect of which the Comptroller and Auditor-General has been relieved from the responsibility of compiling or keeping the accounts, shall be compiled or kept;

(c) the manner in which the accounts of stores and stock shall be kept in any office or department of the Union or of a State, as the case may be;

(d) any other matter which is required to be, or may be, prescribed by rules.

(3) Every rule made under this section shall be laid, as soon as may be after it is made, before each House of Parliament, while it is in session, for a total period of thirty days which may be comprised in one session or in two successive sessions, and if, before the expiry of the session in which it is so laid or the session immediately following both Houses agree in making any modification in the rule or both Houses agree that the rule should not be made, the rule shall thereafter have effect only in such modified form or be of no effect, as the case may be; so, however, that any such modification or annulment shall be without prejudice to the validity of anything previously done under that rule.

23. Power to make regulations.— The Comptroller and Auditor-General is hereby authorised to make regulations for carrying into effect the provisions of this Act in so far as they relate to the scope and extent of audit, including laying down for the guidance of the Government Departments the general principles of Government accounting and the broad principles in regard to audit of receipts and expenditure.

24. Power to dispense with detailed audit.— The Comptroller and Auditor-General is hereby authorised to dispense with, when circumstances so warrant, any part of detailed audit of any accounts or class of transactions and to apply such limited check in relation to such accounts or transactions as he may determine.

25. Repeal.— The Comptroller and Auditor-General (Conditions of Service) Act, 1953, is hereby repealed.

26. Removal of doubts.— For the removal of doubts, it is hereby declared that on the commencement of this Act the Government of India (Audit and Accounts) Order, 1936, as adapted by the India (Provisional Constitution) Order, 1947, shall cease to be in force except as respects anything done or any action taken thereunder.

THE VISVA-BHARATI (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1971

[ACT NO. 57 OF 1971]*

(15th December, 1971)

An Act further to amend the Visva-Bharati Act, 1951.

“(ia) shall regulate and enforce discipline among members of the teaching, administrative and ministerial staff of the University in accordance with the Statutes and the Ordinances;”

7. Amendment of Section 28.— In Section 28 of the principal Act, for sub-sections (2) to (8) the following sub-sections shall be substituted, namely:—

“(2) The Statutes may be amended, repealed or added to by Statutes made by the Karma-Samiti (Executive Council).

(3) The Karma-Samiti (Executive Council) shall not propose the draft of any Statute affecting the status, powers or constitution of any authority of the University until such authority has been given an opportunity of expressing the opinion upon the proposal and any opinion so expressed shall be in writing and shall be submitted to the Paridarsaka (Visitor).

(4) Every new Statute or addition to a Statute or any amendment or repeal of a Statute shall be submitted to the Paridarsaka (Visitor) who may assent to it or withhold his assent therefrom or remit it to the Karma-Samiti (Executive Council) for further consideration.

(5) A Statute passed by the Karma-Samiti (Executive Council) shall have no validity until it has been assented to by the Paridarsaka (Visitor).”

8. Amendment of Section 30.— In Section 30 of the principal Act,—

(i) in sub-section (3), the words “and the Samsad (Court), and shall be considered by the Samsad (Court), at its next succeeding meeting” shall be omitted;

(ii) for sub-sections (4) to (7), the following sub-sections shall be substituted, namely:—

“(4) Where the Karma-Samiti (Executive Council) has rejected the draft of an Ordinance proposed by the Siksha-Samiti (Academic Council), the Siksha-Samiti (Academic Council) may appeal to the Paridarsaka (Visitor) who may pass such orders thereon as he thinks fit.

(5) All Ordinances made by the Karma-Samiti (Executive Council) shall be submitted, as soon as may be, to the Paridarsaka (Visitor) who may disallow any such Ordinance or remit it to the Karma-Samiti (Executive Council) for further consideration.

(6) The Paridarsaka (Visitor) may, by order, direct that the operation of any Ordinance shall be suspended until he has had an opportunity of exercising his power of disallowance, and any order of suspension under this sub-section shall cease to have effect on the expiration of one month from the date of such order.”

9. Substitution of new section for Section 35.— For Section 35 of the principal Act, the following section shall be substituted, namely:—

“35. Annual reports.— The annual report of the University shall be prepared under the direction of the Karma-Samiti (Executive Council) and shall be submitted to the Paridarsaka (Visitor) on or before such date as may be prescribed by the Statute.”

10. Amendment of Section 36.— In Section 36 of the principal Act,—

(i) in sub-section (3), the words “the Samsad (Court) and to” shall be omitted; and

(ii) for sub-section (4), the following sub-section shall be substituted, namely:—

“(4) The annual accounts and the financial estimates shall be considered by the Paridarsaka (Visitor) who may communicate his views to the Karma-Samiti (Executive Council) which shall take them into consideration and take such action thereon as it thinks fit or inform the Paridarsaka (Visitor) when no action is taken, of its reasons therefor.”

11. Substitution of new section for.— For Section 41 of the principal Act, the following section shall be substituted, namely:—

“41. Removal from membership of the University.— The Karma-Samiti (Executive Council) may, on the recommendation of not less than two-thirds of its members remove any person from the membership of any authority or board of the University if such a person is guilty of a serious offence involving moral turpitude, or if he has been guilty of scandalous conduct and for the same reasons may withdraw any degree or diploma conferred on, or granted to, any person by the University:

Provided that no action shall be taken under this section against any person except after giving him a reasonable opportunity of being heard with regard to the proposed action.”

12. Amendment of Statutes.— Notwithstanding anything contained in the principal Act, the Statutes of the University shall stand amended as follows:—

(i) in Statute 3, after clause (2), the following clause shall be inserted, namely:—

“(2A) When the Upacharya (Vice-Chancellor) by reason of leave or absence or any other cause is unable to perform the duties of his office, the current duties of the Upacharya (Vice-Chancellor) shall be performed,—

(a) in the case of leave or absence for more than thirty days, by such Professor as the Karma-Samiti (Executive Council) may appoint for the purpose on the recommendation of the Upacharya (Vice-Chancellor);

(b) in the case of leave or absence for a period not exceeding thirty days, by such teacher or an officer as the Upacharya (Vice-Chancellor) may appoint for the purpose.”

(ii) in Statute 7, after item (2), the following item shall be inserted, namely:—

“(3) Dean of Student Welfare.”

(iii) after Statute 9, the following Statute shall be inserted, namely:—

“9A. Dean of Student Welfare.—

(1) The Dean of Student Welfare shall be appointed, from amongst the employees of the University who are or who have been teachers of the University, by the Karma-Samiti (Executive Council) on the recommendation of the Upacharya (Vice-Chancellor).

(2) The Dean of Student Welfare shall exercise such powers and perform such duties either whole-time, or, depending upon the need of the University, part-time, accordingly as the Karma-Samiti (Executive Council) may, on the recommendation of the Upacharya (Vice-Chancellor), direct.

(3) The period and terms of the appointment of the Dean of Student Welfare shall be determined by the Karma-Samiti (Executive Council).”;.

(iv) Statutes 10 and 11 shall be omitted;

(v) for Statute 13, the following Statute shall be substituted, namely:—

“13. The Karma-Samiti (Executive Council)

documents and writings delivered up or found on board a captured aircraft;

(c) "Armed Forces" means the Army, Navy and Air Force or any part of any one or more of them and includes any other armed force in the service of, or employed with, the Army, Navy or Air Force during hostilities;

(d) "goods" includes all such things as may be subject to adjudication as prize, but in the case of a naval prize does not include any aircraft or boat unless the aircraft or boat is a part of the cargo of a ship;

(f) "Indian citizen" includes a company registered in India and having its principal place of business in India;

(g) "military aircraft" means any aircraft belonging to the Armed Forces and includes any armed aircraft in the service of the Armed Forces and any other aircraft used as a transport or auxiliary or in any other way for the purpose of prosecuting or aiding hostilities;

(h) "prize" means anything which, subject to this Act and the rules made thereunder, may be subjected to adjudication and includes a ship or an aircraft and goods carried therein, irrespective of whether the ship is captured at sea or seized in port or whether the aircraft is on or over land or sea at the time of capture or seizure;

(i) "ship" includes a vessel and a sea-faring craft with the tackle, furniture and apparel of the ship, vessel or boat;

(j) "ship-of-war" means any ship belonging to the Armed Forces and includes any armed ship in the service of the Armed Forces and any other ship used as transport or auxiliary or in any other way for the purpose of prosecuting or aiding hostilities;

(k) "ship papers" includes all books, passes, sea briefs, charter parties, bills of lading, customs receipts, manifests, certificates, licences, lists, tickets, notes, letters and other documents and writings delivered up or found on board a ship captured at sea or seized in port.

3. Establishment of Prize Courts.—

(1) The Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, constitute from time to time as many Prize Courts as the Central Government may determine to exercise the powers and discharge the functions conferred on a Prize Court by this Act and every such Prize Court shall exercise jurisdiction within the local limits of such area or areas as may be specified by the Central Government in the said notification.

(2) Every Prize Court shall consist of such one or more than one member as the Central Government may from time to time deem it necessary to appoint.

(3) A person shall not be qualified for appointment as a member of a Prize Court unless he is a citizen of India and has been or is qualified to be appointed as a Judge of a High Court.

(4) Subject to the provisions of Section 18, the conditions of service of a member of a Prize Court shall be such as the Central Government may by order determine.

4. Jurisdiction of Prize Courts in prize cases.— (1) Notwithstanding anything contained in any other law for the time being in force, every Prize Court shall have exclusive jurisdiction in respect of each prize and each proceeding for the condemnation of property as prize, whether such prize is taken before or after the commencement of this Act, if the prize is—

(a) brought into or seized within the territory of India;

(b) brought into or seized within a locality in the temporary or permanent possession of, or occupied by, the Armed Forces of the Union; or

(c) appropriated for the use of the Central Government, and is brought within the territorial jurisdiction of that Prize Court.

Provided that in the case of a Naval prize, the Prize Court shall have jurisdiction only if the prize captured or seized is brought to a port or place lying within the territorial jurisdiction of that Prize Court.

(2) Every Prize Court shall also have exclusive jurisdiction in respect of a prize in which the prize property—

(a) is lost or entirely destroyed; or

(b) cannot be brought in for adjudication because of its nature and condition.

(3) Without prejudice to the generality of the powers conferred by sub-section (1), a Prize Court shall take cognizance of and judicially proceed upon all manners of captures, seizures, prizes and reprisals of all ships, vessels, aircrafts and goods that are captured or seized, and shall hear and determine the same, and in accordance with this Act and rules made thereunder, shall adjudge and condemn all such ships, vessels, aircrafts and goods belonging to any country or State or the national, citizens or subjects thereof, as may be captured or seized as prize during a war or as a measure of reprisal during an armed conflict or in the exercise of the right of self-defence.

(4) Notwithstanding anything contained in this section, the Prize Court may in respect of any matter for which no provision or insufficient provision is made, by or under this Act, apply the principles of the International Law regulating that matter.

5. Transfer of cases.— (1) Whether proceedings are pending in any Prize Court against any ship, aircraft or goods, the Prize Court may, at any stage of the proceedings, on application being made by the proper officer of the Central Government and upon being satisfied that the proceedings so far as they relate to the ship, aircraft or goods, or any part thereof, would be more conveniently conducted in another Prize Court, make an order remitting the proceedings or the proceedings so far as they relate to the ship, aircraft or goods, or any part of the goods, as the case may be, to such other Prize Court.

(2) Where any proceedings have been so remitted to another Prize Court, that other Prize Court shall have the same jurisdiction to deal with the matter as if the subject matter of those proceedings had originally been seized within its jurisdiction or brought within its jurisdiction after capture or seizure, as the case may be, and any order made or action taken in those proceedings before the order of remission shall be deemed to have been made or taken by or in that Court.

6. Appeals.—(1) Any person aggrieved by an order or decree of the Prize Court may prefer an appeal to the Central Government within a period of ninety days from the date on which such order or decree has been made.

(2) The provisions of Sections 5 and 12 of the Limitation Act, 1963, shall so far as may be, apply for computation of the period specified, in sub-section (1).

7. General powers of Prize Courts.—(1) A Prize Court shall, for the purposes of this Act, have the same powers as are vested in a Civil Court while trying a suit under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, in respect of the following matters, namely:—

(a) summoning and enforcing the attendance of persons and examining them on oath;

(b) requiring the discovery and production of documents;

(c) receiving evidence on affidavits;

(d) requisitioning any public record or copies thereof from any court or office;

(e) issuing commissions for the examination of witnesses or documents;

(f) any other matter which may be prescribed by rules.

(2) Without prejudice to the provisions of sub-section (1), every Prize Court shall have the power to enforce—

(a) any order or decree of another Prize Court passed in a prize proceeding under this Act;

(b) any order of the Central Government passed in a prize appeal under Sec 6.

8. Procedure on capture of prize.—(1) Every ship and every aircraft taken as prize and brought into port or to a place within the jurisdiction of a Prize Court shall forthwith and without bulk broken, be delivered to the Marshal of the Court.

(2) If there is no such Marshal, then the ship or aircraft shall be in like manner delivered to such person as the Central Government may appoint in this behalf.

(3) The ship or aircraft shall, subject to the orders of the Court, remain in the custody of the Marshal, or the person appointed under sub-section (2).

1971 Acts/8

9. Ship and aircraft papers to be brought in Registry.—(1) The captors shall with all convenient speed after the ship or aircraft is brought into port or to a place within the jurisdiction of a Prize Court bring the ship papers or the aircraft papers, as the case may be, into the Registry of the Prize Court.

(2) The commanding officer or the captain of the capturing ship or aircraft or the commanding officer of the capturing force, or any other officer or person seizing the ship or aircraft at any port or aerodrome or any officer designated by the commanding officer or his superior authority as a Prize Officer or such other officer or person who was present at the capture and saw the ship papers or aircraft papers delivered up or found on board shall make oath that they are brought in as they were taken without fraud, addition, or subduction or alteration or else shall account on oath to the satisfaction of the Prize Court for the absence or altered condition of the ship papers or aircraft papers or any of them.

(3) Where no ship papers or aircraft papers are delivered up or found on board the captured ship or captured aircraft, the commanding officer or the captain of the capturing ship or aircraft or the commanding officer of the capturing force or any other officer or person seizing the ship or aircraft or the Prize Officer or such other officer or person who was present at the capture shall make an oath to that effect.

10. Goods.—The provisions of Sections 8 and 9 relating to ships and aircraft shall, so far as may be, extend and apply to goods taken as prize on board a ship or aircraft and the Prize Court may direct such goods to be unladen, inventoried and warehoused.

11. Pre-emption.—Where a ship of a foreign State passing the seas or an aircraft of a foreign State, laden with military or victualling stores intended to be carried to any place under the control of an enemy is taken in circumstances making it subject to adjudication as prize, and is brought under the control of the Government of India, and the purchase of such stores for the service of the Central Government appears to the said Government expedient without the condemnation thereof in a Prize Court, then the Central Government may purchase on account or for the service of the Central Government all or any of such stores.

12. Prize proceedings not to apply to enemy warships and military aircraft.—Nothing in this Act shall apply to a ship-of-war or military aircraft of the enemy or any other ship or aircraft owned by the enemy whether or not registered in the territory of the enemy or goods carried therein and no proceedings of prize shall be necessary for the condemnation of such ship-of-war or military aircraft or other ship or aircraft or goods carried therein.

13. Capture to belong to Central Government.— (1) Subject to the provisions of sub-section (2), all prizes captured by the Armed Forces of the Union and condemned where necessary in the Prize Court shall be the exclusive property of the Central Government.

(2) The Central Government may, at its discretion, out of the proceeds of the prize, make a grant of such sum of money as it deems fit to the benevolent funds of the Armed Forces of the Union.

14. Prize salvage.— (1) Where any ship or goods or aircraft belonging to an Indian citizen, after being taken as prize by the enemy is or are retaken from the enemy, the same shall be restored by decree of a Prize Court to the owner on his paying to the Central Government as prize salvage one-eighth part of the value of the prize to be decreed and ascertained by the Prize Court or such sum not exceeding one-eighth part of the estimated value of the prize as may be agreed upon between the owner and the Central Government and approved by the order of the Prize Court:

Provided that where the recapture is made in the circumstances of special difficulty or danger, the Prize Court may if it thinks fit award to the Central Government as prize salvage a larger part than one-eighth but not exceeding in any case one-fourth part of the value of the prize:

Provided further that where a ship or aircraft after being so taken is set forth or used by the enemy as a ship-of-war or military aircraft, the aforesaid provision for restitution shall not apply and subject to such compensation to the owner as the Prize Court may determine, the ownership of such ship or aircraft shall vest in the Central Government.

(2) Where a ship belonging to any Indian Citizen, after being taken as prize, is retaken from the enemy, such ship may, with the consent of the recaptors, prosecute her voyage and it will not be necessary for the Central Government to proceed to adjudication till her return to a port in India.

(3) The master or owner of the ship or his agent may, with the consent of the Central Government, unload and dispose of the goods on board the ship before adjudication.

(4) In case the ship does not return within six months to a port in India, the Central Government may nevertheless institute proceedings against the ship or goods in a Prize Court and the Prize Court may thereupon award prize salvage as aforesaid and may enforce payment thereof.

(5) The provisions of sub-sections (2), (3) and (4) shall mutatis mutandis apply also to an aircraft belonging to any Indian citizen which, after being taken as prize, is retaken from the enemy.

15. Offences in respect of prize.— Every person who is guilty of a prize offence, that is to say, an offence which if committed by a person subject to naval law would be punishable under Section 63, Section 64, Section 65, Section 66 or Section 67 of the Navy Act, 1957, shall be punished with imprisonment which may extend to two years or with fine or both.

16. Indemnity against legal proceedings.— (1) Notwithstanding anything contained in any other law for the time being in force, no suit, prosecution or other legal proceedings shall lie against any officer of the Armed Forces of the Union or any other person for anything which is in good faith done or intended to be done in pursuance of this Act or any rules made thereunder.

(2) Save as otherwise expressly provided under this Act, no suit or other legal proceedings shall lie against the Central Government for any damage caused or likely to be caused by anything in good faith done or intended to be done in pursuance of this Act or any rules made thereunder.

17. Power to make rules.— (1) The Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette make rules for regulating the practice and procedure of a Prize Court and for generally carrying out the purposes of this Act.

(2) Without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, such rules may provide for all or any of the following matters, namely:—

(a) the institution of cases, issue and service of writs, summons and other processes, and entering appearance and making of claims;

(b) affidavits concerning ship papers or aircraft papers and other affidavits to be or which may be made in a Prize Court or for the purpose of proceedings in a Prize Court;

(c) pleadings, particulars, discovery and inspection of documents and facts, evidence and hearing;

(d) issue of warrants for arrest of prize, and detention of prize;

(e) sale, appraisement, safe custody and inspection of prize;

(f) bail and release;

(g) requisition by Central Government of ships, aircraft or goods in the custody of a Prize Court;

(h) appointment of assessors and their fees;

(i) enforcement and execution of decrees and orders;

(j) stay of proceedings;

(k) costs of or incidental to any proceedings in the Prize Court and as to the fees to be charged in respect of proceedings therein and as to the taking of security of costs;

(l) procedure for hearing appeals and other matters pertaining to appeals;

(m) appointment, duties and conduct of the officers of a Prize Court and costs, charges and expenses to be allowed to petitioners therein;

(n) the manner in which and the conditions subject to which the right of visit, search, detention or capture of any ship or aircraft or goods thereon may be exercised and the penalty for impeding the exercise of any such right;

(o) the manner in which any such ship or aircraft or goods seized by or under the authority of any officer of the Armed Forces of the Union shall be kept in custody or disposed of;

(p) the conditions for declaring any ship or aircraft or cargo thereon as hostile and for condemnation thereof;

(q) the manner in which a ship or aircraft recaptured from the enemy may be disposed of;

(r) the conditions subject to which a right of unhindered passage may be allowed to a ship or aircraft within the territory of India on the outbreak of hostilities or an armed conflict on the basis of reciprocity;

(s) any other matter which may be, or is required to be, prescribed by rules

(3) All rules made under this section shall be laid, as soon as may be, after they are made, before each House of Parliament while it is in session for a total period of thirty days, which may be comprised in one session or in two successive sessions, and if before the expiry of the session in which they are so laid or the session immediately following, both Houses agree in making any modification in the rules or both Houses agree that the rules should not be made, the rules shall thereafter have effect only in such modified form or be of no effect, as the case may be; so however that any such modification or annulment shall be without prejudice to the validity of anything previously done under those rules.

18. Dissolution of Prize Courts.—The Central Government may at any time when there is no prize proceeding pending before a Prize Court dissolve that Prize Court, and make such further orders as to the custody of the records of that Court as may be considered necessary.

19. Repeals.—The Naval Prize Act, 1864, the Naval Agency and Distribution Act, 1864, the Prize Courts Act, 1894, the Prize Courts Procedure Act, 1914, the Prize Courts Act, 1915, the Naval Prize Act, 1918, the Prize Act, 1939, in so far as they apply in India are hereby repealed.

20. Savings.—Nothing in this Act shall—

(a) give to the officers and seamen of the Indian Naval ships or officers and airmen of the Indian Military aircraft or to any other person concerned in the capture of the prize any right or claim in or to any ships, aircraft or goods taken as prize or the proceeds thereof; or

(b) affect the operation of any existing treaty or convention with any foreign State; or

(c) take away or abridge the powers of the Central Government to enter into any treaty or convention with any foreign State containing any stipulation that the Central Government may deem appropriate concerning any matter to which this Act relates.

THE COMPANIES (SURCHARGE ON INCOME-TAX) ACT, 1971

(23rd December, 1971.)

An Act to provide for the levy of a surcharge on income-tax payable in advance by companies during the financial year 1971-72 under the Income-tax Act, 1961.

BE it enacted by Parliament in the Twenty-second Year of the Republic of India as follows:—

1. Short title.—This Act may be called THE COMPANIES (SURCHARGE ON INCOME-TAX) ACT, 1971.

2. Definitions.—In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires,—

(a) "Income-tax Act" means the Income-tax Act, 1961;

(b) all words and expressions used in this Act shall have the meanings respectively assigned to them in the Income-tax Act.

3. Levy of surcharge on income-tax payable by companies during 1971-72.—

(1) Every company which is liable to pay advance tax under Section 210 or Section 212 of the Income-tax Act during the financial year commencing on the 1st day of April, 1971, shall, in addition to the advance tax so payable, pay to the credit of the Central Government on or before the 15th day of March, 1972, a further sum, by way of surcharge on income-tax, calculated at the rate of two and one-half per cent, of the amount specified in sub-section (2).

(2) The amount referred to in sub-section (1) shall be—

(i) in a case where advance tax is required to be paid by an order under sub-section (1) or sub-section (3) of Section 210 of the Income-tax Act, the amount specified in such order;

(ii) in a case where advance tax is payable under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) or sub-section (3) or sub-section (3A) of Section 212 of the Income-tax Act on the basis of the estimate furnished by the company, the amount of advance tax so payable.

(3) Any sum required to be paid by a company as surcharge on income-tax under sub-section (1) shall be paid without any notice of demand to the company in that behalf from the Income-tax Officer.

4. Mode of recovery.— If the sum required to be paid under sub-section (1) of Section 3 is not paid on or before the 15th day of March, 1972, the company shall be deemed to be an assessee in default and—

(a) the company shall be liable to pay simple interest at nine per cent. per annum from the 16th day of March, 1972;

(b) all the provisions of Sections 221 to 227, Section 229, Section 231 and Section 232 of the Income-tax Act and the Second and Third Schedules to that Act and any rules made thereunder shall, so far as may be, apply as if the said provisions were the provisions of this Act and referred to surcharge on income-tax and sums imposed by way of penalty and interest under this Act instead of to income-tax and sums imposed by way of penalty and interest under that Act and as if references to sub-section (2) of Section 220 were references to clause (a) of this section.

5. Credit for surcharge.— Any sum paid by or recovered from a company as surcharge on income-tax in pursuance of this Act shall be treated as a payment of tax under the Income-tax Act in respect of the income of the period which would be the previous year for the assessment year commencing on the 1st day of April, 1972, and credit therefor shall be given to the company for the purposes of assessment under Section 140A, Section 141A, Section 143 or Section 144 of the Income-tax Act.

(23rd December, 1971)

An Act to provide for the acquisition of shares of the Jayanti Shipping Company Limited in order to serve better the shipping needs of the nation and to facilitate the promotion and development, in the interests of the general public, of national shipping and for matters connected therewith or incidental thereto.

BE it enacted by Parliament in the Twenty-second Year of the Republic of India as follows:—

CHAPTER I PRELIMINARY

1. Short title and commencement.— (1) This Act may be called THE JAYANTI SHIPPING COMPANY (ACQUISITION OF SHARES) ACT, 1971.

(2) It shall be deemed to have come into force on the 17th day of October, 1971.

*Received the assent of the President on 23-12-1971. Act published in Gaz. of India; 23-12-1971, Pt. II-S. 1 Ext. P. 703. For Statement of Objects and Reasons, see Gaz. of India, 26-11-1970, Pt. II-S. 2, Ext. P. 789.

2. Definitions.— In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires,—

(a) “appointed day” means the date of commencement of this Act;

(b) “company” means the Jayanti Shipping Company Limited, being a company as defined in the Companies Act, 1956, having its registered office at Bombay;

(c) “shareholder” means a person, who, immediately before the appointed day, was registered as a shareholder in the capital of the company;

(d) “Shipping Corporation of India” means the Shipping Corporation of India Limited, being a Government company as defined in the Companies Act, 1956, having its registered office at Bombay;

(e) words and expressions used but not defined in this Act and defined in the Companies Act, 1956, shall have the meanings respectively assigned to them in that Act.

CHAPTER II ACQUISITION OF SHARES OF THE COMPANY

3. Vesting of shares of company in Central Government and compensation therefor.— (1) On the appointed day,—

(a) all shares in the capital of the company shall, by virtue of this Act, be deemed to be transferred to and vested in the Central Government free from all trusts, liabilities and encumbrances; and

(b) as compensation therefor the Central Government shall, in accordance with the provisions of Section 4, pay to the shareholders the sum of rupees four crores and fifty lakhs only in the aggregate.

(2) For the removal of doubts it is hereby declared that the transfer and vesting of shares effected under clause (a) of sub-section (1) shall not be deemed to affect any right of the company subsisting immediately before the appointed day against any shareholder to recover from him any sum of money on the ground that the shareholder has not paid or credited to the company the whole or any part of the value of the shares held by him or on any other ground whatsoever.

4. Apportionment and manner of payment of compensation.— (1) The amount of compensation payable under clause (b) of sub-section (1) of Section 3 to the shareholders shall be apportioned among the shareholders according to the number of shares held by such shareholders.

(2) The amount of compensation payable to a shareholder in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (1) shall be given to him, at his option—

(a) in cash (to be paid by cheque drawn on the Reserve Bank of India) in three equal annual instalments, the amount of each instalment carrying interests at the rate of four per cent. per annum from the appointed day, or

(b) in saleable or otherwise transferable promissory notes or stock certificates of the Central Government issued and repayable at par, and maturing at the end of—

(i) ten years from the appointed day and carrying interest from that day at the rate of four and a half per cent. per annum, or

(ii) thirty years from the appointed day and carrying interest from that day at the rate of five and a half per cent. per annum, or

(c) partly in cash (to be paid by cheque drawn on the Reserve Bank of India) and partly in such number of securities specified in sub-clause (i) or sub-clause (ii), or both, of clause (b), as may be required by the share-holder, or

(d) partly in such number of securities specified in sub-clause (i) of clause (b) and partly in such number of securities specified in sub-clause (ii) of that clause, as may be required by the share-holder.

(3) The first of the three equal annual instalments referred to in clause (a) of sub-section (2) shall be paid, and the securities referred to in clause (b) of that sub-section shall be issued, within sixty days from the date of receipt by the Central Government of the option referred to in that sub-section, or where no such option has been exercised, from the latest date before which such option ought to have been exercised.

(4) The option referred to in sub-section (2) shall be exercised by a share-holder before the expiry of a period of three months from the appointed day (or within such further time, not exceeding three months, as the Central Government may, on the application of the share-holder allow) and the option so exercised shall be final and shall not be altered or rescinded after it has been exercised.

(5) If a share-holder omits or fails to exercise the option referred to in sub-section (2), within the time specified in sub-section (4), he shall be deemed to have opted for payment in securities specified in sub-clause (i) of clause (b) of sub-section (2).

(6) Notwithstanding anything contained in this section, a share-holder may, before the expiry of three months from the appointed day (or within such further time, not exceeding three months, as the Central Government may, on the application of the share-holder, allow) make an application in writing to the Central Government for—

(a) the full payment of the compensation payable to him, if the compensation payable to him does not exceed rupees two lakhs; or

(b) an interim payment of an amount equal to seventy-five per cent. of the face value of the shares in respect of which compensation is payable to him, or rupees two lakhs, whichever is greater, if the compensation payable to him exceeds rupees two lakhs, indicating in such application whether the payment is desired in cash or in securities specified in sub-section (2), or in both.

(7) The Central Government shall, within sixty days from the receipt of the application referred to in sub-section (6), make the full payment or, as the case may be, the interim payment to the share-holder in accordance with the option indicated in such application.

(8) The interim payment made to a share-holder under sub-section (7) shall be set off against the total amount of compensation payable to him under this Act and the balance of the compensation remaining outstanding after such payment shall be given to the share-holder in accordance with the option exercised, or deemed to have been exercised, under sub-section (4) or sub-section (5), as the case may be:

Provided that where any part of the interim payment is obtained by the share-holder in cash, the payment so obtained shall be set off, in the first instance, against the first instalment of the cash payment referred to in sub-section (2), and in case the payment so obtained exceeds the amount of the first instalment, the excess amount shall be adjusted against the second instalment and the balance of such excess amount, if any, against the third instalment of the cash payment.

(9) If any dispute arises as to the person entitled to receive the compensation payable in respect of any share, the Central Government shall deposit the amount of such compensation in the Court for being paid to the person or persons entitled to be paid.

CHAPTER III

MANAGEMENT OF COMPANY.

5. Allocation of shares to Shipping Corporation of India and certain other persons.—(1) All the shares of the company vested in the Central Government by virtue of this Act, except one hundred thereof, shall immediately after they have so vested, stand transferred to and vested in the Shipping Corporation of India.

(2) The Central Government may by order transfer the remaining shares to such persons as may be specified in the order to enable the company to function as a Government company.

(3) On the transfer of shares to the Shipping Corporation of India under sub-section (1) or to any person under sub-section (2), the company shall forthwith register each transferee as a member of the company.

(4) The amount paid by the Central Government for the acquisition of the shares which stand transferred to and vested in the Shipping Corporation of India under sub-section (1) shall be deemed to be the contribution by the Central Government to the equity capital of that Corporation and that Corporation shall issue (if necessary, after amending its memorandum and articles of association) to the Central Government paid-up shares in its capital for a corresponding amount.

6. Amendment of memorandum and articles of association of company.— For the purpose of enabling the company to function as a Government company, the Central Government may, by notification published in the Official Gazette, make such amendments in the memorandum and articles of association of the company as it may consider necessary.

7. Interim management of company.—

(1) Notwithstanding anything contained in the Companies Act, 1956, or in the memorandum or articles of association of the company, on and from the appointed day and till a new Board of directors of the company is duly constituted, the persons specified in the Schedule shall be the directors of the company and shall constitute the Board of Directors of the company.

(2) If any vacancy arises in the Board of directors specified in the Schedule, it shall be filled by the Central Government in such manner as it thinks fit and thereupon the Schedule shall be deemed to be amended accordingly.

(3) No act or proceeding of the Board of directors specified in the Schedule shall be invalid merely by reason of the existence of any vacancy in the membership of the Board.

CHAPTER IV

MISCELLANEOUS

8. Directors, etc., not entitled to compensation.— Notwithstanding anything contained in any law for the time being in force, no director or managerial personnel specified in Sec. 197A of the Companies Act, 1956, or other person entitled to manage the whole or a substantial part of the business and affairs of the company under a special agreement or otherwise shall be entitled to any compensation against the company or the Central Government for the loss of office or for the premature termination of any contract of management entered into by him with the company whether such loss or termination was due to the provisions of the Jayanti Shipping Company (Taking Over of Management) Act, 1966 or this Act.

9. Contracts in bad faith, etc., may be cancelled or varied.— The company may, within three years from the appointed day, make an application to any court having jurisdiction in this behalf for the purpose of cancelling or varying any contract or agreement entered into, at any time before the issue of the notified order under sub-sec. (1) of Section 3 of the Jayanti Shipping Company (Taking Over of Management) Act, 1966, between the company and any other person and the court may, if satisfied after due inquiry that such contract or agreement had been entered into in bad faith and is detrimental to the interests of the company, make an order cancelling or varying (either unconditionally or subject to such conditions as it may think fit to impose) that contract or agreement, and the contract or agreement shall have effect accordingly.

10. Duty to deliver possession of property of company and documents relating to company.— Any person who has in his possession, custody or under his control any property of, or any books, documents or other papers relating to the property and assets of, the company, including any letters, memoranda, notes or other communications between him and the company, shall be liable to account for the said property, books, documents and other papers (including such letters, memoranda, notes or other communications) to the company and shall deliver them up to the company or to such other person as may be authorised for the purpose by the company.

11. Powers of inspection.— (1) For the purpose of ascertaining whether any property is the property of the company or for any other purpose mentioned in this Act or the rules made thereunder, any person authorised by the Central Government in this behalf shall have the right to—

- (a) enter and inspect any premises;
- (b) require any person having the possession, custody or control of any register or record of the company to produce such register or record;
- (c) require the occupier of any property belonging to, or claimed to be the property of, the company, to submit to the person so authorised such accounts, books or other documents or to furnish to him such information as he may reasonably think necessary; and

(d) examine any person having the control of, or employed in connection with, the company and require him to make any statement touching the affairs of the company.

(2) Any person authorised by the Central Government under sub-section (1) shall be deemed to be a public servant within the meaning of Section 21 of the Indian Penal Code.

12. Penalty for false statements.— (1) If any person,—

(a) when required by this Act or by any order under this Act to make any statement or furnish any information, makes any statement or furnishes any information which is false in any material particular and which he knows or believes to be false or does not believe to be true; or

(b) makes any such statement as aforesaid in any book, account, record, return or other document which he is required by any order made under this Act to submit, he shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine which may extend to two thousand rupees, or with both.

(2) Any person, who—

(a) having in his possession, custody or control any property forming part of the assets of the company, wrongfully withholds such property from the company, or any person authorised by the company, or

(b) wrongfully obtains possession of any property forming part of the assets of the company, or

(c) wilfully withholds or fails to produce to any person authorised under this Act, any register, record or other document which may be in his possession, custody or control, or

(d) fails, without any reasonable cause, to submit any accounts, books or other documents, when required to do so, shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine which may extend to two thousand rupees, or with both.

13. Limitation on prosecution.— No Court shall take cognizance of an offence under this Act except with the previous sanction of the Central Government or of an officer authorised by that Government in this behalf.

14. Act to have overriding effect.— The provisions of this Act or any notification, order or rule made thereunder shall have effect notwithstanding anything inconsistent therewith contained in any law other than this Act or in any instrument having effect by virtue of any law other than this Act or in any order made by a civil court.

15. Protection of action taken under this Act.— No suit, prosecution or other legal proceeding shall lie against the Central Government or the Shipping Corporation of India or any officer or other employee serving in connection with the affairs of the company for anything which is in good faith done or intended to be done under this Act.

16. Power to make rules.— (1) The Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, make rules to carry out the purposes of this Act.

(2) Every rule made by the Central Government under this Act shall be laid, as soon as may be after it is made, before each House of Parliament while it is in session for a total period of thirty days which may be comprised in one session or in two successive sessions, and if, before the expiry of the session in which it is so laid or the session immediately following, both Houses agree in making any modification in the rule or both Houses agree that the rule should not be made, the rule shall thereafter have effect only in such modified form or be of no effect, as the case may be; so, however, that any such modification or annulment shall be without prejudice to the validity of anything previously done under that rule.

17. Power to remove difficulties.— If any difficulty arises in giving effect to the provisions of this Act, the Central Government may, by order as occasion requires, do anything (not inconsistent with the provisions of this Act) which appears to it to be necessary for the purpose of removing the difficulty:

Provided that no such order shall be issued after the expiration of two years from the appointed day.

18. Repeals and saving.— (1) The Jayanti Shipping Company (Taking Over of Management) Act, 1966, is hereby repealed.

(2) The Jayanti Shipping Company (Acquisition of Shares) Ordinance, 1971, is hereby repealed:

Provided that notwithstanding such repeal, anything done or any action taken under the said Ordinance shall be deemed to have been done or taken under the corresponding provision of this Act.

THE COKING COAL MINES (EMERGENCY PROVISIONS) ACT, 1971
[ACT NO. 64 OF 1971]*

(23rd December, 1971)

An Act to provide for the taking over, in the public interest, of the management of coking coal mines and coke oven plants, pending nationalisation of such mines and plants.

WHEREAS it is expedient in the public interest that the coking coal mines and coke oven plants should be nationalised with a view to reorganising and reconstructing the coking coal mines and coke oven plants for the purpose of protecting, conserving and promoting scientific development of the resources of coking coal needed to meet the growing requirements of the iron and steel industry;

AND WHEREAS it is expedient, in the public interest, to take over the management of coking coal mines and coke oven plants pending nationalisation thereof;

BE it enacted by Parliament in the Twenty-second Year of the Republic of India as follows:—

CHAPTER I

PRELIMINARY

1. Short title and commencement.—

(1) This Act may be called THE COKING COAL MINES (EMERGENCY PROVISIONS) ACT, 1971.

(2) It shall be deemed to have come into force on the 16th day of October, 1971.

2. Definitions.— In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires,—

(a) "appointed day" means the 17th day of October, 1971;

CHAPTER II

MANAGEMENT OF COKING COAL MINES

3. Management of coking coal mines to vest in Central Government on the appointed day.— (1) On and from the appointed day, the management of all coking coal mines shall vest in the Central Government.

(2) The coking coal mines specified in the First Schedule shall be deemed, for the purposes of this Act, to be the coking coal mines the management of which shall vest, under sub-section (1), in the Central Government:

Provided that if, after the appointed day, any other coal mine is found, after an investigation made by the Coal Board, to contain coking coal, that Board shall make a declaration to that effect and on and from the date of such declaration, such mine shall be deemed, for the purposes of this Act,—

(i) to vest in the Central Government; and

(ii) to be included in the First Schedule and thereupon the provisions of this Act shall become applicable thereto subject to the modification that for the words "appointed day", wherever they occur, the words "the date of the declaration made by the Coal Board under sub-section (2) of Section 3" shall be substituted.

4. Management of coking coal mines pending the appointment of Custodian.— (1) Pending the appointment of a Custodian under Section 5 for any coking coal mine, the person in charge of the management of such mine immediately before the appointed day shall, on and from the appointed day, be in charge of the management of such mine for and on behalf of the Central Government; and the management of such mine shall be carried on by such person subject to the provisions contained in sub-sections (3) and (5) and such directions, if any, as the Central Government may give to him and no other person including the owner, shall, so long as such management continues, exercise any powers of management in relation to the coking coal mine.

(2) Any contract, whether express or implied, providing for the management of any coking coal mine, made before the appointed day between the owner of such mine and any person in charge of the management of such mine immediately before the appointed day, shall be deemed to have terminated on the appointed day.

(3) No person in charge of the management of a coking coal mine shall without the previous approval of the person specified by the Central Government in this behalf in respect of that mine (hereinafter referred to as the "authorised person")—

(a) incur any expenditure from the assets appertaining to the coking coal mine otherwise than for the purpose of making routine payments of salaries or commissions to employees agents or for the purpose of meeting the routine day to day expenditure;

(b) transfer or otherwise dispose of any such assets or create any charge, hypothecation, lien or other incumbrance thereon;

(c) invest in any manner any monies forming part of such assets;

(d) acquire any immovable property out of the monies forming part of such assets;

(e) enter into any contract of service or agency, whether expressly or by implication, for purposes connected wholly or partly with the coking coal mine or vary the terms and conditions of any contract relating to any such transaction subsisting on the appointed day.

(4) The approval of the authorised person may be given either generally in relation to certain classes of transactions relating to the coking coal mine or specially in relation to any of its transactions.

(5) Every person in charge of the management of a coking coal mine shall deposit all securities and documents of title to any assets appertaining to such mine in any Scheduled Bank or Nationalised Bank in which the owner or agent had an account immediately before the appointed day or in any branch of the State Bank in the place where the head office or the principal office of the coking coal mine is situated or, where there is no branch of the State Bank in such place, the nearest branch of the State Bank; and no such security or document shall be withdrawn from the Scheduled Bank, the Nationalised Bank or the State Bank, as the case may be, except with the permission of the authorised person:

Provided that nothing contained in this sub-section shall apply to any security or document of title kept in trust with an Official Trustee in pursuance of the articles of association of any mining company unless the Central Government, by notified order, otherwise directs.

Explanation.— In this sub-section,—

(a) "Scheduled Bank" means a bank included for the time being in the Second Schedule to the Reserve Bank of India Act, 1934;

(b) "State Bank" means the State Bank of India constituted under the State Bank of India Act, 1955;

(c) "Nationalised Bank" means a corresponding new bank as defined in the Banking Companies (Acquisition and Transfer of Undertakings) Act, 1970.

(6) Every person in charge of the management of a coking coal mine shall deliver forthwith to the person specified in this behalf by the Central Government in respect of that coking coal mine, the following documents, namely:—

(a) the minutes book or any other book in India containing all resolutions up to the appointed day of the persons in charge of the management of the coking coal mine before the appointed day;

(b) the current cheque books relating to the coking coal mine which are at the head office or the principal office of the coking coal mine;

(c) all registers or other books containing particulars relating to the investment of any monies appertaining to the coking coal mine including investments on mortgaged properties and all loans granted or advances made.

(7) Without prejudice to the generality of the powers conferred by sub-section (1) and the provisions contained in sub-sections (3), (5) and (6) any direction issued under sub-section (1) may require the persons in charge of the management of the coking coal mine under this Act to furnish to the Central Government or to the authorised person such returns, statements and other information relating to the coking coal mine as may be mentioned in the direction.

(8) The persons in charge of the management of the coking coal mine under this Act shall be entitled to such remuneration, whether by way of allowance or salary or perquisites as the Central Government may fix; and any such person may, by giving one month's notice in writing to the Central Government of his intention so to do, relinquish charge of the management of the coking coal mine.

5. Power of Central Government to appoint Custodians to take over the management of coking coal mines.— (1) The Central Government may, as soon as it is convenient administratively so to do, appoint any person as Custodian for the purpose of taking over the management of the coking coal mine and the person so appointed shall carry on the management of such mine for and on behalf of the Central Government.

(2) (a) The Central Government may also appoint a person as the Custodian-General for exercising supervision and control over all the coking coal mines the management of which is taken over under this Act, and on such appointment, every Custodian, appointed under sub-section (1), shall act under the guidance, control and supervision of the Custodian-General.

(b) The Central Government may also appoint one or more persons as Additional Custodian-General or Deputy Custodian-General for assisting the Custodian-General in the exercise of his powers and duties under this Act and the Custodian-General may delegate all or such of his powers as he may think fit, to the Additional or Deputy Custodian-General.

(c) Every Additional or Deputy Custodian-General shall exercise the powers delegated to him under the control and supervision of the Custodian-General.

(3) On the appointment of a Custodian under sub-section (1), the charge of management of the coking coal mine shall vest in him and all persons in charge of the management of such mine immediately before such appointment shall cease to be in charge of such management and shall be bound to deliver to the Custodian all assets, books of account, registers or other documents in their custody relating to the coking coal mine and any contract, whether express or implied, providing for the management of any coking coal mine, made before the appointed day between the owner of such mine and such persons, shall be deemed to have terminated on the date on which the Custodian is appointed.

(4) Nothing contained in Section 4 shall apply to any coking coal mine the management of which has been taken over by the Custodian, but the Central Government may issue such directions to the Custodian as to his powers and duties as it deems desirable in the circumstances of the case, and the Custodian may apply to the Central Government at any time for instructions as to the manner in which he shall conduct the management of the coking coal mine or in relation to any matter arising in the course of such management.

(5) The Custodian shall receive from the funds of the coking coal mine for the charge of management of which he is appointed under sub-section (1) such remuneration as the Central Government may fix.

(6) The Custodian, the Custodian-General, Additional Custodian-General and Deputy Custodian-General shall hold office during the pleasure of the Central Government.

(7) The Central Government may, if it is of opinion that it is necessary so to do for the proper management of the coking coal mines, the management of which has vested in it under Section 3, appoint a Government company† whether in existence at the commencement of this Act or incorporated after such commencement, as the Custodian of all the coking coal mines specified in the First Schedule, and all coke oven plants specified in the Second Schedule, and on such appointment, every person appointed as Custodian or the Custodian-General or Additional or Deputy Custodian-General under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2), as the case may be, shall vacate his office as such and deliver to the Government company, so appointed, all assets, books of account, registers or other documents in his custody relating to the coking coal mine or the coke oven plant, as the case may be.

(8) On the appointment of a Government company as Custodian, the provisions of sub-sections (3), (4) and (5) shall apply to it as they apply to a Custodian appointed under sub-section (1).

6. Payment of amount.— (1) Every owner of a coking coal mine shall be given by the Central Government an amount, in cash, for vesting in it, under Section 3, the management of such mine.

(2) For every month during which the management of the coking coal mine remains vested in the Central Government, the amount referred to in sub-section (1) shall be computed at the rate of twenty-five paise per tonne of coal on the highest monthly production of coal from such mine during any month in the years 1968, 1969, 1970 and 1971:

Provided that if in relation to any such coking coal mine, there was no production of coal during the said years, the amount referred to in sub-section (1) shall be computed at the rate of five paise per tonne of such highest monthly coal producing capacity of the coking coal mine, before the appointed day, as may be assessed and declared by the Coal Board:

Provided further that in relation to a coking coal mine, the operations of which were immediately before the appointed day under the control of a managing contractor, the amount, as computed under this sub-section, shall be apportioned between the owner of the coking coal mine and such managing contractor in such proportions as may be agreed upon by or between the owner and such contractor, and in the event of there being no such agreement, in such proportions as may be determined by the principal civil court of original jurisdiction within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the head office of the coking coal mine is situated.

CHAPTER III MANAGEMENT OF COKE OVEN PLANTS

7. Management of coke oven plants to vest in the Central Government on the specified date.— On and from such date as the Central Government may, by notified order, specify in this behalf (hereafter, in this Chapter, referred to as the "specified date"), the management of the coke oven plants specified in the Second Schedule shall vest in the Central Government.

8. Payment of amount.— (1) Every owner of a coke oven plant specified in the Second Schedule and every owner of a coke oven plant which falls within the definition of coking coal mine, shall be given by the Central Government an amount, in cash, for vesting in it, under Section 7 or Section 3, as the case may be, the management of such coke oven plant.

(2) For every month during which the management of the coke oven plant remains vested in the Central Government, the amount referred to in sub-section (1) shall be computed at the rate of—

(a) seventy-five paise per tonne of by-product coke; and

(b) fifty-five paise per tonne of beehive coke, on the highest monthly production of coke from such coke oven plant during any month in the years 1968, 1969, 1970 and 1971.

(3) For the avoidance of doubts, it is hereby declared that the owner of a coke oven plant, the management of which has vested in the Central Government under Section 3, shall be given, in addition to the amount payable under Section 6, such amount as is referred to in sub-section (1).

9. Provisions of Sections 4 and 5 and Sections 10 to 20 to apply to this Chapter.—The provisions of Sections 4 and 5 and Sections 10 to 20 (both inclusive) shall apply to a coke oven plant, the management of which has vested in the Central Government under Section 7, as they apply to a coking coal mine, and references therein to a coking coal mine and the appointed day shall be construed, unless the context otherwise requires, as references, respectively, to a coke oven plant and the specified date.

CHAPTER IV MISCELLANEOUS

10. Penalties.— If any person—

(a) fails to deliver to the Custodian any assets, books of account, registers or any other document in his custody relating to the coking coal mine in respect of the management of which the Custodian has been appointed, or

(b) retains any property of such coking coal mine or removes or destroys it, or

(c) fails to comply with the provisions contained in sub-section (3) or sub-section (5) or sub-section (6) of Section 4, or

(d) fails to comply with any directions issued under sub-section (1) or sub-section (4) of Section 5, he shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine which may extend to ten thousand rupees, or with both.

11. Offences by companies.— (1) Where an offence under this Act has been committed by a company, every person who at the time the offence was committed was in charge of, and was responsible to, the company for the conduct of the business of the company as well as the company, shall be deemed to be guilty of the offence and shall be liable to be proceeded against and punished accordingly:

Provided that nothing contained in this sub-section shall render any such person liable to any punishment, if he proves that the offence was committed without his knowledge or that he had exercised all due diligence to prevent the commission of such offence.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1), where any offence under this Act has been committed by a company and it is proved that the offence has been committed with the consent or connivance of, or is attributable to, any neglect on the part of, any director, manager, secretary or other officer of the company, such director, manager, secretary or other officer shall be deemed to be guilty of that offence and shall be liable to be proceeded against and punished accordingly.

Explanation.— For the purposes of this section,—

(a) "company" means any body corporate and includes a firm or other association of individuals; and

(b) "director", in relation to a firm, means a partner in the firm.

12. Mining companies not to be wound up by Court.— No proceeding for the winding up of a mining company, the management of whose coking coal mines has vested in the Central Government under this Act or for the appointment of a Receiver in respect of such business, shall lie in any Court except with the consent of the Central Government.

13. Exclusion of period of operation of the Act for computing period of limitation.— In computing the period of limitation prescribed by law for the time being in force for any suit or application against any person by a mining company in respect of any matter arising out of any transaction in relation to the coking coal mine, the time during which this Act is in force shall be excluded.

14. Effect of Act on other laws.— The provisions of this Act shall have effect notwithstanding anything inconsistent therewith contained in any other law for the time being in force or in any instrument having effect by virtue of any law other than this Act, or in any decree or order of any Court.

15. Delegation of powers.— (1) The Central Government may, by notified order, direct that all or any of the powers exercisable by it under this Act may also be exercised by any person or persons as may be specified in the order.

(2) Whenever any delegation of power is made under sub-section (1), the person to whom such power has been delegated shall act under the direction, control and supervision of the Central Government.

16. Protection of action taken in good faith.— (1) No suit, prosecution or other legal proceeding shall lie against the Custodian-General, Additional Custodian-General, Deputy Custodian-General, any Custodian or authorised person in respect of anything which is in good faith done or intended to be done under this Act.

(2) No suit or other legal proceeding shall lie against the Central Government or the Custodian-General, Additional Custodian-General, Deputy Custodian-General, any Custodian or authorised person for any damage caused or likely to be caused by anything which is in good faith done or intended to be done under this Act.

17. Contracts, etc., in bad faith may be cancelled or varied.— (1) If the Central Government is satisfied, after such inquiry as it may think fit, that any contract or agreement entered into, at any time within twelve months immediately preceding the appointed day, between the owner or agent of a coking coal mine and any other person, has been entered into in bad faith and is detrimental to the interests of the coking coal mine, make an order cancelling or varying (either unconditionally or subject to such conditions as it may think fit to impose) the contract or agreement and thereafter the contract or agreement shall have effect accordingly:

Provided that no contract or agreement shall be cancelled or varied except after giving to the parties to the contract or agreement a reasonable opportunity of being heard.

(2) Any person aggrieved by an order made under sub-section (1) may make an application to the principal court of civil jurisdiction within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the head office of the coking coal mine is situated for the variation or reversal of such order and thereupon such court may, confirm, modify or reverse such order.

18. Power to terminate contract of employment.— If the Custodian is of opinion that any contract of employment entered into by any owner or agent of a coking coal mine, at any time before the appointed day, is unduly onerous, he may, by giving to the employee one month's notice in writing or the salary or wages for one month in lieu thereof, terminate such contract of employment.

19. Power to make rules.— (1) The Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, make rules to carry out the provisions of this Act.

(2) In particular, and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, such rules may provide for all or any of the following matters, namely:—

(a) the manner in which the coking coal mines will be managed by the Custodians, under the control and supervision of the Custodian-General;

(b) the constitution of a Board of Management, by whatever name called, for advising the Custodian-General in the management of the coking coal mines;

(c) the form and manner in which accounts of the coking coal mines shall be maintained;

(d) any other matter in relation to which such rule is required to be, or may be, made.

(3) Every rule made under this Act shall be laid, as soon as may be after it is made, before each House of Parliament while it is in session for a total period of thirty days which may be comprised in one session or in two successive sessions and if, before the expiry of the session in which it is so laid or the session immediately following, both Houses agree in making any modification in the rule or both Houses agree that the rule should not be made, the rule shall thereafter have effect only in such modified form or be of no effect, as the case may be; so, however, that any such modification or annulment shall be without prejudice to the validity of anything previously done under that rule.

20. Coking coal mines to which the Act shall not apply.— Nothing in this Act shall apply to any coking coal mine—

(a) owned or managed by a Government company or corporation owned or controlled by Government;

(b) owned or managed by a company engaged in the production of iron or steel:

Provided that this section shall not extend to such mine or part thereof which, in the opinion of the Central Government, is in excess of the requirement for the production of iron and steel by that company.

21. Power to remove difficulties.— If any difficulty arises in giving effect to the provisions of this Act, the Central Government may, by order not inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, remove the difficulty:

Provided that no such order shall be made after the expiry of a period of two years from the commencement of this Act.

22. Repeal and savings.— (1) The Coking Coal Mines (Emergency Provisions) Ordinance, 1971, is hereby repealed.

(2) Notwithstanding such repeal, anything done, any action taken or any appointment, declaration or order made under the Ordinance so repealed, shall be deemed to have been done, taken or made, as the case may be, under the corresponding provisions of this Act.

THE ASIAN REFRACTORIES LIMITED (ACQUISITION OF UNDERTAKING)
ACT, 1971

[ACT NO. 65 OF 1971]*

(23rd December, 1971)

An Act to provide for the acquisition of the undertaking of the Asian Refractories Limited for the purpose of augmenting supplies of refractories to meet the essential requirements of the iron and steel industry.

WHEREAS the Asian Refractories Limited is in liquidation and has stopped its production;

AND WHEREAS the total production of refractories in India is inadequate and insufficient to meet the essential requirements of the iron and steel industry;

AND WHEREAS the supplies of refractories can be augmented by speedily bringing the Asian Refractories Limited into operation and expanding its capacity thereafter;

BE it enacted by Parliament in the Twenty-second Year of the Republic of India as follows:—

1. Short title and Commencement.—(1) This Act may be called THE ASIAN REFRACTORIES LIMITED (ACQUISITION OF UNDERTAKING) ACT, 1971.

(2) It shall be deemed to have come into force on the 17th day of October, 1971.

2. Definitions.— In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires,—

(a) "appointed day" means the 17th day of October, 1971;

(b) "company" means the Asian Refractories Limited, being a company as defined in the Companies Act, 1956, having its registered office in the State of West Bengal;

(c) words and expression used herein and not defined but defined in the Companies Act, 1956, have the meanings respectively assigned to them in that Act.

3. Undertaking of the company to vest in the Central Government.— On and from the appointed day, the undertaking of the company shall, by virtue of this Act, be transferred to, and shall vest in, the Central Government, free from all incumbrances.

4. General effect of vesting.—(1) The undertaking of the company shall be deemed to include all assets, rights, powers, authorities and privileges and all property, movable and immovable, cash balances, reserve funds, investments and all other rights and interests in, or arising out of, such property as were immediately before the appointed day in the ownership, possession, power or control of the company, whether within or outside India, and all books of accounts, registers and all other documents of whatever nature relating thereto.

(2) All property included as aforesaid in the undertaking which has vested in the Central Government under Section 3 shall, by force of such vesting, be freed and discharged from any trusts, obligations, mortgages, charges, liens and other incumbrances affecting it, and any attachment, injunction or any decree or order of any court restricting the use of such property in any manner shall be deemed to have been withdrawn.

(3) If, on the appointed day, any suit, appeal or other proceeding of whatever nature in relation to any business of the undertaking of the company is pending by or against the company, the same shall not abate, be discontinued or be, in any way, prejudicially affected by reason of the transfer of the undertaking of the company or of any thing contained in this Act but the suit, appeal or other proceeding may be continued, prosecuted and enforced by or against the company.

5. Duty to deliver possession of the undertaking and documents relating thereto.

—(1) Notwithstanding any decree, judgment or order of any court or anything contained in any other law for the time being in force, the Official Liquidator of the company or any other person, in whose possession or custody or under whose control the undertaking of the company or any part thereof may be, shall deliver possession of the undertaking of the company or such part thereof, as the case may be, to the Central Government forthwith.

(2) The Official Liquidator or any other person who has, on the appointed day, in his possession or under his control any books, documents or other papers relating to the undertaking of the company which has vested, under Section 3, in the Central Government, shall be liable to account for the said books, documents or other papers to the Central Government and shall deliver them up to the Central Government or to such person as the Central Government may specify in this behalf.

(3) The Central Government may take, or cause to be taken, all necessary steps for securing possession of the undertaking which has vested in it under Section 3.

6. Duty to furnish particulars.— The company shall, within such period as the Central Government may allow in this behalf furnish to that Government a complete inventory of all the properties and assets of the company, as on the appointed day, pertaining to the undertaking which has vested in the Central Government under Section 3.

7. Payment of compensation.— (1) The Central Government shall deposit, in Court, in cash, to the credit of the company a sum of rupees eighty-one lakhs as compensation in respect of the transfer, under Section 3, to the Central Government of the undertaking of the company.

(2) Out of the total amount of compensation referred to in sub-section (1),—

(a) a sum of rupees eight lakhs shall be deposited by the Central Government, within three months from the appointed day, to the credit of the company;

(b) the balance of the amount of compensation shall be deposited in Court by the Central Government in ten equal annual instalments, the first of which shall become due on the date on which a period of one year expires from the appointed day and the subsequent instalments shall become due accordingly; and

(c) each instalment of the compensation, referred to in clause (b), shall carry interest at the rate of seven per cent. per annum from the commencement of this Act.

(3) For the avoidance of doubts, it is hereby declared that the compensation referred to in sub-section (1) represents the realisable value of the assets of the undertaking, which has vested in the Central Government under Section 3, and the liabilities of the undertaking shall be met from the said amount of compensation.

(4) In meeting the liabilities of the undertaking which has vested in the Central Government under Section 3, the Court, by which the company owning such undertaking is being wound up, shall distribute, in due course of administration, the amount of the compensation amongst the creditors and, if there is any surplus left after such distribution, amongst the contributories of the company in accordance with their rights and interests.

8. Management and administration of the undertaking.— The undertaking, which has vested in the Central Government under Section 3, shall be managed on behalf of the Central Government by such person or body of persons as may be nominated by the Central Government in this behalf, and such person or body of persons shall carry on the management in accordance with such regulations as may be made by the Central Government.

9. Penalties.— (1) Any person who—

(a) having in his possession, custody or control any property forming part of the undertaking of the company, wrongfully withholds such property from the Central Government; or

(b) wrongfully obtains possession of any property forming part of the undertaking of the company which has vested in the Central Government under this Act; or

(c) wilfully withholds or fails to furnish to the Central Government or any person specified by that Government as required by sub-section (2) of Section 5 any document which may be in his possession, custody or control; or

(d) wilfully fails to furnish an inventory as required under Section 6; or

(e) when required to furnish such inventory, furnishes any particulars therein which are false and which he either knows or believes to be false or does not believe to be true, shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both:

Provided that the court trying any offence under clause (a) or clause (b) or clause (c) of this sub-section may, at the time of convicting the accused person, order him to deliver up or refund within a time to be fixed by the court any property wrongfully withheld or wrongfully obtained or any document wilfully withheld or not furnished:

Provided further that nothing contained in this section or any other provision of this Act shall render any person liable to be convicted of an offence in respect of anything done or omitted to be done by him before the appointed day.

(2) No court shall take cognizance of an offence punishable under this section except with the previous sanction of the Central Government or of an officer authorised by that Government in this behalf.

10. Protection of action taken in good faith.— No suit, prosecution or other legal proceeding shall lie against the Central Government or an officer or other employee serving in connection with the affairs of the undertaking of the company which is in good faith done or intended to be done under this Act.

11. Repeal and savings.— (1) The Asian Refractories Limited (Acquisition of Undertaking) Ordinance, 1971, is hereby repealed.

(2) Notwithstanding such repeal, anything done or any action taken under the Ordinance so repealed shall be deemed to have been done or taken under the corresponding provisions of this Act.

THE ESSENTIAL COMMODITIES (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1971

[ACT NO. 66 OF 1971]*

(23rd December, 1971)

An Act further to amend the Essential Commodities Act, 1955.

BE it enacted by Parliament in the Twenty-second Year of the Republic of India as follows:—

1. Short title.— This Act may be called THE ESSENTIAL COMMODITIES (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1971.

*Received the assent of the President on 23-12-1971. Act published in Gaz. of India; 23-12-1971, Pt. II-S.1, Ext. P. 743. For Statement of Objects and Reasons, see Gaz. of India; 14-12-1971, Pt. II-S. 2, Ext. P. 1103.

2. Amendment of Section 3.— In Section 3 of the Essential Commodities Act, 1955 (hereinafter referred to as the principal Act),—

(i) in sub-section (2), for clause (j), the following clause shall be substituted, namely:—

“(j) for any incidental and supplementary matters, including in particular, the entry, search or examination of premises, aircraft, vessels, vehicles or other conveyances and animals, and the seizure by a person authorised to make such entry, search, or examination,—

(i) of any articles in respect of which such person has reason to believe that a contravention of the order has been, is being, or is about to be, committed and any packages, coverings or receptacles in which such articles are found;

(ii) of any aircraft, vessel, vehicle or other conveyance or animal used in carrying such articles, if such person has reason to believe that such aircraft, vessel, vehicle or other conveyance or animal is liable to be forfeited under the provisions of this Act;

(iii) of any books of accounts and documents which in the opinion of such person would be useful, for, or relevant to, any proceedings under this Act and the return of such books of accounts and documents to the person from whom they were seized after copies thereof or extracts therefrom, as certified by that person in the manner specified in the order, have been taken.”;

(ii) in sub-section (3B),—

(a) in the opening portion, for the words “there shall be paid to that person such price for the foodgrains, edible oilseeds or edible oils as may be specified in that order having regard to—”, the words “there shall be paid as the price for the foodgrains, edible oilseeds or edible oils—” shall be substituted;

(b) in clause (i), for the word “and” occurring at the end, the word “or” shall be substituted;

(c) in clause (ii), for the words “the price”, the words “where no such price is fixed, the price” shall be substituted.

3. Amendment of Section 5.—In Section 5 of the principal Act, for the words and figure “the power to make orders under Section 3”, the words and figure “the power to make orders or issue notifications under Section 3” shall be substituted.

4. Act 47 of 1964 to be made permanent.— The Essential Commodities (Amendment) Act, 1964, the duration of which extends up to and including the 31st day of December, 1971, is hereby made permanent, and accordingly that Act shall have effect subject to the modification that in Section 1 of that Act, sub-section (3) shall be omitted.

5. Amendment of Section 12A.— In Section 12A of the principal Act (inserted therein by Section 2 of Act 47 of 1964), to sub-section (1), the following provisos shall be added, namely:—

“Provided that—

(a) every such notification issued after the commencement of the Essential Commodities (Amendment) Act, 1971, shall, unless sooner rescinded, cease to operate at the expiration of two years after the publication of such notification in the Official Gazette;

(b) every such notification in force immediately before such commencement shall, unless sooner rescinded, cease to operate at the expiration of two years after such commencement;

Provided further that nothing in the foregoing proviso shall affect any case relating to the contravention of a special order specified in any such notification if proceedings by way of summary trial have commenced before that notification is rescinded or ceases to operate and the provisions of this section shall continue to apply to that case as if that notification had not been rescinded or had not ceased to operate.”.

THE INDIAN TARIFF (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1971

[ACT NO. 67 OF 1971]*

THE UTTAR PRADESH CANTONMENTS (CONTROL OF RENT AND EVICTION) (REPEAL) ACT, 1971

[ACT NO. 68 OF 1971]*

(23rd December, 1971)

An Act to provide for the repeal of the Uttar Pradesh Cantonments (Control of Rent and Eviction) Act, 1952.

BE it enacted by Parliament in the Twenty-second Year of the Republic of India as follows:—

1. Short title.— This Act may be called THE UTTAR PRADESH CANTONMENTS (CONTROL OF RENT AND EVICTION) (REPEAL) ACT, 1971.

2. Repeal of Act 10 of 1952.— On and from the date on which the United Provinces (Temporary) Control of Rent and Eviction Act, 1947 is extended by notification under Section 3 of the Cantonments (Extension of Rent Control Laws) Act, 1957, to the cantonments in the State of Uttar Pradesh, the Uttar Pradesh Cantonments (Control of Rent and Eviction) Act, 1952 shall stand repealed.

3. Savings.— (1) The repeal of the Uttar Pradesh Cantonments (Control of Rent and Eviction) Act, 1952 by Section 2 shall not affect—

(a) the previous operation of the said Act or anything duly done or suffered thereunder; or

(b) any right, privilege, obligation or liability acquired, accrued or incurred under the said Act; or

(c) any penalty, forfeiture or punishment incurred in respect of any offence committed against the said Act; or

(d) any investigation, legal proceeding or remedy in respect of any such right, privilege, obligation, liability, penalty, forfeiture or punishment as aforesaid, and any such investigation, legal proceeding or remedy may be instituted, continued or enforced and any such penalty, forfeiture or punishment may be imposed as if the said Act had not been repealed.

*Received the assent of the President on 23-12-1971. Act published in Gaz. of India; 23-12-1971, Pt. II-S. 1, Ext. P. 739. For Statement of Objects and Reasons, see Gaz. of India; 12-8-1971, Pt. II-S. 2, Ext. P. 657.

(2) Subject to the provisions contained in sub-section (1), anything done or any action taken under the Act repealed by Section 2 shall be deemed to have been done or taken under the corresponding provisions of the United Provinces (Temporary) Control of Rent and Eviction Act, 1947 extended by notification as provided in that section to the cantonments in the State of Uttar Pradesh and shall continue to be in force accordingly unless and until superseded by anything done or any action taken under the Act so extended.

THE PREVENTION OF INSULTS TO NATIONAL HONOUR ACT, 1971

(Act No. 69 of 1971)*

(23rd December, 1971.)

An Act to Prevent Insults to National Honour.

BE it enacted by Parliament in the Twenty-second Year of the Republic of India as follows:—

1. Short title and extent.— (1) This Act may be called THE PREVENTION OF INSULTS TO NATIONAL HONOUR ACT, 1971.

(2) It extends to the whole of India.

2. Insult to Indian National Flag and Constitution of India.— Whoever in any public place or in any other place within public view burns, mutilates, defaces, defiles, disfigures, destroys, tramples upon or otherwise brings into contempt (whether by words, either spoken or written, or by acts) the Indian National Flag or the Constitution of India or any part thereof, shall be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

Explanation 1.— Comments expressing disapprobation or criticism of the Constitution or of the Indian National Flag or of any measures of the Government with a view to obtain an amendment of the Constitution of India or an alteration of the Indian National Flag by lawful means do not constitute an offence under this section.

Explanation 2.— The expression "Indian National Flag" includes any picture, painting, drawing or photograph, or other visible representation of the Indian National Flag, or of any part or parts thereof, made of any substance or represented on any substance.

Explanation 3.— The expression "public place" means any place intended for use by, or accessible to, the public and includes any public conveyance.

3. Prevention of singing of Indian National Anthem, etc.— Whoever inten-

(1) This Act may be called THE INDUSTRIES (DEVELOPMENT AND REGULATION) AMENDMENT ACT, 1971.

(2) It shall be deemed to have come into force on the 1st day of November, 1971.

2. Amendment of Section 3.— In the Industries (Development and Regulation) Act, 1951 (hereinafter referred to as the principal Act), in Section 3,—

(i) after clause (a), the following clauses shall be inserted, namely:—

‘(aa) “current assets” means bank balances and cash and includes such other assets or reserves as are expected to be realised in cash or sold or consumed within a period of not more than twelve months in the ordinary course of business, such as, stock-in-trade, amounts due from sundry debtors for sale of goods and for services rendered, advance tax payments and bills receivable, but does not include sums credited to a provident fund, a pension fund, a gratuity fund or any other fund for the welfare of the employees, maintained by a company owning an industrial undertaking;

(ab) “current liabilities” means liabilities which must be met on demand or within a period of twelve months from the date they are incurred; and includes any current liability which is suspended under Section 18FB;”;

(ii) after clause (c), the following clause shall be inserted, namely:—

‘(cc) “High Court” means the High Court having jurisdiction in relation to the place at which the registered office of a company is situate’;

(iii) after clause (i), the following clause shall be inserted, namely:—

‘(j) words and expressions used herein but not defined in this Act and defined in the Companies Act, 1956, have the meanings respectively assigned to them in that Act.”.

3. Insertion of new Section 15A.—

After Section 15 of the principal Act, the following section shall be inserted, namely:—

“15A. Power to investigate into the affairs of a company in liquidation.—

(1) Where a company, owning an industrial undertaking is being wound up by or under the supervision of the High Court, and the business of such company is not being continued, the Central Government may, if it is of opinion that it is necessary, in the interests of the general public and, in particular, in the interests of production, supply or distribution of articles or class of articles relatable to the concerned scheduled industry, to investigate into the possibility of running or re-starting the industrial undertaking, make an application to the High Court praying for permission to make, or cause to be made, an investigation into such possibility by such person or body of persons as that Government may appoint for the purpose.

(2) Where an application is made by the Central Government under sub-section (1), the High Court shall, notwithstanding anything contained in the Companies Act, 1956, or in any other law for the time being in force, grant the permission prayed for.”.

4. In Section 18 of the principal Act in sub-section (1), after the word and figures “section 15”, the words, figures and letter “or Section 15A” shall be inserted.

5. Insertion of new Section 18AA.—

After Section 18A of the principal Act, the following section shall be inserted, namely:—

“18AA. Power to take over industrial undertakings without investigation under certain circumstances.— (1) Without prejudice to any other provision of this Act, if, from the documentary or other evidence in its possession, the Central Government is satisfied, in relation to an industrial undertaking, that—

(a) the persons in charge of such industrial undertaking have, by reckless investments or creation of incumbrances on the assets of the industrial undertaking, or by diversion of funds, brought about a situation which is likely to affect the production of articles manufactured or produced in the industrial undertaking, and that immediate action is necessary to prevent such a situation; or

(b) it has been closed for a period of not less than three months (whether by reason of the voluntary winding up of the company owning the industrial undertaking or for any other reason) and such closure is prejudicial to the concerned scheduled industry and that the financial condition of the company owning the industrial undertaking and the condition of the plant and machinery of such undertaking are such that it is possible to restart the undertaking and such re-starting is necessary in the interests of the general public, it may, by a notified order, authorise any person or body of persons (hereafter referred to as the "authorised person") to take over the management of the whole or any part of the industrial undertaking or to exercise in respect of the whole or any part of the undertaking such functions of control as may be specified in the order.

(2) The provisions of sub-section (2) of Section 18A shall, as far as may be apply to a notified order made under sub-section (1) as they apply to a notified order made under sub-section (1) of Section 18A.

(3) Nothing contained in sub-section (1) and sub-section (2) shall apply to an industrial undertaking owned by a company which is being wound up by or under the supervision of the Court.

(4) Where any notified order has been made under sub-section (1), the person or body of persons having, for the time being, charge of the management or control of the industrial undertaking, whether by or under the orders of any court or any contract, instrument or otherwise, shall, notwithstanding anything contained in such order, contract, instrument or other arrangement, forthwith make over the charge of management or control, as the case may be, of the industrial undertaking to the authorised person.

(5) The provisions of Sections 18B to 18E, (both inclusive) shall, as far as may be, apply to, or in relation to, the industrial undertaking in respect of which a notified order has been made under sub-section (1), as they apply to an industrial undertaking in relation to which a notified order has been issued under Section 18A.

6. Insertion of new Chapters IIIA, IIIAB and IIAC.— After Chapter IIIA of the principal Act, the following Chapters shall be inserted, namely:—

'CHAPTER IIIA
MANAGEMENT OR CONTROL OF INDUSTRIAL UNDERTAKINGS OWNED BY COMPANIES IN LIQUIDATION

18FA. Power of Central Government to authorise, with the permission of the High Court, persons to take over management or control of industrial undertakings.—

(1) If the Central Government is of opinion that there are possibilities of running or re-starting an industrial undertaking, in relation to which an investigation has been made under Section 15A, and that such industrial undertaking should be run or re-started, as the case may be, for maintaining or increasing the production, supply or distribution of articles or class of articles relating to the Scheduled industry, needed by the general public, that Government may make an application to the High Court praying for permission to appoint any person or body of persons to take over the management of the industrial undertaking or to exercise in respect of the whole or any part of the industrial undertaking such functions of control as may be specified in the application.

(2) Where an application is made under sub-section (1), the High Court shall make an order empowering the Central Government to authorise any person or body of persons (hereinafter referred to as the "authorised persons") to take over the management of the industrial undertaking or to exercise functions of control in relation to the whole or any part of the industrial undertaking (hereinafter referred to as the "concerned part") for a period not exceeding five years:

Provided that if the Central Government is of opinion that it is expedient in the interests of the general public that the authorised person should continue to manage the industrial undertaking, or continue to exercise functions of control in relation to the concerned part, as the case may be, after the expiry of the period of five years aforesaid, it may make an application to the High Court for the continuance of such management or functions of control, for such period, not exceeding two years at a time, as may be specified in the application and thereupon the High Court may make an order permitting the authorised person to continue to manage the industrial undertaking or to exercise functions of control in relation to the concerned part:

Provided further that the total period of such continuance (after the expiry of the initial period of five years) shall not, in any case, be permitted to exceed ten years.

(3) Where an order has been made by the High Court under sub-section (2), the High Court shall direct the Official Liquidator or any other person having, for the time being, charge of the management or control of the industrial undertaking, whether by or under the orders of any court, or any contract or instrument or otherwise, to make over the management of such undertaking or the concerned part, as the case may be, to the authorised person and thereupon the authorised person shall be deemed to be the Official Liquidator in respect of the industrial undertaking or the concerned part, as the case may be.

(4) Before making over the possession of the industrial undertaking or the concerned part to the authorised person, the Official Liquidator shall make a complete inventory of all the assets and liabilities of the industrial undertaking or the concerned part, as the case may be, in the manner specified in Section 18FG and deliver a copy of such inventory to the authorised person, who shall, after verifying the correctness thereof, sign on the duplicate copy thereof as evidence of the receipt of the inventory by him.

(5) On taking over the management of the industrial undertaking, or on the commencement of the exercise of functions of control in relation to the concerned part, the authorised person shall take immediate steps to run the industrial undertaking or the concerned part as to ensure the maintenance of production.

(6) The authorised person may, on such terms and conditions and subject to such limitations or restrictions as may be prescribed, raise any loan for the purpose of running the industrial undertaking or the concerned part, and may, for that purpose, create a floating charge on the current assets of the industrial undertaking or the concerned part, as the case may be.

(7) Where the authorised person is of opinion that the replacement or repair of any machinery of the industrial undertaking or the concerned part is necessary for the purpose of efficient running of the industrial undertaking or such part, he shall, on such terms and conditions and subject to such limitations or restrictions as may be prescribed, make such replacement or repair, as the case may be.

(8) The loan obtained by the authorised person shall be recovered from the assets of the industrial undertaking or the concerned part, in such manner and subject to such conditions as may be prescribed.

(9) For the purpose of running the industrial undertaking, or exercising functions of control in relation to the concerned part, the authorised person may employ such of the former employees of the industrial undertaking whose services became discharged by reason of the winding up of the company owning such undertaking and every such person employed by the authorised person shall be deemed to have entered into a fresh contract of service with the company.

(10) The proceedings in the winding up of the company in so far as they relate to—

(a) the industrial undertaking, the management of which has been taken over by the authorised person under this section, or

(b) the concerned part in relation to which any function of control is exercised by the authorised person under this section, shall, during the period of such management or control, remain stayed, and in computing the period of limitation for the enforcement of any right, privilege, obligation or liability in relation to such undertaking or the concerned part, the period during which such proceedings remained stayed shall be excluded.

CHAPTER IIIAB

POWER TO PROVIDE RELIEF TO CERTAIN INDUSTRIAL UNDERTAKINGS 18FB. Power of Central Government to make certain declarations in relation to industrial undertakings, the management or control of which has been taken over under Section 18A, Section 18AA or Sec. 18FA.—

(1) The Central Government may, if it is satisfied, in relation to an industrial undertaking or any part thereof, the management or control of which has been taken over under Section 18A, whether before or after the commencement of the Industries (Development and Regulation) Amendment Act, 1971, or under Section 18AA or Section 18FA, that it is necessary so to do in the interests of the general public with a view to preventing fall in the volume of production of any scheduled industry, it may, by notified order, declare that—

(a) all or any of the enactments specified in the Third Schedule shall not apply or shall apply with such adaptations, whether by way of modification, addition or omission (which does not, however, affect the policy of the said enactments) to such industrial undertaking, as may be specified in such notified order, or

(b) the operation of all or any of the contracts, assurances of property, agreements, settlements, awards, standing orders or other instruments in force (to which such industrial undertaking or the company owning such undertaking is a party or which may be applicable to such industrial undertaking or company) immediately before the date of issue of such notified order shall remain suspended or that all or any of the rights, privileges, obligations and liabilities accruing or arising thereunder before the said date, shall remain suspended or shall be enforceable with such adaptations and in such manner as may be specified in the notified order.

(2) The notified order made under sub-section (1) shall remain in force, in the first instance, for a period of one year, but the duration of such notified order may be extended from time to time by a further notified order by a period not exceeding one year at a time;

Provided that no such notified order shall, in any case, remain in force—

(a) after the expiry of the period for which the management of the industrial undertaking was taken over under S. 18A, Section 18AA or Section 18FA, or

(b) for more than five years in the aggregate from the date of issue of the first notified order, whichever is earlier.

(3) Any notified order made under sub-section (1) shall have effect notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in any other law, agreement or instrument or any decree or order of a court, tribunal, officer or other authority or of any submission, settlement or standing order.

(4) Any remedy for the enforcement of any right, privilege, obligation or liability referred to in clause (b) of sub-section (1) and suspended or modified by a notified order made under that sub-section shall, in accordance with the terms of the notified order, remain suspended or modified, and all proceedings relating thereto pending before any court, tribunal, officer or other authority shall accordingly remain stayed or be continued subject to such adaptations, so, however, that on the notified order ceasing to have effect—

(a) any right, privilege, obligation or liability so remaining suspended or modified shall become revived and enforceable as if the notified order had never been made;

(b) any proceeding so remaining stayed shall be proceeded with, subject to the provisions of any law which may then be in force, from the stage which had been reached when the proceedings became stayed.

(5) In computing the period of limitation for the enforcement of any right, privilege, obligation or liability referred to in clause (b) of sub-section (1), the period during which it or the remedy for the enforcement thereof remained suspended shall be excluded.

CHAPTER IIIAC

LIQUIDATION OR RECONSTRUCTION OF COMPANIES

18FC. Power of Central Government to call for report on the affairs and working of managed company.— Where the management or control of an industrial undertaking has been taken over under Section 18A, whether before or after the commencement of the Industries (Development and Regulation) Amendment Act, 1971, or under Section 18AA or Section 18FA, the Central Government may, at any time during the continuance of such management or control, call for a report from the authorised person on the affairs and working of the industrial undertaking and in submitting the report the authorised person shall take into account the inventory and the lists of members and creditors prepared under Section 18FG.

18FD. Decision of Central Government in relation to managed company.— (1) If, on receipt of the report submitted by the authorised person, the Central Government is satisfied,—

(a) in relation to the company owning the industrial undertaking, which is not being wound up by the High Court, that the financial condition and other circumstances of the company are such that it is not in a position to meet its current liabilities out of its current assets, that Government may, if it considers necessary or expedient in the interests of the general public so to do, by order, decide that the industrial undertaking should be sold as a running concern as provided in Section 18FE and proceedings should simultaneously be started for the winding up, by the High Court, of the company;

(b) in relation to the company, owning the industrial undertaking, which is being wound up by the High Court, that its assets and liabilities are such that in the interests of its creditors and contributors the industrial undertaking should be sold as a running concern as provided in Section 18FE, it may, by order, decide accordingly.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1), if, on receipt of the report submitted by the authorised person, the Central Government is satisfied that—

(a) in the interests of the general public, or

(b) in the interests of the share-holders, or

(c) to secure the proper management of the company owning the industrial undertaking, it is necessary so to do, that Government may, by order, decide to prepare a scheme for the reconstruction of the company owning the industrial undertaking:

Provided that no such scheme shall be prepared in relation to a company which is being wound up by or under the supervision of the High Court, except with the previous permission of that Court.

(3) The powers exercisable by the Central Government under Section 18F, in relation to an undertaking taken over under Section 18A, shall also be exercisable in relation to an undertaking taken over under Section 18AA or Section 18FA, but such powers shall not be exercised after the making of an order under sub-section (1) or, as the case may be, under sub-section (2) of this section.

18FE. Provisions where Government decides to follow the course of action specified in Section 18FD (1).— (1) The provisions hereinafter laid down shall apply where the Central Government decides that the course of action specified in sub-sec. (1) of Section 18FD should be followed, namely:—

(a) the decision of the Central Government that the course of action specified in clause (a) of sub-section (1) of Section 18FD should be followed in relation to a company owning an industrial undertaking shall be deemed to be a ground specified in Section 433 of the Companies Act, 1956, on which the company may be wound up by the High Court;

(b) the authorised person shall, as soon as may be, after the decision specified in clause (a) of sub-section (1) of Section 18FD has been taken by the Central Government, present an application to the High Court for the winding up of the company owning the industrial undertaking;

(c) when an application is made by the authorised person, under clause (b), for the winding up, by the High Court, of the company owning the industrial undertaking, the High Court shall order the winding up of the company and shall, notwithstanding anything contained in the Companies Act, 1956, appoint the authorised person as the Official Liquidator in relation to such undertaking;

(d) whenever the Central Government decides under clause (b) of sub-section (1) of Section 18FD that the industrial undertaking should be sold as a running concern, it shall cause a copy of its decision to be laid before the High Court;

(e) until the industrial undertaking referred to in clause (a) or clause (b) of sub-section (1) of Section 18FD is sold or purchased in pursuance of this section, the authorised person shall continue to function as the Official Liquidator in relation to the said undertaking in the winding up proceedings of the company, and, thereafter the Official Liquidator appointed by the Central Government under Section 448 of the Companies Act, 1956, shall take over and function as the Official Liquidator in the said proceedings.

(2) The authorised person shall make a report to the Central Government as to what should be the reserve price for the sale of the industrial undertaking as a running concern.

(3) In making a report under sub-section (2), the authorised person shall have regard to—

(a) the financial condition of the company owning the industrial undertaking or the date on which the order under Section 18FD is made—

(i) as disclosed in its books of account;

(ii) as disclosed in its balance-sheet and profit and loss account during a period of five years immediately preceding the said date;

(b) the condition and nature of the plant, machinery, instruments and other equipment from the point of view of their suitability for profitable use in the running of the industrial undertaking;

(c) the total amount of liability on account of secured and unsecured debts including overdrafts, if any, drawn on banks, liabilities on account of terminal benefits to the employees and other borrowings and other liabilities of the company; and

(d) other relevant factors including the factor that the industrial undertaking will be sold free from all incumbrances.

(4) Notice of the reserve price determined by the authorised person shall be given in such manner as may be prescribed to the members and creditors of the company owning such industrial undertaking to make representations within a specified time to the Central Government through the authorised person and the Central Government shall after considering the representations received and the report of the authorised person, determine the reserve price.

(5) The authorised person shall thereafter, with the permission of the High Court, invite tenders from the public in such manner as may be determined by the High Court for the sale of the industrial undertaking as a running concern subject to the condition that it will be sold to the person offering the highest price which shall not be less than the reserve price determined under sub-section (4):

Provided that the High Court shall not refuse to grant such permission if it is satisfied that the company is not in a position to meet its current liabilities out of its current assets.

(6) The industrial undertaking shall be sold to the highest bidder, as a running concern, only if the price offered by him therefor is not less than the reserve price.

(7) Where no offer of price is equal to, or more than, the reserve price, the industrial undertaking shall be purchased by the Central Government at the reserve price.

(8) (a) The amount realised from the sale of the industrial undertaking as a running concern together with any other sum which may be realised from any contributory, purchaser or any other person from whom any money is due to the company shall be utilised in accordance with the provisions of the Companies Act, 1956, in discharging the liabilities of the company and distributing the balance, if any, amongst the members of the company.

(b) In other respects, the provisions of the Companies Act, 1956, relating to the winding up of a company by the High Court shall, as far as may be, apply.

(9) When an industrial undertaking is sold to any person under sub-section (6), or purchased by the Central Government under sub-section (7), there shall be transferred to and vested in the purchaser, free from all incumbrances, all such assets relating to the industrial undertaking as are referred to in sub-clause (i) of clause (a) of Section 18FG and existing at the time of the sale or purchase.

18FF. Provisions where Government decides to follow the course of action specified in Section 18FD (2).— (1) Where in any case the Central Government decides that the course of action specified in sub-section (2) of Section 18FD should be followed, it shall, subject to the provisions of that sub-section, cause to be prepared, by the authorised person, a scheme for the reconstruction of the company, owning the industrial undertaking, in accordance with the provisions hereinafter contained and the authorised person shall submit the same for the approval of that Government.

(2) The scheme for the reconstruction of the company owning the industrial undertaking may contain provisions for all or any of the following matters, namely:—

(a) the constitution, name and registered office, the capital, assets, powers, rights, interests, authorities and privileges, the liabilities, duties and obligations of the company on its reconstruction;

(b) any change in the Board of directors or the appointment of a new Board of directors of the company on its reconstruction and the authority by whom, the manner in which and the other terms and conditions on which, such change or appointment shall be made and in the case of appointment of a new Board of directors or of any director, the period for which such appointment shall be made;

(c) the vesting of controlling interest, in the reconstructed company, in the Central Government either by the appointment of additional directors or by the allotment of additional shares;

(d) the alteration of the memorandum and articles of association of the company, on its reconstruction, to give effect to such reconstruction;

(e) subject to the provisions of the scheme, the continuation by or against the company, on its reconstruction, of any action or proceedings pending against the company immediately before the date of its reconstruction;

(f) the reduction of the interest or rights which the members and creditors have in or against the company before its reconstruction to such extent as the Central Government may consider necessary in the interests of the general public or in the interests of the members and creditors or for the maintenance of the business of the company;

Provided that nothing contained in this clause shall be deemed to authorise the reduction of the interest or rights of any creditor (including Government) in respect of any loan or advance made by that creditor to the company after the date on which the management of the industrial undertaking of the company has been taken over under Section 18A, Section 18AA, or Section 18FA;

(g) the payment in cash or otherwise to the creditors in full satisfaction of their claim—

(i) in respect of their interest or rights in or against the company before its reconstruction; or

(ii) where their interest or rights in or against the company has or have been reduced under clause (f), in respect of such interest, or rights as so reduced;

(h) the allotment to the members of the company for shares held by them therein before its reconstruction [whether their interest in such shares has been reduced under clause (f) or not], of shares in the company on its reconstruction and where it is not possible to allot shares to any members, the payment in cash to those members in full satisfaction of their claim—

(1) in respect of their interest in shares in the company before its reconstruction; or

(2) where such interest has been reduced under clause (f), in respect of their interest in shares as so reduced;

(i) the offer by the Central Government to acquire by negotiations with the members of the company their respective shares on payment in cash to those members who may volunteer to sell their shares to the Central Government in full satisfaction of their claim—

(1) in respect of their interest in shares in the company before its reconstruction; or

(2) where such interest has been reduced under clause (f), in respect of their interest in shares as so reduced;

(j) the conversion of any debentures issued by the company after the taking over of the management of the company under Section 18A or Section 18AA or Sec. 18FA or of any loans obtained by the company after that date or of any part of such debentures or loans, into shares in the company and the allotment of those shares to such debenture-holders or creditors, as the case may be;

(k) the increase of the capital of the company by the issue of new shares and the allotment of such new shares to the Central Government;

(l) the continuance of the services of such of the employees of the company as the Central Government may specify in the scheme in the company itself, on its reconstruction, on such terms and conditions as the Central Government thinks fit;

(m) notwithstanding anything contained in clause (l), where any employees of the company whose services have been continued under clause (l) have, by notice in writing given to the company at any time before the expiry of one month next following the date on which the scheme is sanctioned by the High Court, intimated their intention of not becoming employees of the company, on its reconstruction, the payment to such employees and to other employees whose services have not been continued on the reconstruction of the company, of compensation, if any, to which they are entitled under the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, and such pension, gratuity, provident fund and other retirement benefits ordinarily admissible to them under the rules or authorisations of the company immediately before the date of its reconstruction;

(n) any other terms and conditions for the reconstruction of the company;

(o) such incidental, consequential and supplemental matters as are necessary to secure that the reconstruction of the company shall be fully and effectively carried out.

(3) (a) A copy of the scheme, as approved by the Central Government, shall be sent in draft to the company, to the registered trade unions, if any, of which the employees of the company are members and to the creditors thereof for suggestions and objections, if any, within such period as the Central Government may specify for this purpose.

(b) The Central Government may make such modifications, if any, in the draft scheme as it may consider necessary in the light of the suggestions and objections received from the company, from the registered trade unions of which the employees of the company are members and from any members or creditors of the company.

(4) The scheme shall thereafter be placed before the High Court for its sanction and the High Court, if satisfied that the scheme is in the interests of the general public or in the interests of the share-holders or for securing the proper management of the company and that the scheme is designed to be fair and reasonable to the members and creditors of the company, may, after giving a reasonable opportunity to the company and to its members and creditors of showing cause, sanction the scheme without any modification or with such modifications as it may consider necessary.

(5) The scheme, as so sanctioned by the High Court, shall come into force on such date as that Court may specify in this behalf.

Provided that different dates may be specified for different provisions of the scheme.

(6) The sanction accorded by the High Court under sub-section (4) shall be conclusive evidence that all the requirements of this section relating to the reconstruction of the company have been complied with, and a copy of the sanctioned scheme certified by the High Court to be a true copy thereof, shall, in all legal proceedings (whether original or in appeal or otherwise), be admitted as evidence to the same extent as the original scheme.

(7) On and from the date of the coming into operation of the scheme or any provision thereof, the scheme or such provision shall be binding on the company and also on all the members and other creditors and employees of the company and on any other person having any right or liability in relation to the company.

(8) On the coming into operation of the scheme or any provision thereof, the authorised person shall cease to function, and the management of the reconstructed company shall be assumed by the Board of directors as provided in the scheme.

(9) Copies of the scheme shall be laid before each House of Parliament, as soon as may be, after the scheme has been sanctioned by the Court.

(10) The provisions of this section and of any scheme made thereunder shall have effect notwithstanding anything contained in Sections 391 to 394A (both inclusive) of the Companies Act, 1956.

18FG. Preparation of inventory of assets and liabilities and list of members and creditors of managed company.— For the purposes of this Act, the authorised person shall, as soon as may be, after taking over the management of the industrial undertaking of a company under Section 18A or Section 18AA or Section 18FA,—

(a) prepare a complete inventory of—

(i) all properties, movable and immovable, including lands, buildings, works, workshops, stores, instruments, plant, machinery, automobiles and other vehicles, stocks of materials in the course of production, storage or transit, raw materials, cash balances, cash in hand, deposits in bank or with any other person or body or on loan, reserve funds, investments and book debts and all other rights and interests arising out of such property as were immediately before the date of taking over of the industrial undertaking in the ownership, possession, power or control of the company, whether within or without India; and all books of account, registers, maps, plans, sections, drawings, records, documents or titles of ownership of property, and all other documents of whatever nature relating thereto; and

(ii) all borrowings, liabilities and obligations of whatever kind of the company including liability on account of terminal benefits to its employees subsisting immediately before the said date;

(b) prepare separately a list of members, and a list of creditors, of such company as on the date of taking over of the management of the industrial undertaking showing separately in the list of creditors, the secured creditors and the unsecured creditors;

Provided that where the management of the industrial undertaking of a company has been taken over under the said Section 18A before the commencement of the Industries (Development and Regulation) Amendment Act, 1971, the aforesaid functions shall be performed by the authorised person within six months from such commencement.

18FH. Stay of suits and other proceedings.— In the case of a company in respect of which an order under Sec. 18FD has been made, no suit or other legal proceeding shall be instituted or continued against the company except with the previous permission of the Central Government or any officer or authority authorised by that Government in this behalf.

7. Amendment of Section 25.— In sub-section (1) of Section 25 of the principal Act, for the word, figures and letter "and 18A", the word, figures and letters "18A, 18AA and 18FA" shall be substituted.

8. Insertion of new Section 29D.— After Section 29C of the principal Act, the following section shall be inserted, namely:—

29D. Debts incurred by the authorised person to have priority.— Every debt arising out of any loan obtained by the authorised person for carrying on the management of, or exercising functions of control in relation to, an industrial undertaking or part thereof, the management of which has been taken over under Section 18A or Section 18AA or Section 18FA,—

(a) shall have priority over all other debts, whether secured or unsecured, incurred before the management of such industrial undertaking was taken over;

(b) shall be a preferential debt within the meaning of Section 530 of the Companies Act, 1956, and such debts shall rank equally among themselves and be paid in full out of the assets of the industrial undertaking unless such assets are insufficient to meet them, in which case they shall abate in equal proportions."

9. Amendment of Section 30.— In section 30 of the principal Act, in sub-section (2), after clause (p), the following clause shall be inserted, namely:—

"(pp) any matter which is to be or may be prescribed for giving effect to the provisions of Chapter IIIA or Chapter IIIC;"

10. Insertion of new Schedule.— In the principal Act, after the Second Schedule, the following Schedule shall be inserted, namely:—

"THE THIRD SCHEDULE

(See section 18FB)

1. The Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act, 1946.

2. The Industrial Disputes Act, 1947.

3. The Minimum Wages Act, 1948."

11. Repeal and savings.— (1) The Industries (Development and Regulation) Amendment Ordinance, 1971 and the Cotton Textile Companies (Management of Undertakings and Liquidation or Reconstruction) Act, 1967 are hereby repealed.

(2) Notwithstanding such repeal,—

(a) anything done or any action taken under the principal Act as amended by the Ordinance so repealed, shall have effect as if it were done or taken under the corresponding provisions of the principal Act as amended by this Act;

(b) anything done or any action taken or any order, rule or appointment made, scheme prepared or reserve price fixed under the Cotton Textile Companies (Management of Undertakings and Liquidation or Reconstruction) Act, 1967, before the commencement of the Ordinance so repealed shall, in so far as it is not inconsistent with the provisions of the Industries (Development and Regulation) Act, 1951, as amended by this Act, be deemed to have been done, taken, made, prepared or fixed under the corresponding provisions of the Industries (Development and Regulation) Act, 1951, as so amended, as if the said Act, as so amended, were in force on the date on which such thing was done, action was taken, order, rule or appointment was made, scheme was prepared and reserve price was fixed and any proceeding commenced under the Cotton Textile Companies (Management of Undertakings and Liquidation or Reconstruction) Act, 1967, which was pending immediately before the commencement of the Ordinance so repealed may be continued from the stage which was reached in such proceeding immediately before such commencement as if such proceedings were commenced under the corresponding provisions of the Industries (Development and Regulation) Act, 1951, as amended by this Act.

THE UNION TERRITORIES TAXATION LAWS (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1971

[Act No. 73 of 1971]*

An Act further to amend certain taxation laws in the Union territories.

BE it enacted by Parliament in the Twenty-second Year of the Republic of India, as follows:—

1. Short title, extent and commencement.— (1) This Act may be called THE UNION TERRITORIES TAXATION LAWS (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1971.

(2) It extends to all the Union Territories.

(3) It shall come into force on such date as the Central Government may, by notification in the official gazette, appoint.

2. Amendment of certain taxation laws.— The taxation laws as in force in each of the Union Territories, mentioned in the Schedule, shall have effect subject to the amendments specified therein:

Provided that any such amendment of a taxation law relating to the imposition of tax on the sale or purchase of goods declared to be of special importance under Section 14 of the Central Sales Tax Act, 1956, shall be subject to the condition that in no case the amount of tax together with surcharge payable in respect thereof under the said taxation law shall exceed the tax calculated at the maximum rate prescribed under clause (a) of S. 15 of the said Act.

3. Levy and collection of additional duty, tax or surcharge.— Save as otherwise provided, the additional duty or tax or surcharge leviable or chargeable under the relevant taxation law, amended as aforesaid, shall be levied and collected in the same manner as the duty or tax is levied and collected under the said taxation law and the provisions of that taxation law and the rules thereunder, as far as may be applicable in this behalf, shall apply accordingly.

(k) "person" does not include a body of persons;

(l) "prescribed" means prescribed by rules made under this Act;

(m) "Scheduled Tribes" has the same meaning assigned to it in clause (25) of Article 366 of the Constitution;

(n) "vehicle" includes a carriage, cart, hand-cart, bicycle, tricycle and every wheeled conveyance which is used or is capable of being used on a street but does not include a mechanically propelled vehicle.

CHAPTER II

CONSTITUTION OF DISTRICT COUNCILS

3. Division of Hill Areas into autonomous districts.—(1) As soon as may be after the commencement of this Act, the Administrator shall cause all the Hill Areas to be divided into not more than six autonomous districts.

(2) The Administrator may, by order notified in the Official Gazette,—

(a) declare that any area in any autonomous district which is, or is intended to be, included within the limits of any municipality, cantonment or town committee shall cease to be a part of such autonomous district;

(b) increase the area of any autonomous district;

(c) diminish the area of any autonomous district;

(d) unite two or more autonomous districts or parts thereof so as to form one autonomous district;

(e) define the boundaries of any autonomous district;

(f) alter the name of any autonomous district.

(3) No order under sub-section (2) shall be made by the Administrator except after consultation with the Hill Areas Committee.

(4) Any order made by the Administrator under sub-section (2) may contain such incidental and consequential provisions as appear to the Administrator to be necessary for giving effect to the provisions of the order.

4. Constitution of District Councils and their composition.—(1) For each autonomous district there shall be a District Council as from such date as the Administrator may, by notification in the Official Gazette, appoint in this behalf.

(2) The total number of seats in the District Council to be filled by persons chosen by direct election on the basis of adult suffrage from territorial constituencies shall be not more than eighteen.

(3) The Administrator may nominate not more than two persons, not being persons in the service of Government, to be members of any District Council.

5. Delimitation of constituencies.—The Administrator shall, by order, determine—

(a) the constituencies (which shall be single member constituencies) into which an autonomous district shall be divided for the purpose of election of members to the District Council of that district; and

(b) the extent of each constituency.

6. Power to alter or amend delimitation orders.—The Administrator may, from time to time, by order, alter or amend any order made under Section 5.

7. Qualifications for membership.—A person shall not be qualified to be chosen as a member of a District Council of any autonomous district unless he is an elector for any District Council constituency in that autonomous district.

8. Disqualifications for membership.—(1) A person shall be disqualified for being chosen as a member of a District Council if he is for the time being disqualified for being chosen as a member of either House of Parliament or holds any office of profit under any District Council.

(2) For the purposes of this section, a person shall not be deemed to hold an office of profit under a District Council by reason only that he is a member thereof.

9. Electors on electoral rolls.—(1) The persons entitled to vote at elections of members of a District Council shall be the persons entitled, by virtue of the provisions of the Constitution and the Representation of the People Act, 1950 (43 of 1950), to be registered as voters at elections to the House of the People.

(2) So much of the electoral roll for any parliamentary constituency for the time being in force as relates to the areas comprised within a constituency formed under Section 5 shall be deemed to be the electoral roll for that constituency for the purposes of this Act.

10. Right to vote.—(1) Every person whose name is, for the time being, entered in the electoral roll of a constituency shall be entitled to vote at the election of a member of the District Council from that constituency.

(2) Every person shall give one vote and no more to any one candidate at an election.

11. Election of members.—Election of members of a District Council shall be held in accordance with the rules made under Section 21 on such date or dates as the Administrator may, by notification in the Official Gazette, direct:

Provided that a casual vacancy shall be filled as soon as may be after the occurrence of the vacancy:

Provided further that no election shall be held to fill up a casual vacancy occurring within four months prior to the holding of a general election under this section.

12. Notification of results of elections.—The names of all persons elected or nominated to be members of a District Council shall be published by the Administrator in the Official Gazette.

13. Term of office of members.—(1) Save as otherwise provided in this section, the term of office of a member shall be five years and shall commence from the date of the notification of his election or nomination under Section 12 or from the date on which the vacancy in which he is elected or nominated has occurred, whichever date is later:

Provided that the Administrator may, when satisfied that it is necessary in order to avoid administrative difficulty, extend the term of office of all the members by such period not exceeding one year as he thinks fit.

(2) The term of office of a member elected to fill a casual vacancy shall commence from the date of the notification of his election and shall continue so long only as the member in whose place he is elected would have been entitled to hold office if the vacancy had not occurred.

14. Disputes as to elections.—(1) No election of a member shall be called in question except by an election petition presented to the court of the District Judge having jurisdiction in the area in which the constituency concerned is situated, within thirty days from the date of the notification of the result of the election under S. 12.

(2) An election petition calling in question any such election may be presented on one or more of the grounds specified in S. 16 by any candidate at such election or by any elector of the constituency.

(3) A petitioner shall join as respondents to his petition all the candidates at the election.

(4) An election petition—

(a) shall contain a concise statement of the material facts on which the petitioner relies;

(b) shall, with sufficient particulars, set forth the ground or grounds on which the election is called in question; and

(c) shall be signed by the petitioner and verified in the manner laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 (5 of 1908) for the verification of pleadings.

15. Relief that may be claimed by petitioner.— A petitioner may, in addition to claiming a declaration that the election of all or any of the returned candidates is void, claim a further declaration that he himself or any other candidate has been duly elected.

16. Grounds on which an election may be called in question.— The election of a returned candidate may be called in question on any one or more of the following grounds, namely:—

(a) that on the date of his election the returned candidate was not qualified to be elected, or he was disqualified for being elected, as a member under this Act; or

(b) that the nomination paper of any candidate at the election has been improperly rejected; or

(c) that the result of the election has been materially affected by the improper acceptance of a nomination paper or by the improper acceptance or refusal of a vote or by any other cause.

17. Procedure to be followed by the District Judge.— The procedure provided in the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 (5 of 1908) in regard to suits shall be followed by the court of the District Judge, as far as it can be made applicable, in the trial and disposal of an election petition under this Act.

18. Decision of the District Judge.— (1) At the conclusion of the trial of an election petition, the court of the District Judge shall make an order—

(a) dismissing the election petition; or
(b) declaring the election of all or any of the returned candidates to be void; or
(c) declaring the election of all or any of the returned candidates to be void and the petitioner or any other candidate to have been duly elected.

(2) If any person who has filed an election petition has, in addition to calling in question the election of the returned candidate, claimed a declaration that he himself or any other candidate has been duly elected and the court of the District Judge is of opinion—

(a) that in fact the petitioner or such other candidate received a majority of the valid votes; or

(b) that but for the votes obtained by the returned candidate, the petitioner or such other candidate would have obtained a majority of the valid votes, the court of the District Judge shall, after declaring the election of the returned candidate to be void, declare the petitioner or such other candidate, as the case may be to have been duly elected.

19. Procedure in case of equality of votes.— If during the trial of an election petition it appears that there is equality of votes between any candidates at the election and that the addition of a vote would entitle any of those candidates to be declared elected, then, the court of the District Judge shall decide between them by lot and proceed as if the one on whom the lot falls had received an additional vote.

20. Finality of decisions.— (1) An order of the court of the District Judge on an election petition shall be final and conclusive.

(2) An election of a member not called in question in accordance with the foregoing provisions shall be deemed to be a good and valid election.

21. Power to make rules regulating the election of members.— The Administrator may make rules to regulate all or any of the following matters for the purpose of the holding of elections of members under this Act, namely:—

(a) the manner of the splitting up of electoral rolls for parliamentary constituencies into parts for the purpose of constituting one or more of such parts into electoral roll for a constituency; and the officer or authority by whom such splitting up is to be carried out;

(b) the drawing up of the programme of election;

(c) the appointment of returning officers, presiding and polling officers for election;

(d) the nomination of candidates and the scrutiny of such nomination;

(e) the deposits to be made by candidates and the time and manner of making such deposits;

(f) the withdrawal of candidatures;

(g) the appointment of agents of candidates;

(h) the time and manner of holding elections;

(i) the general procedure at the elections including the time, place and hours of poll and the method by which votes shall be cast;

(j) the fee to be paid on an election petition;

(k) any other matter relating to elections or election disputes in respect of which the Administrator deems it necessary to make rules under this section or in respect of which this Act makes no provision or makes insufficient provision and provision is, in the opinion of the Administrator, necessary.

22. Incorporation of District Councils.— Each District Council shall be a body corporate by the name respectively of "the District Council of (name of autonomous district)" and shall have perpetual succession and a common seal with power to acquire, hold and dispose of property and to contract and may by the said name sue and be sued.

23. Chairman and Vice-Chairman.— (1) A District Council shall, as soon as may be, choose two members to be respectively

Chairman and Vice-Chairman thereof and, so often as the office of Chairman or Vice-Chairman becomes vacant, the Council shall choose another member to be Chairman or Vice-Chairman, as the case may be:

Provided that the Administrator may nominate the first Chairman who shall hold office for a period not exceeding one year.

(2) If a resolution for the removal of an elected Chairman is passed by not less than two-thirds of the total membership of the Council at a meeting convened in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (3), such resolution shall have the effect of removing the Chairman from his office as from the date on which the resolution is so passed and if such resolution is passed by less than two-thirds but not less than one-half of the total membership of the Council, the Administrator may, by order in writing, remove, for reasons to be recorded, the Chairman from his office as from such date as may be specified in the order:

Provided that no such resolution shall be brought within one year from the date of election of the Chairman:

Provided further that if the resolution is not passed by not less than two-thirds of the total membership of the Council, no other resolution for the removal of the Chairman shall be allowed to be considered within one year from the date on which such resolution was considered.

(3) A notice in writing of the intention to move a resolution referred to in sub-s. (2) signed by not less than one-third of the total membership of the Council together with a copy of the proposed resolution shall be delivered to the Deputy Commissioner in accordance with the rules made by the Deputy Commissioner in this behalf and the Deputy Commissioner shall, after giving not less than fifteen days' notice thereon, convene for consideration of the resolution a meeting of the Council to be held in the office of the Council on a date not later than thirty days from the date on which the notice was delivered to him and he shall preside over the meeting.

(4) The Chairman of the Council shall be a whole-time functionary and shall be entitled to such salary or allowances as may be fixed by the Administrator.

24. Oath or affirmation by members.—Every member shall, before taking his seat, make and subscribe at a meeting of the District Council, an oath or affirmation in the prescribed form.

25. Vacation of seats.—(1) No person shall be a member both of the Legislative Assembly of the Union territory of Manipur and of a District Council and if a person is chosen a member both of the Legislative Assembly and of a District Council, then, at the expiration of fourteen days from the date of publication in the Official Gazette that he has been so chosen, that person's seat in the District Council shall become vacant unless he has previously resigned his seat in the Legislative Assembly.

(2) If a member—

(a) becomes subject to any of the disqualifications mentioned in Section 8; or

(b) resigns his seat by writing under his hand addressed to the Chairman of the District Council, his seat shall thereupon become vacant.

(3) If during the six successive months a member is, without the permission of the District Council, absent from all meetings thereof, the Council may declare his seat vacant:

(4) If any question arises as to whether a member has become subject to any of the disqualifications mentioned in Section 8, it shall be referred to the District Judge having jurisdiction in the area in which the constituency concerned is situated and his decision shall be final.

26. Allowances of members.—Subject to the provisions of sub-section (4) of Section 23, every member shall be entitled to receive such allowances as may be determined by the Administrator.

27. Liability of members.—Every person shall be liable for the loss, waste or misappropriation of any money or other property belonging to a District Council, if such loss, waste or misappropriation is a direct consequence of his neglect or misconduct while a member of the District Council and a suit for compensation may be instituted against him by the Council with the previous sanction of the Deputy Commissioner or by the Deputy Commissioner with the previous sanction of the Administrator.

28. Members to be deemed to be public servants.—Every member shall be deemed to be a public servant within the meaning of Section 21 of the Indian Penal Code (45 of 1860).

CHAPTER III

Functions of District Councils

29. Functions of District Councils.—

(-) Subject to such exceptions and conditions as the Administrator may make and impose, the following matters shall be under the control and administration of a District Council, namely:—

(i) the maintenance and management of such property, moveable or immovable, and institutions as may be transferred to that Council by the Administrator;

(ii) the construction, repair and maintenance of such of the roads, bridges, channels and buildings as may be transferred to that Council by the Administrator;

(iii) the establishment, maintenance and management of primary schools and the construction and repair of all buildings connected with these institutions and institution of scholarships;

(iv) the establishment, maintenance and management of dispensaries;

(v) the establishment and maintenance of cattle pounds including such functions under the Cattle Trespass Act, 1871 (1 of 1871) as may be transferred to that Council by the Administrator;

(xii) the management of such ferries as may be entrusted to the charge of that Council by the Administrator;

(xiii) the initiation, inspection and control of relief works;

(xiv) the allotment, occupation or use, or the setting apart of land, other than land acquired for any public purpose or land which is a reserved forest, for the purpose of agriculture or grazing or for residential or other non-agricultural purposes or for any other purposes likely to promote the interests of the inhabitants of any village or town situated within the autonomous district for which that council is constituted;

(xv) the management of any forest not being a reserved forest;

(xvi) the regulation of the practice of Thum or other form of shifting cultivation; and (xvii) any other matter which the Administrator may, in consultation with the Hill Areas Committee, entrust to the District Council in the field of agriculture, animal husbandry, community development, social and tribal welfare, village planning or any other matter referred to in Section 52 of the Government of Union Territories Act, 1963 (20 of 1963).

(2) It shall be competent for a District Council to recommend to the Government of the Union territory of Manipur legislation relating to the following matters in so far as they concern members of the Scheduled Tribes, namely—

(a) appointment or succession of Chiefs;

(b) inheritance of property;

(c) marriage and divorce; and

(d) social customs.

CHAPTER IV

PROCEDURE AND STAFF OF DISTRICT COUNCILS

30. Conduct of business.—A District Council shall conduct its business in such manner and in accordance with such procedure as may be prescribed.

31. Committees.—A District Council may, from time to time, appoint out of its own body such and so many committees for the efficient discharge of its duties as may be necessary.

32. Officers and staff.—(1) For every District Council there shall be a Chief Executive Officer, who shall be appointed by the Administrator.

(2) If a resolution for removal of the Chief Executive Officer is passed at a meeting of the District Council by a majority of not less than two-thirds of the total membership of the Council, the Administrator shall remove him forthwith.

(3) The District Council shall appoint such officers and staff as may be necessary for the proper and efficient execution of its duties and make regulations for their conditions of service.

(4) The power of appointing officers and staff (whether temporary or permanent) shall be exercised in accordance with the rules framed for the purpose by the Administrator.

(5) The conditions of service applicable to a person immediately before his appointment to a post under a District Council shall not be varied to his disadvantage except with the previous approval of the Administrator.

(6) Every officer or member of staff of a District Council shall be deemed to be a public servant within the meaning of Section 21 of the Indian Penal Code (45 of 1860).

CHAPTER V

FINANCE OF DISTRICT COUNCILS AND VESTING OF PROPERTY

33. Powers of taxation.—Notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in any other law for the time being in force, a District Council shall have the power to levy all or any of the following taxes within the autonomous district for which the Council is constituted, that is to say—

(a) taxes on professions, trades, callings and employments;

(b) taxes on animals, vehicles (other than mechanically propelled vehicles) and boats;

(c) taxes on entry of goods into a market for sale therein and tolls on passengers and goods carried in ferries;

(d) taxes for the maintenance of schools, dispensaries or roads; and

(e) any other tax falling under List II of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution which the Legislature of the Union territory of Manipur may, by law, empower the District Council to levy.

34. Levy of fees.—A District Council may fix and levy—

(a) school fees; and

(b) fees for the use of, or benefits derived from, any of the works done or services rendered under Section 29.

35. Procedure for imposing taxes.—

(1) A District Council may resolve at a meeting specially convened for the purpose to propose the imposition of any of the taxes mentioned in Section 33.

(2) When a resolution has been passed, the Council shall publish a notice in the Official Gazette and also in the prescribed manner, defining the class of persons or description of property proposed to be taxed, the amount or rate of tax to be imposed and the system of assessment to be adopted.

(3) Any person, directly or indirectly affected by the proposed tax and objecting to it, may, within thirty days from the publication of the notice, send his objections in writing to the Council and the Council shall, at a specially convened meeting take all such objections into consideration.

(4) If no objection is sent within the said period of thirty days or if the objections received are deemed insufficient, the Council may submit its proposals to the Administrator with the objections, if any, and its decision thereon.

(5) The Administrator may then sanction the proposals or refuse to sanction them or return them to the Council for further consideration.

(6) When the proposal in respect of a tax has been sanctioned, the Administrator shall notify its imposition in the Official Gazette and specify a date not later than three months from the date of notification on which the tax shall come into force.

36. Abolition or reduction of taxes.—

The Administrator may, by notification in the Official Gazette, and a District Council may with the previous approval of the Administrator by a resolution passed at a meeting specially convened for the purpose abolish or reduce any tax imposed under Section 33.

37. Recovery of taxes and fees.—All arrears of taxes and fees levied under this Act may be recovered under the law for the time being in force for the recovery of public dues as if such arrears were public dues.

38. Assessment and collection of taxes and fees.—A District Council may, by notification in the Official Gazette, determine the person by whom any tax or fee shall be assessed and collected and make rules for the assessment and collection of such tax or fee and direct in what manner persons employed in the assessment or collection shall be remunerated.

39. Appeals.—(1) In matters connected with the assessment and collection of any tax or fee levied under this Act, and appeal shall lie from the order of any person authorised to make assessment or collections to such person as the Administrator may appoint or designate for the purpose.

(2) An appeal under sub-section (1) shall be presented within thirty days from the date of the order.

(3) The order passed on the appeal shall be final.

40. Instalments of taxes and fees.—A District Council may, by notification in the Official Gazette and with the previous approval of the Deputy Commissioner, prescribe by what instalments and at what times any tax or fee shall be payable.

41. Power to exempt from taxation.—A District Council may, with the previous approval of the Administrator, by notification in the Official Gazette remit or reduce any tax or fee or exempt any persons or class of persons or any description of property, wholly or in part, from liability to any tax or fee and cancel any such remission, reduction or exemption.

42. Recoveries of moneys claimable by the Council.—(1) Save as provided by Section 37, all moneys claimable by a District Council may be recovered on an application to a Magistrate having jurisdiction in the area where the person from whom the money is claimable may, for the time being be resident, by the distress and sale of any movable property or by the attachment and sale of any immovable property, within the limits of his jurisdiction belonging to such person and the cost of such proceedings shall be recoverable in the same manner as the said moneys.

(2) An application for recovery of money shall be in writing and shall be signed by an officer authorised in this behalf by order of the Chairman of the Council.

43. Council Fund.—(1) All moneys received by or on behalf of a District Council under the provisions of this Act or any other law for the time being in force shall be credited to a fund which shall be called the "Council Fund" and it shall be held by the District Council in trust for the purposes of this Act.

(2) All expenditure of the Council shall be defrayed out of the Council Fund.

(3) The Administrator may make rules for the management of the Council Fund and for the procedure to be followed in respect of payment of money into the said Fund, the withdrawal of moneys therefrom, the custody of moneys therein and any other matter connected with or ancillary to the matters aforesaid.

(4) The accounts of a District Council shall be kept in such form as may be prescribed.

(5) The accounts of a District Council shall be audited in such manner as may be prescribed.

44. Property vested in District Council.—Subject to any order of the Administrator, all property of the nature specified below and situated in the autonomous district shall vest in and belong to the District Council for which it is constituted and shall, with all other property which may become vested in the Council, be under its direction, management and control and shall be held and applied for the purposes of this Act—

(a) all public buildings, constructed or maintained out of the Council Fund;

(b) all public roads which have been constructed or are maintained out of the Council Fund and the stores and other materials thereof and also all trees, erections, materials, implements and things provided for such roads;

(c) all land or other property transferred to the District Council by the Administrator or by gift, sale or otherwise for public purposes.

45. Budget.— (1) A District Council shall, on or before a prescribed day in each year submit to the Administrator an estimate of the income and expenditure of the Council for the next financial year in such form as may be prescribed.

(2) The Administrator may, on or before a prescribed day, return the estimate of the Council with or without modifications.

(3) When a budget is returned with modifications under sub-section (2), the Council shall consider the proposed modifications, take a decision thereon and report the same to the Administrator.

(4) The budget estimate finally adopted by the Council shall be the budget of the District Council.

(5) Any subsequent alteration in the budget or reappropriation or transfer of provision within the estimate shall be made with the approval of the Administrator.

CHAPTER VI CONTROL

46. Control.— (1) It shall be the duty of the Chairman of a District Council to furnish to the Deputy Commissioner a copy of the proceedings of the meetings of the Council and such other information as the Deputy Commissioner may require.

(2) The Deputy Commissioner shall have the power to give to any District Council all such directions as he may, consider necessary in respect of subjects, curricula, text books and standards of teaching in schools vested wholly or partly in the Council and in schools wholly or partly maintained by grants payable from the Council Fund and the Council shall comply with such directions.

(3) The Deputy Commissioner may, by order, and for reasons to be recorded, suspend the execution of any resolution or order of any District Council or prohibit the doing of any act which is about to be done, or is being done, in pursuance of or under cover of any provision of the law relating to the constitution or functions of the District Council, if, in his opinion, the resolution, order or act is in excess of the powers conferred by law or the execution of the resolution or order or the doing of the act is likely to lead to a breach of the peace, or to cause annoyance or injury to the public or to any class or body of persons:

Provided that the Council may, within fifteen days of the date of the order of the Deputy Commissioner offer such explanation as it deems fit in relation to the execution of the resolution or order which has been suspended or the doing of the act has been prohibited.

(4) When the Deputy Commissioner makes any order as aforesaid, he shall forthwith send a copy of it to the Administrator with a statement of the reasons for making it and forward in due course to the Administrator the explanation, if any, offered by the Council and the Administrator may, thereupon, confirm, modify or rescind the order of the Deputy Commissioner.

47. Supersession of the District Council.— (1) If, on receipt of a report from the Deputy Commissioner or otherwise, the Administrator is of opinion that—

(a) any District Council is not competent to perform, or persistently makes default in the performance of, the duties imposed on it by or under this Act or any other law; or

(b) any District Council exceeds or abuses its powers; or

(c) the financial position and credit position of any District Council is seriously threatened; or

(d) a situation has arisen in which the administration of any District Council cannot be carried on in accordance with the provisions of this Act, the Administrator may, by an order published, together with a statement of reasons therefor, in the Official Gazette, supersede such Council for such period, not exceeding one year, as may be specified in the order:

Provided that before making an order of supersession as aforesaid under clause (a) or clause (b) or clause (c), reasonable opportunity shall be given to such Council to show cause why such order of supersession should not be made:

Provided further that the period of supersession may be extended for any further period or periods not exceeding six months at a time in consultation with the Hill Areas Committee.

(2) When any District Council is superseded by an order under sub-section (1),—

(a) all the members of the Council (including the Chairman and Vice-Chairman thereof) shall, on such date as may be specified in the order, vacate their offices as such members without prejudice to their eligibility for election or nomination under clause (d).

(b) during the period of supersession of the Council, all powers and duties conferred and imposed upon the Council by or under this Act or any other law shall be exercised and performed by such officer or authority as the Administrator may appoint in this behalf;

(c) all property vested in the Council shall, until it is reconstituted vest in the Central Government;

(d) before the expiry of the period of supersession, election or nomination, as the case may be, of members to the Council shall be held or made for the purpose of re-constituting the Council.

48. Effect of certain provisions during the period when the Hill Areas Committee is not functioning.— Where at any time, consequent on the dissolution of the Legislative Assembly of the Union territory of Manipur, the Hill Areas Committee is not functioning, then, during the period when such Committee is not functioning,—

(i) Section 3 shall have effect as if sub-sec. (3) thereof had been omitted;

(ii) clause (xvii) of Section 29 and the second proviso to sub-section (1) of Sec. 47 have effect as if the words "in consultation with the Hill Areas Committee" had been omitted therefrom.

CHAPTER VII

OFFENCES AND PENALTIES

49. Penalty for obstruction.— If any person wilfully obstructs a District Council or any officer or servant of a District Council or any person authorised by the District Council in the exercise of its powers, he shall be punishable with fine which may extend to fifty rupees.

50. Penalty for entering into any contract with the Council.— If any member, officer or other employee of a District Council enters into any contract with the Council, he shall be deemed to have committed an offence under Section 163 of the Indian Penal Code (45 of 1860).

CHAPTER VIII

RULES AND BYE-LAWS

51. Power of Administrator to make rules.— (1) Without prejudice to the power to make rules under any other provision of this Act, the Administrator may, after previous publication, make, by notification in the Official Gazette, rules for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this Act.

(2) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, such rules may—

(i) regulate the conduct of business of a District Council;

(ii) prescribe the forms in which the budget estimate is to be prepared and the dates for the various stages of its completion;

(iii) determine the language in which the business of a District Council will be transacted;

(iv) regulate the powers of a District Council to transfer property;

(v) regulate the powers of a District Council to contract and do other things necessary for the purposes of its constitution and the mode of executing contracts;

(vi) regulate the employment, payment suspension and removal of officers and staff of a District Council;

(vii) protect the terms and conditions of service of Government servants transferred to a District Council;

(viii) prescribe the forms for statements, registers, estimates and accounts of a District Council and regulate the keeping, checking and publication of such accounts;

(ix) prescribe the authority by whom and the manner in which the accounts of a District Council shall be audited; and

(x) provide for any other matter for which rules have to be made under this Act.

52. Power to make bye-laws.— (1) Subject to the provisions of this Act and of the rules made thereunder, a District Council may make bye-laws to provide for all or any of the following matters in the autonomous district for which it is constituted or in any part thereof, namely—

(a) the maintenance and management of schools and grants of stipends and scholarships;

(b) control and administration of dispensaries, their construction and repairs, the supply of medicines and the measures to be taken during the prevalence of diseases;

(c) the protection from pollution of such tanks, springs, well or parts of rivers, streams, channels or water courses as are set apart for drinking or culinary purposes;

(d) any other matter which is necessary for carrying out all or any of the provisions of this Act and the rules made thereunder.

(2) A bye-law made under sub-section (1) shall not have effect until it has been confirmed by the Administrator and published in such manner as he may direct.

(3) The Administrator, in confirming a bye-law, may make any change therein which appears to him to be necessary.

53. Penalty for infringement of rules or bye-laws.— (1) In making any rule, the Administrator, and in making any bye-law, a District Council, may direct that the breach of the same shall be punishable with fine which may extend to one hundred rupees and in the case of a continuing breach with a further fine which may extend to ten rupees of every day during which breach is continued after the offender has been convicted of such breach.

(2) In default of payment of any fine, the defaulter shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to fifteen days.

THE CONSTITUTION (TWENTY-SIXTH AMENDMENT) ACT, 1971*

(28th December, 1971)

An Act further to amend the Constitution of India.

BE it enacted by Parliament in the Twenty-second year of the Republic of India as follows:—

1. Short title.—This Act may be called THE CONSTITUTION (TWENTY-SIXTH AMENDMENT) Act, 1971.

2. Omission of Articles 291 and 362.—Articles 291 and 362 of the Constitution shall be omitted.

3. Insertion of new Article 363A.—After Article 363 of the Constitution, the following article shall be inserted, namely:—

“363A. Recognition granted to Rulers of Indian States to cease and privy purses to be abolished.—Notwithstanding anything in this Constitution or in any law for the time being in force:—

(a) the Prince, Chief or other person who, at any time before the commencement of the Constitution (Twenty-sixth Amendment) Act, 1971, was recognised by the President as the Ruler of an Indian State or any person who, at any time before such commencement, was recognised by the President as the successor of such Ruler shall, on and from such commencement, cease to be recognised as such Ruler or the successor of such Ruler;

(b) on and from the commencement of the Constitution (Twenty-sixth Amendment) Act, 1971, privy purse is abolished and all rights, liabilities and obligations in respect of privy purse are extinguished and accordingly the Ruler or, as the case may be, the successor of such Ruler, referred to in cl. (a) or any other person shall not be paid any sum as privy purse.”

4. Amendment of Article 366.—In Article 366 of the Constitution, for cl. (22), the following clause shall be substituted, namely:—

“(2) “Ruler” means the Prince, Chief or other person who, at any time before the commencement of the Constitution (Twenty-sixth Amendment) Act, 1971, was recognised by the President as the Ruler of an Indian State or any person who, at any time before such commencement, was recognised by the President as the successor of such Ruler;”

THE NEW YEAR GREETINGS

On the occasion of entering on the forty-ninth year of its career the All India Reporter sends its warm greetings to all the members of the Bench and the Bar in India and to all its subscribers and readers, conveying, at the same time, to them its grateful thanks for their generous support and its best wishes for a Bright, Happy and Prosperous New Year.

Fourth Commonwealth Law Conference in India

By DR. L. M. SINGHVI, Senior Advocate, Secretary-General, Fourth Commonwealth Law Conference, Organising Committee of the Bar Association of India

20, Supreme Court Building, Tilak Marg, New Delhi-1.

Perhaps the most enduring common links among the countries of the Commonwealth are those enshrined in the legal and judicial systems and the values of freedom and fairness underlying them. There is no doubt a wide variety and vast diversity in the laws of different Commonwealth countries but there is a common thread of shared approaches which runs through most of them.

2. The commonwealth concept emerged as a sequel to the end of the era of colonialism and with a new and awakened awareness of common ground. Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, Prime Minister of India, was one of the principal architects of the new commonwealth concept. The political fortunes of the Commonwealth ties have tended to fluctuate from time to time but the collaboration in professional and academic fields has proceeded on an even keel. Apart from past associations, the English language has provided facilities for mutual communication and continuing contact. An Indian lawyer is naturally more at home with English, Australian, Canadian, Ceylonese, Malaysian or Pakistani statutes and reports of decided cases than he would be with continental European, Latin American or other Asian laws or judicial decisions.

3. The Fourth Commonwealth Law Conference which is going to be held in New Delhi from the 6th of January to the 13th of January, 1971, is an expression of the common identity of the legal and judicial systems in the countries of the Commonwealth.

4. The Commonwealth Law Conference is a quinquennial event. The First Commonwealth Law Conference was held in London fifteen years ago. The two successive conferences were held in Ottawa and Sydney in 1960 and 1965. At the Sydney Conference there was a sizeable Indian delegation which included, among others, the Chief Justice of India, the Law Minister of India, the Attorney-General for India and the President of the Bar Association of India. Mr. M. C. Setalvad, as President of the Bar Association of India, and Mr. C. K. Daphtary, the then Attorney-General for India, extended on behalf of India an invitation to hold the Fourth Commonwealth Law Conference in New Delhi. Notwithstanding competing claims of some other members of the Commonwealth, the Indian invitation was accepted.

5. The Fourth Commonwealth Law Conference will bring to India many distinguished jurists, judges, practising lawyers, law teachers and law officers from all over the Commonwealth. In conjunction with the Fourth Commonwealth Law Conference, there would also be a conference of Commonwealth Chief Justices, a Conference of Ministers of Law and Justice and Attorneys-General. For the first time, as a result of an Indian initiative, a Commonwealth Legal Education Conference would also be held as a part of the main conference.

6. The Conference will deliberate on five principal themes, namely, Law and the Common Man, Commonwealth and the Law, Contemporary Problems of Legal Education and Research in the Commonwealth, Social Legislation at the Cross Roads and the Profession of Law and its Development in the Commonwealth. Some 23 specific topics will be discussed in committee sessions at the Conference. These topics include Ombudsman Proposals, Legal Aid, Enforceability of Basic Human Rights, Law's Delays and Costs of Litigation, Law Reform in the Commonwealth, Governmental Liability in Civil Law, Federalism and Parliamentary System, Copyrights, Trade Marks and Patents, Family Law, Trade Union and the Law, Problems of Administrative Justice, Censorship Laws, Inter-Commonwealth Arbitration, Training of New Entrants in the Legal Profession, Professional Ethics, Methods of Increasing Efficiency in the Legal Profession, Lawyers' Partnerships, Reciprocity and the Right of Commonwealth Lawyers to appear in Courts in Commonwealth countries, Teaching Methods, Curricula and Contents of Legal Education, Law Schools and the Development of Law and Law and Technology: Jurimetrics. There would be a plenary session of the Conference every morning to discuss the theme of the day. Short open sessions of the Conference would be followed by committee discussions which would be topicwise. A volume of papers submitted by eminent specialists on each topic is being published on the eve of the Conference. The proceedings of the Conference will be recorded and reports of proceedings are proposed to be published separately. If the wide range of topics chosen for the Conference and the excellent contributions received from all over the world are any index, the Conference promises a rich and varied intellectual fare.

7. The Conference would be inaugurated on the 6th of January 1971 by the President of India in the Ashoka Convention Hall. The President and the Prime Minister of India will also be meeting the delegates at various receptions and social events. Cultural and entertainment events of the highest quality representing the heritage of our country at its best are being planned. Apart from the Conference Banquet, there would be several receptions by different High Commissions in New Delhi. Many delegates will also visit other parts of the country before and after the Conference.

8. India has a sizeable lawyer population which is estimated to be well over one lakh. Law and lawyers occupy a place of pride and prominence in our country. A Conference, such as the Fourth Commonwealth Law Conference is an event of momentous and enduring importance. As Mr. M. C. Setalval, the doyen of the Indian Bar once put it, it is the duty of the Members of the Bar throughout the country to make the forthcoming Commonwealth Law Conference a memorable success in every possible way. The Conference needs the active involvement of lawyers in different parts of the country. They should register themselves as Members of the Reception Committee and its delegates in as large a number as possible. They should help in receiving and looking after the visiting delegates and they should extend to our visitors from all over the Commonwealth the traditional warmth and the customary hospitality of our country in a spirit of fellowship and fraternity. Indeed, the Commonwealth Law Conference is not merely an event confined to the Practitioner and Teachers of Law and to Judges and Law Officers; citizens generally and fraternal professions as well as the public and private enterprises too have an important role to play in making the Conference a success. The Conference is above all an opportunity to project the image of India to the decisively influential community of lawyers from different parts of the world.

SUBORDINATE JUDICIARY IN INDIA—RECRUITMENT AND TRAINING

(By Justice S. BARMAN, Retired Chief Justice of the Orissa High Court, and Chairman, Railway Rates Tribunal, Madras 28).

1. In my last talk I have given a picture of the set-up, nature and conditions of work of our judicial officers spread over the far-flung outlying stations from one end of Orissa to the other—extending from the Andhra/Madhya Pradesh border on one side to the Bengal, Bihar border on the other—each with problems of its own according to the varying local conditions. It must be clear that the tasks assigned to them call for not only a high degree of judicial talents but also administrative ability of a high order to deal with problems arising from day to day in the various stations to which they are posted requiring—apart from judicial ability—tact, imagination, resourcefulness and general alertness.

2. Naturally, the question arises: How do we recruit our judicial officers? Usually, the practice has been to insist upon a minimum period of three years' practice at the Bar for recruitment to posts of Munsifs and seven years' practice at the Bar for direct recruitment as District Judges. From experience I personally feel that if a fresh law graduate be recruited by competitive examination and be subjected to a carefully drawn scheme of training which would include practical working of the Courts, there is no reason why he should not make a successful judicial officer. Three years' experience at the Bar is supposed to be only a manner of training but better training as necessary for the making of an ideal judicial officer with some administrative flair may be given by the adoption of other methods.

3. Indeed, the planned and systematic training, as I propose to suggest presently, will be more useful than three years at the Bar, if there is, from the very beginning, no intention of sticking to the profession after graduation in law. My personal view is that the best way of attracting talents to the service is to create an All-India Judicial Service like its counterpart the Indian Administrative Service as recommended by the Law Commission and also by the Chief Justices' Conference. But for several reasons this proposal could not be implemented. In my opinion, such a Service, with an All-India outlook, would alone provide the right type of personnel.

4. But we are so short of hands in Orissa, that we have to make the best use of the existing situation. Since direct recruitment from the Bar with three years' practice has not proved satisfactory, I suggest that recruitment should be by competitive examination from fresh law graduates, followed by intensive and specialised training for about two years during their probationary periods in various fields. This would assure for the Judiciary a set of well trained officers to man the posts at all levels.

5. The first stage of training would be to depute the young probationer judicial officers to the Administrative Officers' Training School at Hiraikud for say 3 or 4 months. A course of training along with the Indian Administrative Service Officers would foster in them a spirit of brotherhood and help them in the later stages of their career to secure their assistance and co-operation in many administrative matters. The training as suggested by me will shape and in fact mould the probationers to develop a dignified poise, confidence and composure which they, as part of their general character, can retain throughout life. In my opinion training of our judicial officers on these lines will not only widen their general outlook on life but also help them in their work—judicial and administrative—throughout their career in every field. It is not necessary that the subject-matter of teaching of our young officers in Hiraikud Administrative Officers' Training School should be the same; since our young men are law graduates, teaching of only those branches of the law—which they had not studied at College—may be included in the course of training such as in Company Law, Insolvency, Banking, Insurance, etc. It is however essential that the young judicial officers along with the Indian Administrative Service Officers should receive instructions on Rural Economics and General Administration, which would give them ample opportunities to move into the villages and observe men and things at close quarters; they would thus get an insight into the manners and customs of the rural people which would help them in their work.

6. Training in survey and settlement is a 'must' for every judicial officer. He should have this training with particular emphasis on the local land systems, after the course of instruction at the Administrative Training School at Hiraikud. Questions relating to survey and settlement—Parchas and Record of Rights—arise in some form or other before a Judicial officer both in Civil and Criminal cases. The importance of land survey and settlement training is more urgent in Orissa because of the different land tenure systems prevailing in different parts of the State.

7. Training in accounts is another branch. The Presiding Officers of Courts have, in the course of their administrative work, to remain in charge of the accounts of Civil and Criminal Courts. And unless they are themselves fully conversant with these matters, they cannot maintain effective supervision. And many of the defects noticed in the maintenance of accounts can be eliminated if the Presiding Officers themselves are familiar and can give personal guidance and instruction. I would, therefore, suggest that this training should be given in the Accounts Training School at Bhubaneswar for about two months, so that they may be acquainted with the Orissa Service Code, the Travelling Allowance Rules, Fundamental Rules, General Provident Fund Rules; two weeks out of this period may be spent in training in treasuries which will enable them to know how bills are dealt with and how the connected registers are maintained.

8. This should be followed by six weeks' training in the Collectorate in its different branches. This will give them an idea about maintenance of Revenue registers and disposal of complaints; for practical experience, the probationer may himself be entrusted with enquiries in one or two cases of complaints. During this period, the officer may acquaint himself with the rules, practice and procedure of the Revenue Department relating to (i) land registration and certificate proceedings, (ii) partition, (iii) cess and revaluation, (iv) touzi and land revenue sales and (v) treasury (judicial transactions only).

9. The probationer should then be posted to work under a senior District and Sessions Judge for training in civil and criminal work. The probationer may first sit with a Munsif, take down evidence, and with reference to the records write certain judgments himself which will be vetted by the District and Sessions Judge who should point out to him the defects, if any, in his appreciation of evidence or in his general approach to questions of law and also instruct him in the art of writing judgments. During this period, the young trainee should also acquire a practical knowledge of the working of the office of the Munsif especially in the maintenance of registers. He should work in the Nizarat to see how processes are received, served and entered in the relevant registers, how they are distributed and what sort of supervision and check are exercised over the process-servers. With a view to get acquainted with all branches of work in the Civil Court, he may be given a programme of work. He may also be deputed to the Courts of the Subordinate Judge and the District Judge for training; he should know how diaries are prepared in advance and how the work is adjusted.

10. During this period, he should also for one or two months work with an Inspector of Police to study the working of the Police Department with special reference to investigation of crimes, filing of chargesheets and launching of prosecutions, etc. He should acquire a full knowledge of the Regulations dealing with maintenance of public order and tranquillity. This early training with the police will give the young officer some idea of the practical difficulties which the police experience in collecting evidence for production in Courts in certain cases so that when, later on, as Presiding Officer, he tries cases, he would be in a better position to independently make a fair assessment of the standard of proof expected from the police in different circumstances.

11. That apart, occasional visits to jails will also prove useful and give some idea of the administration of prisons and about execution of warrants of commitment.

12. It is also necessary that he should receive some training in the High Court which should include a period to be spent as a sort of Legal Assistant under a High Court Judge. This will enable him to acquaint himself with the High Court procedure by making notes of cases heard by the Judge; this will also enable him to familiarise himself with the approach to legal problems made by the highest Court in the State. He may also be acquainted with the methods by which the work of subordinate Courts is reviewed by the High Court. This necessarily implies that he should be fully conversant with all the General Rules and Circular Orders issued by the High Court from time to time.

13. I should here like to add one word on liberal education as essential for every branch of public service, judicial or administrative. During the course of about two years' training, the young judicial officer will have time and opportunity for study of—apart from some special branches of the law at Hiralakud—literature, history, current affairs and other subjects of general interest which will help him to acquire zest for his work and enjoy life itself wherever he may be. The spirit of service with a broad outlook flowing from such liberal education is essential for an ideal public servant, judicial or executive. For this, the young trainee can make full use of his spare time, while on probation, for such general study. In this context, I should suggest that in the course of his training in the High Court he can utilize the growing High Court Library where he will find general literature on law and thus develop a broad outlook in his approach to law itself.

14. In my opinion, a freshly-recruited law graduate with such intensive general training and opportunity for liberal education—having scope for developing broad outlook on life, men and things—will be a more effective and efficient instrument than a half-hearted lawyer with three years' practice.

15. It is only after undergoing training and liberal education on the aforesaid lines that the young probationer should be vested with powers of a Third Class Magistrate and entrusted with simple cases of trial.

16. It will be a source of encouragement to these young officers if, before being posted at the outlying station at far-off places, they are given an opportunity to meet the Chief Justice and the Judges of the High Court as used to be done in the old British days, when young Civilians (members of the Indian Civil Service) before being posted to distant lands in far-flung outposts of the Empire, used to be received by the Secretary of State for India and high officers of the India Office in Whitehall. Here in Orissa also, officers have to be posted in areas—far away from their homes and at stations situated in the midst of Adivasi population—with special problems of their own; properly trained officers with a broad outlook will alone be able to adjust themselves to the set-up of these areas.

17. In spite of the difficulties and in spite of the scope for improvement in many directions, I have no doubt that by and large our judicial officers have been able to give a good account of themselves and I feel proud of them. Bright, sincere officers can always hope for elevation to the highest judicial post in the State including a seat in the High Court Bench. The Orissa High Court, as I have already said in my previous talks, has been built on traditions dating back over half a century. It should therefore be a matter of pride for our young judicial officers—whose independence after the completion of separation is now completely assured—that they should be receiving guidance, inspiration and central direction from the High Court.

REVIEWS

PROBATION AND PAROLE: By I. S. Saharyia with a Foreword by Mr. Justice S. K. Verma of the Allahabad High Court. Published by Messrs. Mukat Publications, 5/14, Roop Nagar, Delhi 7. In 4 parts—Part I Pp. 47, Par II Pp. 130, Part III Pp. 101 and Part IV Pp. 151. Price Rs. 12.50.

Crime is as old as humanity itself. The first crime ever committed was by Cain, the son of Adam, the father of the human race. Ever since, the human society is being confronted with the problem of increasing incidence of crime and the consequent necessity of devising the ways of combating that trend. Prevention of crimes is now-a-days sought through the deterrent effect of a threatened suffering, a punishment, which is to be inflicted upon the transgressor after the accusation against him has been investigated in legal proceedings of a special kind and after the guilt of the accused person has been decided in those proceedings. Normally, when there is a conviction a sentence must follow the conviction, as a matter of law, in each and every case.

The objects of punishment are said to be fourfold, namely, (1) to serve as a deterrent to other persons who may be similarly inclined, (2) to be preventive, (3) to be reformative, and (4) to be retributive. Amongst them, the all important one is the first, the others being merely accessory.

Even so there has been of late a great social pressure for the reformative aspect of treatment to the convicts.

The penal philosophy now looks upon the criminal as a sickman needing individual treatment. Individuals are normally law-abiding and they deviate from the path of rectitude by accident or sheer force of circumstances beyond their control. Both the State and the society owe a duty to these unfortunate people to wean them away from a life of crime by removing the social causes of crime and by creating conditions which would ensure them a happy domestic life. Therefore, the State Governments have enacted legislation on probation of offenders, childrens' welfare, prisoners' premature release, etc., aiming at the individualised treatment of prisoners. The Government of India have also enacted the Probation of Offenders Act, 1958, which emphasises the reclamation and rehabilitation of the convict as a useful and self-reliant member of the society.

In the book under review, the probation and parole procedures, presently in force, along with other relevant information on the subject, have been compiled under one cover. The book has been divided into four parts. The first part deals with bail and also the rules which regulate interviews by the prisoners serving sentence, with their relatives and friends. The second part deals with the provisions which may enable a prisoner to secure release or leave under the various measures sponsored by the Government. Part III deals with juvenile delinquency. In this part, the author has referred to the causes of juvenile delinquency and the several theories relating to the subject and the various measures applied to prevent juvenile delinquency. There is also a chapter in this part on open prison camps system, which is being tried in several parts of this country. The information contained in this part is both instructive and interesting. In Part IV, the relevant Acts and rules with the latest amendments have been given. Notes with case law have been added wherever necessary. There can be no doubt that this book would prove immensely useful to the Bench, Bar, probation officers and students of law and their teachers.

STEVENS AND BORRIE'S ELEMENTS OF MERCANTILE LAW. 15th Edition. By Gordon J. Borrie, LL.M., Bar-at Law. Butterworths, London. 1969. (Sole selling Agents: Eastern Law House Pvt. Ltd. Calcutta). pp. xlvii & 557 Price 20s.

Published originally in 1890, the present work has now run into the fifteenth edition. In his Foreword to the first edition, Mr. T. M. Stevens, M.A., B.C.L., observed: "Few mercantile men are unwise enough to deal with any legal matter of serious importance without the aid of their solicitors. Yet in the affairs of everyday life it will frequently happen that a knowledge of Mercantile Law is almost a necessity....." That statement is as true today as ever before. In the present edition the work of revision and rewriting has continued and there have been changes in the text as well as in the presentation, but its main purpose continues to be that of providing a wide ranging survey of the whole subject of Mercantile Law in one volume so as to serve as a real guide for people in industry and commerce. The author has tried to view the book as a whole and to reshape it so that every topic is developed as clearly as possible.

2. The book consists of Six Parts, the first part taking a general view of the Law of Contracts, and the next two explain agency and partnership, and the principal types of mercantile contracts like sale of good; hire-purchase; bills of exchange and other negotiable instruments; cheques, promissory notes, and bank notes; insurance; carriage of goods by land, air and sea; suretyship and guarantees; money-lenders and their contracts; bailment, mortgage, pledge, and lien; shipping and contracts of employment. Bankruptcy, arbitrations, and the protection of commerce are the topics of the last three parts, the final part focussing attention on monopolies and restrictive trade practices, patents and designs, trade marks and trade libel, trade descriptions, and copyright. The law is given as it stood on 1st December 1968.

Mention should be made of the table of statutes, the table of cases, and index.

3. Mercantile Law is a compendious name given to several branches of the law affecting commerce, trade and industry, and the basic foundation is the Law of Contract in all its ramifications as applied with adaptations to the different fields mentioned, and Indian Mercantile Law is largely based upon the corresponding English Law, which the present volume makes it easy to understand and appreciate. The book should be useful also to students, whether they are studying to be lawyers or concerning themselves with Mercantile Law as part of the professional courses of the various accountancy, secretarial and insurance bodies. COMMENTARIES ON THE PAYMENT OF BONUS ACT, 1965. By K. D. Srivastava, Advocate. Eastern Book Company, 34th Lal Bagh, Lucknow, 3rd Edition. 1970. Pp. xlv and 447. Price, Rs. 25.

Considering that the Payment of Bonus Act is an enactment that takes one nearer to the goal of social justice as laid down in Part IV of the Indian Constitution, it is perhaps not surprising that commentaries on the Act should be coming out in plenty (See P. Berarwalla, and D. N. Vohra). The Bonus Commission construed the concept of bonus as sharing by the workers in the prosperity of the concern in which they are employed. In order to compute bonus, a reference to the various provisions of the Companies Act and Income tax Act has been made in the Act, and the author of the present volume has tried to incorporate all such provisions and to explain their relations with the provisions of this Act. Subsequent to the passing of the Act, the Supreme Court had occasion to examine the Act as a whole in the Jalan Trading Company's case, and its judgment overrides the principle that bonus could be paid on the net profit and could not be claimed otherwise. The policy regarding the payment of minimum bonus, even if there are no profits, has been held intra vires the Constitution. However, a recent judgment of the Supreme Court has laid down that a claim for bonus relating to an establishment not being a factory, employing less than twenty workers, cannot be subject matter of an industrial dispute as it does not come within the four corners of the Act, and has negatived the contention that the preamble or S. 32 (class of employee to whom the Act does not apply) or S. 39 (application of Industrial Disputes Act) would lead to any other interpretation as to the scope of the Act. Another important decision of the Allahabad High Court holds that the phrase "whether there are profits in accounting year or not" in S. 10 of the Act does not envisage payment of bonus in case of loss.

2. According to the Supreme Court, the scheme of the Act, broadly stated, is to impose statutory liability on the employer to pay bonus to employees; to define the principle of payment of bonus according to the prescribed formula; to provide for payment of minimum and maximum bonus and linking it with the scheme of 'set-off' and 'set on'; and to provide machinery for the enforcement of the liability to pay bonus. The Act provides for the computation and payment of bonus on unit-wise basis in accordance with the formula laid down under it. To arrive at surplus available for payment of bonus, deductions will be made from gross profits for depreciation, development rebate, direct taxes, and other items.

3. The work under review opens with an introduction in which are considered the historical approach to bonus, industrial truce resolution, committee on profit-sharing, Bonus formula, Bonus Commission, and summary of conclusions and recommendations. The Payment of Bonus Act has 39 sections and 4 Schedules, each section followed by commentary, synopsis, and, where necessary, notes and illustrations. Sections 4-8 deal inter alia with computation of gross profits and available surplus, eligibility and disqualification for bonus, and three of the Sections cover time limit for payment of bonus, recovery of bonus due from an employer, and reference of disputes under the Act. Sections 28-37 are concerned with penalty, offences by companies, cognisance of offences, power of exemption, and power to remove difficulties.

4. The author has tried to bring the case-law up to date. Some of the recent court pronouncements and a note on the Report of the National Labour Commission have been included. In the concluding pages are the Schedules to the Act and a useful subject-index; the table of cases comes earlier. All who are concerned with the claim for, and settlement of bonus, should find the volume eminently useful. R.S.S.

THE LAW RELATING TO GOVERNMENT CONTROL OVER PRIVATE ENTERPRISE. (Cases and Materials). By Dr. N. R. Madhava Menon, LL. M., Ph. D., and Narasimhaswamy G. Mysore, LL. M., (Dallas, Texas, and Harvard). Eastern Book Company, 34 Lalbagh, Lucknow. Pp. xxiii and 463. Price, Rs. 20.

What is the nature of the right of business under the Indian Constitution? What are the powers of the State in regard to control over this right of the citizen? What is the nature and scope of the law on monopolies and restrictive trade practices? Any other forms of control? What is the mechanism of controls and how is it administered? These and other related questions the present publication attempts to answer with the help of cases and statutory materials. It gives a comprehensive picture of the scope and extent of the law relating to Government control of business with particular emphasis on the constitutional and legal framework in which controls operate and their organisational and administrative structure.

2. Article 39 of the Constitution lays down the control and regulation of business in the interests of the general public as a principle 'fundamental in the governance of the country'. Articles 38, 41, 42 and 43 impose duties upon the State which affect its economic policies, and Art. 19 (1) (g) states that all citizens shall have the right to practise any profession, or to carry on any occupation, trade or business'. The Articles raise issues such as: Who has the right to do business and what is business or occupation? Who can control it and what is 'restriction'? Should a State monopoly be created by a 'reasonable' law? What is 'reasonable'? What is the place of Article 301 in the area of public control over private business? These questions are presented in the first chapter of the book with appropriate cases. An essay has been included on the case method as against the lecture method, by John H. Jackson, Visiting Professor at the Delhi University. In the context of the declared objectives of the Constitution and in the context of the country's socio-economic realities, the authors examine the nature, scope and extent of the control. The second chapter considers the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Bill, which incorporates controls of a far-reaching character on private enterprise in India, and in the third chapter the authors look briefly into the salient provisions of some of the most important economic regulatory laws with a view to appraising their place in the scheme of control. The concentration of economic power is discussed under the heads of the effects and causes of such concentration, legislative and non-legislative methods of dealing with it, and what legislation in other countries has done to tackle it. Among the statutes included in the third chapter are the Industries (Development and Regulation) Act 1951; the Capital Issues Control Act 1947; the Essential Commodities Act 1955; the Companies Act 1956; the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act 1947; the Imports and Exports Control Act 1947, and the Tax Laws and Private Enterprise. It includes a list of the all-India control orders in an appendix. In the fourth chapter on the administration and enforcement of controls, the authors try to identify some of the basic problems and to suggest possible alternatives with a view to suggesting an effective scheme of enforcement of controls. The final chapter gives the text of the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act, which received the President's assent on 27th December 1969.

3. The book contains a table of cases and a subject index. The authors, who are members of the Faculty of Law, University of Delhi, have tried to avoid opinions and generalisations and have placed before the reader materials which outline the problem, analyse the issues and suggest problem-solving techniques. Their work should be of topical interest at a time like the present when the octopus-like tentacles of the public sector are by slow degrees closing in on more and more fields of industrial and commercial activity in the country. Lawyers, law students, businessmen and others interested in the administration of economic regulations should find it useful.

COCKLE'S CASES AND STATUTES ON EVIDENCE. 11th Edition by G.D. Nokes, LL.D., Bar-at-law, Sweet and Maxwell, London, 1970. (N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Bombay), Pp. xxvii & 590, Price Rs. 70.20.

Of the three parts in the latest edition of this well-known book, Part I contains a number of decisions of the House of Lords given since the last edition, and Part II reflects the considerable recent legislation affecting the law of Evidence. Several statutes have been repealed and numerous additions made, including the Civil Evidence Act, 1968, the Rules made in pursuance of which will be found among the revised Rules of the Supreme Court in Part III, which also contains a number of Rules on other matters made since the last edition.

2. The first three of the fifteen sections in the book deal with the functions of the judge and jury, matters of which proof is not required, and relevance. In the case of trial by jury, one should distinguish the respective functions of the judge and jury, as they both have to deal with the evidence tendered, although in a different manner. Matters which are considered too notorious to require proof are judicially noticed, without any evidence being required thereof. A convenient classification of matters judicially noticed is that of Law and Custom, Public Administration, and common knowledge. Evidence may be given on facts in issue, facts relevant to the facts in issue, and facts relevant to the admissibility or weight of evidence, and cases are given to illustrate some common situations in which the relevance of facts is considered.

3. Sections 4 to 11 cover inadmissibility, oral evidence, and hearsay. Even though facts are relevant, they may be excluded as inadmissible, because they do not comply with a rule affecting admissibility. Such rules are mainly rules of inadmissibility or exclusion, though there are many exceptions to them. In this and the following two sections seven rules affecting admissibility are illustrated. The rule against hearsay is also a rule of inadmissibility or exclusion but subject to many exceptions. The Civil Evidence Act, 1968 has made material inroads on the rule. The cases included in these sections are applicable to criminal proceedings; they illustrate the general rule against oral and documentary hearsay and are followed by decisions on the principal exceptions to the rule. A further group of exceptions to the rule against hearsay consists of declarations by deceased persons. There are six types of such declaration, each of which is illustrated in this section, which also considers another group of actual or apparent exceptions consisting of the repetition or production of statements by persons absent from the trial. The law allows three modes of proof and evidence viz., oral or parol evidence, documentary, and real evidence. The cases presented also deal with the cross-examination of opposing witnesses and the re-examination of witnesses by counsel who called them.

4. Sections 12 to 15 consider documentary evidence, real evidence, burden and standard of proof, and the effect of evidence. The decisions in this section illustrate the rules concerning primary and secondary evidence and the modes by which the execution of documents may be established. The weight of the evidence adduced depends partly on rules of law or practice, and some of them are mentioned under the heading of cogency, and they are followed by the rules relating to corroboration.

5. In Part II are given extracts from Acts of Parliament from 1609 to 1969, arranged in chronological order, and in Part III, on the Rules of Evidence, extracts appear from the Rules of the Supreme Court, the Matrimonial Causes Rules, County Court Rules, Magistrates' Courts Rules, Coroner's Rules and Judges' Rules. The table of cases, the table of Statutes, the table of books cited, and index, are useful appurtenances to the volume BUILDING SOCIETY LAW (CASES AND MATERIALS). By C. E. Thornton, F. Inst. L. Ex., A.B.S., Solicitor of the Supreme Court, and J. P. McErien, A.B.S., Solicitor of the Supreme Court. Sweet and Maxwell, London. 1970. (N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Bombay). Pp. xix and 151. Price, Rs. 36.

The present statutory basis for building societies in England is the Building Societies Act, 1962. Under the Act a building society may be established for raising, by the subscription of the members, a stock or fund for making advances to members out of the funds of the Society upon security by way of mortgage of freehold or leasehold estate. A companion volume to Wurtzburg and Mills' Building Society Law, the present publication, prepared under the auspices of the Building Societies Institute, London, gives particular attention to the judgments of courts called upon to apply the provisions of the statute to specific circumstances, for, a more comprehensive understanding of case law is essential to the examination student. The cases included in this volume have been selected from the many reported which have either directly involved building societies or have had an important effect on the activities of building societies. They have been grouped together with relevant sections or extracts from legislation and linked by commentaries and notes.

2. The book contains four chapters, of which the first deals with the objects of building societies, membership, commencement of business, rules and directors and officers. The next one covers investments, capacity to invest, rights and liabilities of investors, withdrawals, interest calculation, transfer of shares, intestacy of member, pass books and deposits. Chapter III is concerned with advances by societies, capacity of the borrower, creation of a mortgage, rights of a mortgagee on default by a mortgagor, interest, the borrower's covenants, redemption of the mortgage, form of receipt, effect of misrepresentation or ignorance of contents of a mortgage and fraudulent completion of mortgage application form. The position of the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies, amalgamations, and investment of surplus funds are tackled in the fourth and last chapter.

3. There is also a table of cases, a table of statutes, a table of statutory instruments, and an index.

4. The book is an attempt to present a more comprehensive statement of the law than would have been possible from the cases alone. Practitioners in this branch of law would find useful the co-ordination in one volume of leading cases affecting building society practice. While primarily intended for the student who prepares for the examinations of the Building Societies Institute, these publications should also be able to give those interested a practical knowledge of building society techniques. R.S.S.

CURRENT LEGAL PROBLEMS 1968.

Edited by George W. Keeton and Georg Schwarzenberger. Volume 21. Stevens & Sons Ltd., 11 New Fetter Lane, London. (In India: N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Bombay). Pp. vii & 267. Price, Rs. 81.

This is the twenty-first volume of Current Legal Problems. It contains, together with the Bentham Club Presidential address of Lord MacDermott, Lord Chief Justice of Northern Ireland, on "the Interrogation of suspects in custody", the public lectures delivered in the Faculty of Laws of University College, London, by members of the staff and of the London Institute of International affairs as well as members of the staff of the Universities of Oxford, London, and Virginia. These lectures dwell at length on selected topics of branches of criminal law and procedure, administrative law, maritime law, air law, space law, labour law and tax law.

2. In his Presidential address, Lord MacDermott discusses the question whether the police or others in authority should be at liberty to interrogate a person suspected of having committed a criminal offence while that person is in custody, either de jure or de facto. The question is bound up with associated subjects to which the noble Lord refers, viz., protection against self-incrimination; the admissibility of the voluntary confession; the inherent discretion of the Courts to promote a fair trial; and the Judge's Rules. The lecturer arrives at conclusions of a wide and tentative nature in the hope that they may stimulate discussion and promote something really good.

3. In the second lecture, on social defence and control of the dangerous offender, Professor J.L.J. Edwards, of Toronto, covers the topics of conflicting penal philosophies, the parole system, the role of medical practitioners, recent developments in the U. K. society interests and the individual offender. When it comes to the moment of sentencing of a convicted offender, the lecturer would seem to advocate the association of non-legal assessors with the strictly judicial personnel.

4. Speaking on the Ombudsman and the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration, Lord Lloyd concludes that for the present these institutions hold a more practical prospect of help to the ordinary citizen than a complex administrative Court with all the attendant technicalities and expense, and in the next lecture Prof. H. W. R. Wade examines whether the present system of English administrative law is the right one and whether it can cope with the great growth of governmental power. Is the traditional common law technique the right one, he asks, or would it be better to make a new start with a special administrative jurisdiction of the French type? What are the weaknesses and dangers in the present system and how can they best be remedied?

5. The wreck of the oil tanker Torrey Canyon has given Prof. G. W. Keeton an opportunity of examining the inadequacies of the existing law applicable to oil pollution and the carriage of oil by sea in its English law aspects, and E. D. Brown has tried to examine many of the rules and principles of the international law of the sea, of which the present case is an interesting study. Prof. Bin Cheng, on the other hand, speaks about the role played by analogies and fictions in developing air law and space law. In his lecture on collective labour agreements in U. S. A., Prof. Gregory points out how the U. S. Supreme Court decisions have placed in the hands of labour unions the sole power of administering and enforcing them, and how that Court has undertaken to create an effective body of law to fill legislative lacunae in this sphere. The attitude of the Courts and the Legislatures to tax avoidance is the subject of M. O. Flesch's lecture; he would define tax avoidance "as the lawful carrying out of a transaction which was either entered into, or took a particular form, for the purpose of minimising taxation," or, in other words, tax planning, rather than as "the art of dodging tax without actually breaking the law."

6. The subjects of the other lectures are "Town and County Planning" and "From the Laws of War to the Law of armed Conflict." The volume contains a table of cases, a table of statutes, a table of treatises and an index.

SOVIET LEGAL SYSTEM. (Civil & Military Law Journal Special Number, Vol. 4, Nos. 3-4, 1968) D-1/24, Rajouri Garden, New Delhi 27. Founder-Editor: H. S. Bhatia. Price Rs. 8.

This special number of the Civil and Military Law Journal presents the Soviet legal system in its historical, analytical, and philosophical aspects, and it should promote greater understanding and goodwill between India and U. S. S. R. The 1917 Decree abolished all pre-revolutionary legal institutions and shattered the whole legal order, and new revolutionary decrees were issued outlining the new socialist State. The apotheosis of the State—that would seem to be the end and aim of all Soviet law and legal procedure. Fundamentally a creation of the Constitution, everything done to subserve the ends laid down in that constitution is legal. Offences against the State are considered heinous and punishment is severe.

2. The striking features of the Soviet legal system are its socialist legality, persuasive and coercive methods, elective judiciary, procuracy, and rigorous legislative activity, and it is designed to promote and consolidate its social order and economic progress. Statutory law is the main source of law, and customs, precedents, traditions, ethics, and natural law do not play any significant part in the making of laws. In the law schools 'case method' is not followed, and students study only the codes and statutes and their proper application and interpretation as exemplified in Court practice.

3. Legal aid in the Soviet Union is rendered by the Legal Adviser's Office, and lawyers are associated in collectives or collegiums, which organise legal aid to individuals and organisations. The lawyer in the Legal Aid Office gives the requisite legal advice and represents his client in civil and criminal cases. The fees, which are fixed, are paid to the Legal Aid Office; about a fourth is deducted for expenses, vacations and free legal aid, and balance is returned to the lawyer who earned them.

4. The Constituent Assembly and the Constitution of the U. S. S. R. are dealt with under the heads of social and State structure, Organs of State power and organisation, the Courts, fundamental rights, the electoral system and procedure for amending the Constitution. Another article describes the working of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the U. S. S. R., the highest body of State power in the country, while the constitution, structure, and functions of the Supreme Court of the U. S. S. R. are covered in another. Law in the U. S. S. R. has two characters—persuasion and coercion. The Editor's contribution on "comradely justice" canvasses the former, while the coercive aspect of Soviet military laws, and their deterrent nature are brought out in the article on "Military Crimes and Punishment." Two other articles in the issue provide a lot of information on how the existing standard of military discipline is being maintained in the military forces by means of military laws. Even in U. S. S. R. labour disputes still occur and the procedure of their settlement is detailed in one of the contributions. Two of the articles trace Russian legal history upto 1917 and examine the reforms introduced in the reign of Tsar Alexander II (1855-81). Other articles dwell on the supervisory power vested in the Soviet Procurator's Office, agricultural progress as a result of the enforcement of the law of collective farming, Soviet family law, and the Militia which is employed for the maintenance of Public order.

INCOME TAX GUIDE, 1969-70. (On corporate and personal taxation). By A. G. Venkataraman, A. C. A. 1 Cart Track Road, T'Nagar, Madras 17. 2nd Edition (Revised and enlarged) Pp. ix and 287. Price Rs. 18/-.

Important among the direct taxes in India are the tax on income under the Income Tax Act 1961 and the surtax on companies under the Companies (Profits) Surtax Act 1964. The levy of super-profits tax on companies introduced in 1963 was discontinued from the assessment year 1964-65, and a new surtax on companies was introduced in its place. Other direct taxes are the Estate Duty introduced in 1953, the Wealth Tax in 1957, and the Gift Tax in 1958. The annual Finance Acts passed by the Indian Parliament give effect to the financial proposals of the Government of India each year and make necessary changes in the rates of various direct and indirect taxes applicable to different types of assesseees in each assessment year. The Finance Act also amends a number of sections of the direct and indirect tax laws of the country. The changes and amendments made every year are so numerous that it will be difficult for assesseees, accountants, business executives and tax advisers, to discharge their duties in a proper manner unless an up-to-date book, explaining the provisions of the Act clearly and concisely, is available as a practical 'Guide' for ready reference. For the assessment year, 1971-72, for example, the latest Finance Act raises the maximum amount of total income exempt from the income-tax to Rs. 5,000 per annum.

2. While revising the present 'Guide' for its latest edition, all amendments made in the direct tax laws until the presentation of the 1969, Finance Act have been taken into account. The Finance Act, 1968 and the Finance Act, 1969 introduced amendments and changes in tax rates effective from different assessment years. In Part I of this Guide these amendments and changes, exemptions and incentives, have been discussed under the heads of changes effective from the assessment year 1968-69, those effective from the assessment year 1969-70 and 1970-71. The provisions of the Income Tax Act 1961, Companies Profits (Surtax) Act 1964 and other direct tax laws, as amended by the Finance Act 1969, with special reference to their applicability to corporate bodies and individuals, have been discussed under appropriate heads in the subsequent parts.

3. Part II, on the principles of tax law, describes assessable persons and assessable incomes, computation of taxable income, allowable deductions, tax deduction at source, assessment procedure and administration, penalties and double taxation relief. Part III, on tax exemptions and incentives to industries, discusses depreciation allowance, development rebate, tax holiday and tax credit certificates. The rates of taxation, capital gains tax, taxation of closely controlled domestic companies, concessions to foreign companies, and tax aspects of foreign collaboration arrangements, are examined in Part IV, and Surtax on corporate bodies is the subject of the next part. In Part VI, on income tax on individuals, the author analyses the general principles, deductible incomes, rates of tax, capital gains tax, annuity deposits, and scheme of Public Provident Funds, while Part VII explains briefly the essential provisions of the Wealth Tax, Gift Tax and Estate Duty.

4. As the book is intended as a practical guide for the benefit of accountants, tax advisers and business executives the tax laws have been analysed with an emphasis on their practical aspects, with reference, where necessary, to the income-tax rules and notifications of the Central Board of Direct Taxes. These rules and notifications, as well as the First Schedule to the Finance Act 1969 have been included in the appendices at the end of the book. This is a useful handbook for ready reference not only to Indian companies but also to foreign businessmen and industrialists.

BASU'S SHORTER CONSTITUTION OF INDIA. By Justice Durga Das Basu, Judge, Calcutta High Court, and Tagore Law Professor, Calcutta University. S. C. Sarkar & Sons (Private) Ltd., 1-C College Square, Calcutta, 12. 6th Edition, 1970. Pp. iv & 544. Price, Rs. 40.

The Union of India is a sovereign democratic republic whose aim is to secure for its citizens justice, liberty, and equality, and to promote fraternity among them. Parts I and II of its Constitution (Arts. 1-11) deal with the Union and its territory and citizenship, Parts III and IV, with the fundamental rights (Arts. 12-35) and directive principles of State policy (Arts. 36-51); Part V covers the Union Executive, Legislature and Judiciary (Arts. 52-151), and Part VI, the State Executive, Legislature and Judiciary (Arts. 152-226).

2. Part III concerns equality before law; prohibition of discrimination on grounds of religion, race, caste, sex, or place of birth; equality of opportunity in matters of employment; abolition of untouchability and of titles; protection of certain rights regarding freedom of speech, assembly, association, movement and residence, and freedom to hold property and to practise any profession. It considers also protection in respect of conviction for offences, protection of life and property and against arrest and detention in certain cases, prohibition of traffic in human beings, freedom of conscience and religion, protection of minorities, compulsory acquisition of property, and remedies for the enforcement of rights conferred by this Part.

3. Part IV lays down that the State shall secure a social order for the promotion of the welfare of the people, take steps for the organisation of village panchayats, and provide for securing the right to work and to education, effective humane conditions of work, living wage for the worker, uniform civil code for the citizens, free and compulsory education of children, promotion of the educational and economic interests of the weaker classes, organisation of agriculture and animal husbandry, protection of monuments, and separation of judiciary and executive. When there is a conflict between the provisions of Part III and those of Part IV, those of Part III shall prevail.

4. The provisions regarding the Union Judiciary and the State Judiciary are included in Parts V and VI. The former Part (Arts. 124-147) dwells on the establishment and constitution of the Supreme Court, Salaries etc., of judges; appointment of acting Chief Justice and appointment of ad hoc judges; Supreme Court to be a Court of record; appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in appeals from High Courts in civil and criminal cases; special leave to appeal by the Supreme Court; review of judgments or orders; conferment of powers to issue certain writs; enforcement of decrees and orders; its consultative functions; its officers and servants, and expenses. Part VI (Arts. 215-226) considers the constitution of State High Courts; appointment and conditions of the office of a High Court Judge; restriction in practice after being a permanent judge; salaries etc.; transfers from one High Court to another; appointment of acting Chief Justice and power of the High Courts to issue certain writs.

5. For the volume for Art. 227 to the end, table of cases and index, a 'Due Slip' has been inserted at the close of the publication. The latest edition has been revised and enlarged under each Article and the arrangement has been improved. The text of the Constitution has been corrected upto the Twenty-third Amendment (1969), and case law upto the end of 1969 as well as several unreported decisions have been incorporated in the book.

TRADE UNION LAW. By J. N. Mallik, M. A., LL.B., Advocate. S. C. Sarkar & Sons, Private Ltd., Calcutta 12. 1st Edition, 1970. Pp. xxii & 247. Price, Rs. 17.50.

The industrial worker in India considers the trade union essential for economic gains, job security, and protection against unfairness, and the Government, which carefully fostered the growth of trade unionism in its infancy, is now having to regulate and control it in the wider interests of the community and the individuals who compose it. The present work discusses this aspect historically and analytically through the changing laws and judicial decisions in India and abroad. The Courts too are assuming wider jurisdiction, issuing declarations regarding union rules, even when the party concerned is a non-unionist or employer, and not a contracting party with the union; the book deals elaborately with the question of individual rights vis-à-vis the union (For English Court decisions see R. S. S. M.: Case-book on Industrial Law 1969.)

2. The National Commission on Labour, whose report was published in August 1969, makes three important points on how to tackle intra-union rivalry and promote recognition, how the trade unions should undertake social responsibilities, and how wasteful strikes should be controlled (see Mrs. P. Chakraborty: Strikes & Morale in Industry, 1969). The Commission also recommended the setting up of an Industrial Relations Commission for the settlement of disputes, and the present volume discusses their recommendations in detail, as well as relevant English and American laws touching trade unions, along with the provisions in the Indian law. The inadequacies in the law are pin-pointed and recent trends in trade union legislation noted.

3. The introductory chapters in Part I of the book deal with the history of trade union legislation, different classes of union and their powers and functions and the Code of Discipline and the Code of Conduct. The relationship of trade unions in respect of the constitution and of the laws of contract, torts, and crimes, and the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947 are then examined. The Calcutta High Court decisions in Jay Engineering Works v. State (AIR 1969 Cal 407) and Reserve Bank v. Aahis (73 CWN 388) on the question of immunity of trade unions from civil and criminal liability are duly noticed. Apart from the topics of Government employees and trade unions, and vicarious litigation and trade unions, compulsory unionism, and unions and the law of meetings, are considered at length. Compulsory registration of unions has been mooted in order to obviate the inconvenience felt by unincorporated associations, although recognised but lacking in legal personality, in matters of litigation. Another recent judicial decision is important from the point of view of the law governing trade union meetings. The book also contains general discussions of the Trade Unions Act, 1926 with reference to the general law and allied matters.

4. Part II contains the text with commentary on the Indian Trade Unions Act, 1926. Registration and recognition, Union Rule Book and enforcement of rules, expulsion of members, and election and jurisdiction of Courts are covered. Both the parts contain discussions about enforcement of agreements, strikes, picketing and collective bargaining. The appendix reproduces the inchoate Indian Trade Unions (Amendment) Act, 1947, the State Amendments, the Central and West Bengal Regulations, and the English enactments on the subject.

5. The book should be of value to lawyers and Judges, scholars working in the field of labour relations, trade unionists, and employers and officials connected with trade union activities. The standpoint of the author has been that of a man of law and he has dwelt on those aspects of trade unionism which fall within the scope of the existing laws governing trade unions.

6. An index of cases and a subject index are useful features of the Book. R.S.S.

INCOME TAX. By Sukumar Mitra, M.A. (Cantab), Bar-at-Law. S. C. Sarkar & Sons (P.) Ltd., 1-C College Square, Calcutta 12. 1970. Pp. xiv & 332. Price, Rs. 28.

The Income Tax Act, 1961 came into effect from 1st April 1962 and the annual Finance Acts passed by the Indian Parliament give effect to the financial proposals of Government each year. The fundamental thing about Income Tax is the principle that "taxation is entirely a creature of statute, and there is no common law applicable to it." In determining whether a tax is payable by a person, the only guide is the clear wording of the statute, and the author of the present book has therefore, stated fully the effect of the cases on the construction of the statute. He has discussed cases cited in the United Kingdom which still apply with regard to the broad principles and cases under the Income-tax Act, 1922, whenever the provision in the older Act is more or less identical. The idea of income-tax has come to India from the United Kingdom and some of the principles laid down by the Courts in that country have also been followed in India. The author has appended a fairly elaborate index of subjects, indicating against each item the relevant sections of the 1961 Act, so that the reader may readily find an answer to any of his doubts.

2. The Income Tax Act, 1961 describes the sources of income for the purposes of the Act and prescribes methods of computing the income. Tax is charged on the total income of a person earned in the previous year, and a 'person' includes an individual, a Hindu undivided family, a company, a firm, an association of persons, a local authority, and every artificial, juridical person. The 'total income' is the aggregate of all income under the heads of salaries, interest on securities, income from house property, profits and gains of business or profession, capital gains, and income from other sources. It is the duty of every person whose total income exceeds the maximum amount which is not chargeable to income-tax to make a return in the prescribed form, furnishing all prescribed particulars and duly verified. If, on an examination of the return, the Income Tax Officer feels satisfied about its correctness, he makes an assessment of the total income and computes the tax payable on the basis of such return. A person may become entitled to refund of tax collected from him by deduction at source. There is a provision barring civil suits to set aside or modify any assessment and any prosecution or other proceeding against any Government officer.

3. Apart from the introductory chapter, which traces the history of income-tax in India and its administration, there are eleven chapters in the book under review. The nature of the tax, exemptions and exclusions, basis of charge, determination of total income, assessment, appeals and revisions, and civil Courts and their jurisdiction, are described in some of them, while the others deal with tax avoidance, penalty, recovery of tax, and refund.

4. In the present book, which contains a table of cases, the endeavour has been to state the general principles governing the law of income-tax simply and clearly. R.S.S.

THE UNITED NATIONS IN A CHANGING WORLD. By J. A. C. Gutteridge, M. A., (Oxon). Manchester University Press, 316-334 Oxford Road, Manchester. (In India: N. M. Tripathi (Private) Limited, Princess Street, Bombay 2) 1969. Pp. vii & 111. Price, Rs. 32.40.

The handy volume under review embodies the lectures delivered by Miss Gutteridge as a Melland Schill Endowment International Law lectures at the University of Manchester. After an introductory chapter discussing the United Nations Charter as a living document, the book examines in great detail the legal capacity of the U. N. in relation to the maintenance of international peace and security, the problems of non-self-governing territories, and developments in the field of economic co-operation. It sums up in broad lines the present state of the U. N., its developments and the practical results of its working. In the twenty-five years that have elapsed since the drawing up of the U. N. Charter, many problems and situations have arisen not specifically foreseen at the time, and the present book considers how far the Charter has been able to meet the needs of the greatly expanded international community today, and takes into account the new procedures which have been devised to meet them in the light of the Purposes and Principles of the U. N.

2. The learned lecturer discusses three main problems. The first concerns situations within the boundaries of States which, because of their international implications, are potentially explosive. The second is the desire of States, which have themselves recently emerged from a colonial or dependent status, to bring colonialism in all its forms to an end and to envisage independence as the ultimate objective. The third problem is economic; the concern of the new States for the use and development of their natural resources and for the existing imbalance between themselves and the more developed countries. The three recent developments in the field of international trade and development are the establishment of the UNCTAD, UNIDO, and UNICITRAL (the last standing for the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law). The lecturer gives some account of the structure of these bodies and the purposes for which they were set up, considering in each case on what provisions of the Charter they are based. Important in itself, Unicitral is development of particular interest to lawyers, and the lecturer considers how it came into being, what its objectives are and what its constitutional basis is under the Charter. The establishment of Unicitral is an important stage in the evolution of international law and the Commission itself will have an important part to play in the progressive development of international law, and its codification in the field of international trade, as well as its unification.

3. The appendices include the Preamble, Purposes and Principles of the U. N. Charter and the Dumbarton Oaks proposals, which contained in embryo the proposals that subsequently materialised, and the index includes detailed references to the Charter clauses and General Assembly resolutions.

4. Having spent most of her working life in the legal branch of the U. K. Foreign Service, Miss Gutteridge was legal adviser to the U. K. Permanent Delegation to the United Nations at New York, where she had unique opportunities for seeing the day-to-day working of the U. N. Her present publication should be of interest to all serious readers and to students of international law and affairs.

SIMPLIFIED TEXT BOOK OF MEDICAL JURISPRUDENCE AND TOXICOLOGY. (For classrooms and courtrooms). With 174 illustrations. By C. K. Parikh, Hon. Professor of Medical Jurisprudence and Toxicology, Seth G. S. Medical College, Bombay. With Forewords by Dr. Keith Simpson (University of London), Dr. D. J. Reddy (Sri Venkateswara University, Tirupathi), and Mr. Justice S. P. Kotval, Chief Justice, High Court of Maharashtra, Bombay. Medical Publications, D/12 York House, Colaba Causeway, Bombay 1. 1st Edition, 1970. Price, Rs. 36.

Medical jurisprudence and forensic medicine are closely related subjects; medical jurisprudence deals with the legal aspects of medicine and forensic medicine deals with the medical aspects of law. Toxicology is that branch of medical science which deals with the character and properties of poisons, the symptoms they produce, the nature of the total results and the methods of their detection. And here is a compact and authoritative piece of work which deals clearly and comprehensively with the entire subject, from the view-point as much of the medical student and medical practitioner as of the criminal lawyer and police surgeon. The introductory chapter opens with a description of the legal procedure at an inquest, the difficulties in the detection of crimes, procedure in court, medical evidence, kinds of witnesses, and the duties of a doctor in the witness box. The paragraphs in Section 1, on post-mortem examination, detail the precautions to be taken which are commonly missed and the procedure to be followed in order to bring about results that will later stand the test of cross-examination. In the succeeding Section is a discussion of problems relating to hanging, drowning, drug addiction, and poisoning, with due emphasis on Indian conditions, laws, and practices. As Justice Kotval observes, in criminal cases, easily noticeable is the want of experience or carelessness of the doctor, who should not be content with merely finding the cause of death but should make a fair and accurate report of the condition of the body as a whole. Equally glaring is the lack of knowledge of the legal requirements for proof of an offence. The problem of transplantation of human parts, the latest development in science, has been covered in this volume. The crux of the problem lies in determining when death takes place, and this can be decided upon only by the courts on the evidence of medical men and their definition of death. Section 5 gives the bare texts of the relevant sections of the Indian Evidence Act, Criminal Procedure Code and the Indian Penal Code immediately after the chapter dealing with the law governing the medical profession.

2. The other Sections in this part cover, inter alia, the Medico-legal aspects of injuries, regional injuries, thermal injuries; traffic accidents, virginity, pregnancy, sexual offences and perversions, abortion and infanticide. Sections 6, 7 and 8 consider common household poisons and acid poisons; non-metallic, metallic and vegetable poisons, animal poisons, somniferous and inebriant poisons, and a number of other varieties as well as asphyxiants.

3. The Appendix contains useful tables of measures, data of organs, certificates, medico-legal documents and pro formas and labels; especially noteworthy are the formulae for the estimation of stature, alphabetical poison table and Spot Diagnosis, a miniature forensic atlas. The illustrations are realistic and reflect graphically the situation and scene of crime, and there is a comprehensive index at the end of the book.

4. To serve the needs of students, certain matters have been treated in unexpected detail. At the end of each topic all possible questions that can be set at university examinations have been included. Bold types have been used to indicate basic facts, salient features have been enumerated, and tables have been used where comparisons are involved. Police officers will find enough material in the book to enable them to suspect at an early stage and detect the possibilities of crimes and unnatural death. This is a masterly short work which should well repay careful study and reference by all concerned.

THE GOVERNOR'S POWER TO REMOVE CHIEF MINISTER

(By G. H. GUTTAL, Judge, City Civil and Sessions Court, Bombay).

1. The Constitution of India has adopted the English system of parliamentary executive. The Governor of a State is, like the President of India, the constitutional head of the executive. This character of the executive was put by the Supreme Court in these words:

"... The President has thus been made a formal or constitutional head of the executive and the real executive powers are vested in the Ministers or the Cabinet.

The same provisions obtain in regard to the Government of States; the Governor or the Rajpramukh, as the case may be, occupies the position of the head of the executive in the State, but it is virtually the Council of Ministers in each State that carries on the executive Government. In the Indian Constitution, therefore, we have the same system of parliamentary executive as in England and the Council of Ministers consisting, as it does, of the members of the legislature is, like the British Cabinet, 'a hyphen which joins, a buckle which fastens the legislative part of the State to the executive part'."

(Ram Jawaya v. State of Punjab, AIR 1955 S C 549).

It will, therefore, be appropriate to liken the position of the Governor with that of the Crown. Likewise, the Chief Minister holds a position in no manner different from the Prime Minister. Placed in this perspective, the position of the Governor and the Chief Minister may be examined.

The Extent of Power :

2. Like the Prime Minister, the Chief Minister, is the leader of the elected House of the Legislature. He is chosen as Chief Minister by virtue of his leadership of the largest party. He is the Chairman of the Cabinet. He is clothed with the power to advise the Governor to dismiss a Minister. He possesses the real executive power of the State.

Lord Morley has brought out the pre-eminence of the position of the Prime Minister of England in these words:

"... Flexibility of cabinet system allows the Prime Minister to take upon himself a power not inferior to that of a dictator, provided always that the House of Commons stands by him."

This is true of the Prime Minister of India and the Chief Minister of a State, who owe their power to the support of the elected house of the legislature.

3. Dealing with the position of Crown, Sir Ivor Jennings wrote:

"... The existence or absence of a monarch does not in itself make a fundamental distinction in a constitution. In a cabinet system the cabinet governs. The functions of the head of the State are ancillary".

See Sir Ivor Jennings "Cabinet Government."

In the words of Lord Morley "though the monarch chooses the Prime Minister, the Crown could hardly exercise any real power either by selection or exclusion against the wishes of the constituencies".

It is clear, therefore, that the Chief Minister as Chairman of the Cabinet possesses the real executive power within the limits prescribed by the Constitution and so long as the Legislature supports him.

4. The Governor of a State is appointed by the President (Article 155). He holds office during the pleasure of the President (Article 156). The executive power of the State vests in the Governor and is exercised by him either directly or through officers subordinate to him in accordance with the Constitution (Article 154). Such power extends to all matters with respect to which the Legislature of the State has power to make laws (Article 162). The Council of Ministers aids and advises the Governor in the exercise of his functions. The Governor need not, however, be aided or advised by the Council of Ministers on matters in respect of which he is by or under the Constitution required to exercise his functions in his discretion (Article 163).

The Chief Minister is appointed by the Governor. The other Ministers are appointed by the Governor on the advice of the Chief Minister. The Ministers hold office during the pleasure of the Governor (Article 164). But such pleasure is exercised by the Governor only on the advice of the Chief Minister.

With these broad features of the Governor's powers in mind, it will be convenient to consider whether he has the power to remove a Chief Minister.

Provisions of the Constitution :

5. Article 164 in so far as it is relevant reads as follows:—

"...(1) The Chief Minister shall be appointed by the Governor and the other Ministers shall be appointed by the Governor on the advice of the Chief Minister, and the Ministers shall hold office during the pleasure of the Governor.

(2) The Council of Ministers shall be collectively responsible to the Legislative Assembly of the State.

(3) * * * *

(4) A Minister who for any period of six consecutive months is not a member of the Legislature of the State shall at the expiration of that period cease to be a Minister.

(5) * * * **

The first clause provides for the appointment of the Chief Minister and other ministers. It also provides that Ministers shall hold office during the Governor's pleasure. Since the Chief Minister is also a Minister, a question arises as to whether he too holds office during the Governor's pleasure. Under the English law also, the Minister holds his office at the pleasure of the Crown. But such pleasure is exercised solely on the advice of the Prime Minister. This is true of the Governor also. Even under normal circumstances, advice of the Council of Ministers is conveyed to the Governor through the Chief Minister who is the channel of communication between the cabinet and the Governor.

Clause (1) of Article 164 does not lay down that the Chief Minister holds office during the pleasure of the Governor. It is only "the Minister" who holds office during the Governor's pleasure. If a power to remove the Chief Minister were intended to be conferred on the Governor, the makers of the Constitution would have chosen a different language. To read such a power in Article 164 will lead to absurd results.

Clause (1) of Article 164 employs the expressions "Chief Minister", "the Ministers", "other Ministers" and "Council of Ministers". The expression "Chief Minister" has been used in contradistinction with "the other Ministers". The use of these expressions in this manner is deliberate. Article 164 (1) treats the "Chief Minister" and "Minister" differently so far as the pleasure of the Governor is concerned. "The Minister" must mean "the Minister other than Chief Minister". There is no power in the Governor to remove a Chief Minister in exercise of his pleasure.

In this connection, it may be necessary to refer to the decision of Allahabad High Court in Har Sharan v. Chandrabhan (AIR 1962 AL 301). The question was whether in Article 164 the expression "Minister" applies to "Chief Minister". S. S. Dhavan J., held:

"...It is clear that the word "Minister" in clauses second, third, fourth and fifth of Article 164 includes "The Chief Minister..."

This view is undoubtedly correct. It must, however, be pointed out that the Allahabad High Court was not considering the expressions "Chief Minister" and "Minister" employed in cl. (1) of Art. 164.

A conclusion that the Governor has a power to remove a Chief Minister would lead to consequences opposed to cl. (2) of Art. 164. It is fundamental that a Cabinet Government is answerable to and, therefore, removable only by the legislature. The removal of a Chief Minister must mean removal of the Government. This was not the result intended by the makers of the Constitution.

Discretion Excluded :

6. Since Art. 163 refers to discretionary powers, it is necessary to examine whether the Governor may resort to his discretion to remove a Chief Minister.

Where the Governor was intended to act in his discretion, such discretion has been expressly conferred by the Constitution. The Governor is entitled to act in his discretion where he is required to do so by the Constitution. This is emphasised by cl. (1) of Art. 163.

There are certain provisions which confer on the Governor a discretion. Article 200 provides for assent of the Governor to the bills passed by the legislature, and the second proviso requires the Governor to act in his discretion. If "in the opinion of the Governor" a bill derogates from the powers of the High Court so as to endanger its position under the Constitution, he is required to withhold his assent and reserve it for the consideration of the President. Secondly, Art. 239 empowers the President to administer Union Territories through Administrators. Clause (2) of the article confers on the President a power to appoint the Governor of a State as the Administrator of an adjoining Union Territory. It further provides that the Governor so appointed shall exercise his functions independently of the Council of Ministers. He may, therefore, act in his discretion.

These are some of the provisions where under the Governor is empowered to resort to his discretion to exercise his functions. Matters in his discretion have been specifically set out in the Constitution, wherever considered necessary. Such discretion has not been reserved in regard to the removal of a Chief Minister. The omission to do so must be taken to be deliberate. The discretion of the Governor is thus clearly excluded.

In conclusion, it must be stated that there is no power in the Governor to remove the Chief Minister.

RETIREMENT OF HON'BLE MR. HIDAYATULLAH, C. J.

Soon after the historic judgment of the Supreme Court in the Princes' Derecognition Case was delivered by the Supreme Court on the 15th December 1970, Chief Justice Hidayatullah of the Supreme Court laid down his high office as Chief Justice of India and retired from service on the 17th December 1970.

It will not be out of place to remind ourselves here that the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of India is not only the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court but Chief Justice of India, according to the Constitution. In fact, the Constitution throughout refers to him as the Chief Justice of India and not of any particular Court. This shows the exalted position accorded to the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court by the Constitution.

Shri Hidayatullah has retired after adorning his high office for nearly three years. He also once officiated as the President of India during this period.

The Supreme Court has produced many eminent and distinguished Judges and Mr. Hidayatullah is easily one of the most distinguished of them. During his career on the Supreme Court Bench he has delivered many outstanding judgments. While the general level of the judgments of our Supreme Court has always been high and they can stand comparison with the best judgments delivered anywhere in the world, Mr. Hidayatullah's judgments were characterised by a certain literary quality which may be said to be his speciality. In this connection, his judgment in Ranjit Uteshi's Case, (AIR 1965 S C 881), occurs to the mind readily. His exposition of what constitutes obscenity in literary work can itself be said to be piece of literature. Similarly, he had an original approach to questions even when he delivered a concurring judgment, as can be seen from his judgment in Golaknath's Case and in the Princes' Derecognition Case.

Mr. Hidayatullah, besides having been a great Judge, is also a great jurist, scholar and educationist.

His judgment in the Contempt of Court Case against Mr. E. M. S. Namboodiripad in 1970 S C 2015 late Chief Minister of Kerala, is another memorable judgment of his. In this judgment he repudiates, on the basis of an independent study of the writings of Marx, Engels, Lenin and other writers, that there is no basis for Mr. Namboodiripad's contention that his impugned statement was, in substance, only what was found in well-known books by these Authors and did not constitute contempt of Court.

Mr. Hidayatullah had a keen sense of the role of the judiciary and of the Supreme Court under our Constitution and insisted on keeping out political considerations and party policies from the decision of issues involving constitutional questions and questions regarding fundamental rights.

Mr. Hidayatullah belongs to Nagpur. He started his practice as an Advocate at Nagpur where he was also appointed Advocate-General. He was then appointed a Judge of the Nagpur High Court, and of the Madhya Pradesh High Court at Jabbalpore where he became the Chief Justice, before being appointed a Judge of the Supreme Court.

The A. I. R. expresses its best wishes to Mr. Hidayatullah and is sure that, even after his retirement from the Supreme Court, he will have ample opportunities for the exercise of his talents, knowledge, experience and abilities in the service of the Country.

THE LATE MR. T. L. VENKATARAMA AYYAR

We regret to report the death at Madras, at the age of 77, of Mr. T. L. Venkatarama Ayyar, retired Judge of the Supreme Court. Mr. Venkatarama Ayyar was known for his erudite judgments, especially on questions of constitutional law. His perspicacity of thought and expression were remarkable. He was very independent in his views and approach to legal questions and went deeply into the real questions involved without allowing himself to be unduly influenced by clichés and formulas merely because they had been in long usage. In this connection, his remarkable dissenting judgment in Aher Raja Khima v. State of Saurashtra, (AIR 1956 S C 217) may be referred to. The question was about the powers of the High Court in an appeal from an acquittal in a criminal case. He was referring to the formula that unless there are "compelling reasons" the High Court should not interfere with a verdict of acquittal. Mr. Venkatarama Ayyar strongly dissented from this view and held that the powers of the High Court in a criminal appeal were the same whether the appeal was from an acquittal or conviction. In the course of his judgment he observed: "There is always a danger in taking a phrase, attractive and telling in its context, out of it, and erecting it into a judicial formula as if it laid down a principle universal in its application".

After his retirement from the Supreme Court, Mr. Venkatarama Ayyar served, for some time as Chairman of the Law Commission and then he functioned as the one man Commission appointed to enquire into certain allegations against a former Chief Minister and other Ministers of Bihar.

Mr. Venkatarama Ayyar was great not only in law but also in other fields. He was a great Sanskrit scholar and an authority on Carnatic music, who had been awarded the title of Sangeeta Kalanidhi by the Madras

Music Academy. He was also a fellow of the Central Board of the Sangeet Natak Academy from 1964 and also a member of the Board of Music and Board of Examiners in Music for the Madras University.

His death is an irreparable loss both to the world of law and the world of music. We express our condolences and sympathies to the members of the bereaved family.

THE LEGAL STATUS OF THE ARABIAN GULF STATES. (A study of their treaty relations and their international problems). By Husain M. Al-Baharna, Ph. D. (Cantab). Manchester University Press, Manchester. (In India: N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Princess Street, Bombay, 2.) 1968. Pp. xv & 351. Price, Rs. 54.

Based on a thesis approved for the Ph. D. degree of the Cambridge University, the present volume examines comprehensively, perhaps for the first time, the international legal problems of the Arabian Gulf countries. These problems range from those involving primarily questions of legal and international status to those which involve issues connected with territorial and boundary claims. Problems of British foreign jurisdiction in the Gulf and the relations of the Shaikhdoms with the foreign oil companies in the area have been omitted. Although not a general text-book on international law, it has called for some description of the general part of that law to which the special problems of the Gulf States are related.

2. The Arabian Gulf States comprise eleven countries of which Bahrain, Qatar and the seven Trucial Shaikhdoms are commonly known as British Protected States, Kuwait, now an independent State and member of the U. N., and the Sultanate of Muscat and Oman, an independent State but not a member of the U. N. These other States are being prepared for the assumption of greater responsibilities in their foreign relations, an indication, perhaps, of future British legal relations with them.

3. Apart from the introductory chapter, which describes the political history of the States and the constitutional history of their Governments, there are four parts in the book. In the first part the author deals with the treaties of protection between the Shaikhdoms and the U. K. and evaluates this protectorate system. He then discusses the international status of these States in the light of these treaties, including such questions as international responsibility, immunity of the rulers of the States from the jurisdiction of foreign Courts, their position within the framework of British constitutional law, their treaty making capacity, their position during war, their nationality laws, and their position within the framework of the United Nations; the last mentioned topic is covered under the heads of applicability of the U. N. Charter to the States, competence of the U. K. to settle disputes arising between them and the U. K., and qualification for membership of the United Nations. Under British Constitutional law, in all protectorates foreign relations are controlled by the Crown, the extent of power reserved internally varying according as they are colonial protectorates, or protected States. The third part of the book contains a discussion of various territorial claims, for example, Iran's claim to sovereignty over Bahrain, the British-Saudi controversy over the sovereignty of Buraimi, and the Iraqi claim to sovereignty over Kuwait. Finally, the author describes the boundary disputes which have arisen since the oil companies began to operate in this area.

4. The Bibliography and index are useful adjuncts to the volume. The appendices include the texts of the agreements and undertakings entered into by the rulers of the Gulf States, and maps are furnished of the Arabian Gulf States, Buraimi boundary lines, Buraimi villages, and the Bahrain-Arabia boundary.

THE LAW COLLEGE MAGAZINE,
ERNAKULAM, 1969-70. Editor: Jos
T. Manjooran, Law College, Ernakulam.

The latest issue of this college magazine, which is intended to encourage the writing talents of the students, includes contributions on a wide variety of legal subjects also from members of the staff and some highly placed members of the judiciary. As in its last issue, it contains a separate section on glimpses of the legal system in some foreign countries, contributed by the Norwegian and American embassies and the Australian High Commission. As is to be expected, it also records the various social, literary, cultural and sports activities of the alumni. Among the subjects dealt with by these articles are the provisions regarding minority shareholders under the Companies Act, professional conduct and advocacy, labour management relations and socialism, the doctrine of deviation in insurance law, bank nationalisation and discrimination, and the role of political parties in a parliamentary democracy. Two of the articles examine whether the intention to create legal relationships is necessary for a contract, and whether the perpetuity rule should be abolished.

2. In the article on the translation of statutes the writer truly observes that every law must be enacted in the language in which the basic principles have originated, and the bulk of our law is based on principles of English law. The law itself must first be Indian in origin before it can express itself adequately in an Indian language. The article on Government tort liability in India examines whether an 'act of State' is a definite concept for the purpose of immunity and how to distinguish sovereign and non-sovereign functions for the purpose of the existing law. The views expressed by Justice K. K. Mathew and Justice V. R. Krishna Iyer on the subject of fundamental rights may not find general acceptance. Mr. Mathew, who considers that recognition of property rights beyond a certain point would deprive others of the means of subsistence, doubts whether Courts will give a preferred position to them in view of Part IV of the Constitution, and Mr. Krishna Iyer, while referring to the famous Golaknath case, would seem to give his blessing to Parliament's latest attempt to amend Art. 368 of the Constitution to put the fundamental rights "out of the way" of the country's march to progress.

THE CALCUTTA CITY CIVIL AND SESSIONS COURTS ACTS, 1953. By Shibshankar Sarkar, M.A., LL.B., Advocate, High Court, Calcutta. With a Foreword by Justice P. N. Mookerjee, Eastern Book Agency, 4 Wood Street, Calcutta 16. 1st Edition, 1970, pp. 120. Price, Rs. 10.

This is a concise and comprehensive work on the Calcutta City Civil and Sessions Courts Acts, 1953 (as amended up-to-date), supplying to members of the legal profession and others the latest information concerning these two Courts; the 1969 amendments have considerably extended their jurisdiction. The formation of these two Courts was necessitated by the increase in the volume of work pending before the High Court; they occupy an intermediate position in between the High Court and the Small Cause Court at Calcutta. The different Sections, Schedules and Rules are accompanied by elaborate notes with reference to available decisions. It also incorporates the Rules made by the High Court and enumerates the rates of ad valorem fees leviable on the institution of suits. At the end is appended the Presidency Small Cause Courts (West Bengal Amendment) Act, 1969, with notes relevant for the purpose.

2. The different Sections of the City Civil Court Act deal, inter alia, with the appointment of Judges, jurisdiction, procedure, law to be administered, and appeal. They cover also the power of the Chief Judge in respect of distribution of business and transfer and withdrawal of suits, and lay down that no Judge shall try suits or proceedings in which he is interested. Further, they consider the subjects of return of plaint for want of jurisdiction, the appointment of Registrar and clerks, and the attorneys entitled to plead in that Court. The Rules of the Calcutta Civil Court, 1956 give details about Court and office hours; diary, cause lists, oaths and affidavits; institution of a suit; processes; fixing a date for trial; decrees; classification and arrangement of records; accounts, registers, statements and returns; fees for affidavits, cost of processes, number of bailiffs, legal practitioners, and cases under the Guardians and Wards Act.

3. The Calcutta City Sessions Court Act 1953 has 17 sections, some of them relating to the establishment of the Court, the Court being a Court of Session and the Code applying to such Court, and the inability of the Court to have jurisdiction in certain matters. Trials before the City Sessions Court shall be by jury and there are sections concerning the saving of cases and proceedings pending in the High Court and about the Act overriding other law including Letters Patent. The Rules consider, inter alia, Vakalatnamas and Mukhtarnamas, rules relating to the trial, disposal of property, destruction and inspection of the records in the custody of the Court, fees for affidavits, searching and copying, and provisions as to criminal rules and orders. As is only to be expected some of the Sections will be found to be common to both the Acts.

4. The book has an index and a table of cases, and should be of assistance to those who will be called upon to interpret these statutes, viz., Judges, lawyers and the litigant public alike.

HINDU LAW OF ADOPTION, MAINTENANCE, MINORITY AND GUARDIANSHIP. By S. V. Gupte, assisted By G. M. Divekar B.A., LL.B., Attorney-at-Law. (N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Bombay). 1st Edition, 1970. Pp. xxxix and 438. Price, Rs. 35.

The Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act 1956 codifies and amends the old law relating to adoption and maintenance. With the passing of the Hindu Succession Act, 1956, which treats sons and daughters equally in the matter of succession, the law of adoptions among Hindus has been simplified. The 1956 Act provides for the adoption of boys as well as girls. A husband cannot prevent his wife from taking a child in adoption after his death, and this adoption will be in the widow's own right. No person need be divested of any property which was vested in him, simply because an adoption has subsequently been made. Apart from this basic change in the concept of adoption, the Act has made other changes in the old law in the matter of the capacity to adopt, the capacity to be adopted, the capacity to give in adoption, and the effect of adoption.

The Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act 1956 amends and codifies certain parts of the old law as found in the Srutis and Smritis, the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890 and the Indian Majority Act, 1875; it does not affect these statutes but is only supplementary to them. It is in addition to and not in derogation of the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890.

2. In the volume under review, the old law is first described, followed by a running commentary on the two Acts under reference. The Dattaka and Kritrima systems of adoption are compared, and the Dattaka adoption is dealt with under the heads of essentials of a valid adoption; who may give in adoption; who may adopt and who, be adopted; and formalities and legal consequences of adoption. Maintenance and residence, and right of residence (Mitakshara and Dayabhaga), and guardianship, are also covered in this part of the Book. The Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act, 1956, in the next part, considers inter alia, the right of adoptive parents to dispose of their properties, determination of adoptive mother in certain cases and presumption as to registered documents relating to adoption. It is also concerned with the maintenance of wife, of widowed daughter-in-law, and of children and aged parents as well as dependants; the amount of maintenance, priority for debts, and effect of transfer of property on the right to maintenance. The third part is devoted to the Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act, 1956, under the heads, inter alia, natural guardians and their powers, testamentary guardians and their powers, and the welfare of the minor.

3. A former Solicitor-General to the Government of India, the author was one of those invited by Dr. Ambedkar to serve on a committee to revise the draft Hindu Code prepared by the Rao Committee, and his comments on and criticism of certain recent decisions of the Supreme Court (which have, of course, been brought up-to-date) would seem to call for careful consideration. In regard to Sawan Ram v. Mst. Kalawanti and others (AIR 1967 S C 1761) the Author considers that the decision ignores the nature of the right to adopt conferred on a woman and that it is against the declared object of the Act in respect of widows, and contrary to the scheme of the Act. In regard to Punithavalli Ammal v. Minor Ramalingam and another (unreported judgment), the view of the Supreme Court is said to be opposed to the object of the Act and is contrary to the express provision of S. 12 of the Act. Similar is the learned author's comment on the Supreme Court decision in Sita Bai and another v. Ramachandra (AIR 1970 S C 343).

4. The volume has an index, appendices for each of the three parts, and a table of cases. It should be of great assistance to the members of the legal profession. R.S.S.

GENERAL PRINCIPLES OF INSURANCE LAW. By A. K. Bhattacharjee, Bar-at-law. With Foreword by Justice C. N. Laik, 1969. Eastern Law House Private Ltd., 54 Ganesh Chunder Avenue, Calcutta 13. Pp. xxii, 139, & xv. Price, Rs. 10.

The present publication, which covers the theoretical aspects of the general principles of insurance law applicable in India, deals with all branches of the law, Marine, Life, and General insurance, including shipping laws regarding charter-party and bill of lading. Insurance law in India has in recent years undergone vast changes, particularly in the areas of life and marine insurance (See the Life Insurance Corporation Act 1956 and the Marine Insurance Act 1963). A contract of insurance is a financial arrangement by which a man protects himself and/or the members of his family against the contingencies of life. The fundamental legal principle is that one person agrees to take the risk for another person's life and/or business in consideration of certain small payments called 'premium'. The instrument containing the terms of the contract is called a 'Policy of Insurance'; the person insured is 'the insured' and the person who insures is the 'insurer'. A contract of life assurance, on the other hand, is a mere contract to pay a sum of money on the death of the insured in consideration of the payment of a certain annuity, in instalments or in a lump sum, during his life. This is not, however, a contract of indemnity like the other contracts of insurance where payments take place, not simply on a certain eventuality but on that eventuality resulting in loss to the insured.

2. Insurance may be marine, or non-marine. The latter includes personal insurance (life, personal accident, sickness), property insurance (fire, burglary, livestock, etc.) and liability insurance (motor vehicles, aviation, employer's liability, etc.). Marine insurance is an agreement by which the insurer undertakes to indemnify the insured against the losses incidental to marine adventure. A bill of lading, on the other hand, is a document signed by the ship-owner or master which states that certain goods have been shipped and the terms on which they have been delivered, and a charter-party is a contract by which the entire ship or some principal part of it is let to a merchant for the conveyance of goods on a determined voyage.

3. The first chapter in the book under review, on the characteristics of a contract of insurance, describes an endowment policy; the procedure in a life policy; misrepresentation, concealment or non-disclosure in a contract; wagering contract. It discusses indemnity and guarantee, loss by unlawful act of the insured, and insurable interest. The second chapter, on marine insurance, covers inter alia specifications of the Policy, the insurance slip or cover note, insurable value, warranties, loss and abandonment, the doctrine of proximate cause, salvage loss, and actual and constructive total loss. The Indian Bills of Lading Act, 1856 and the nature and interpretation of a Bill of Lading, the characteristics of a charter-party, respective rights of charterer and shipper, the value of the cargo and of the ship, are among the topics covered in the other sections of this chapter. Non-marine and non-life insurance (general insurance) is dealt with under appropriate heads in the third, and last chapter.

4. The volume has a table of cases and index, and should be useful to lawyers, public officials, businessmen and students. We are informed that a comprehensive treatise on all aspects of insurance law and their application to India is at present in the Press.

ESTATE DUTY CHANGES, 1969. By B. J. Sims, LL. B., F. T. I. I., Solicitor of the Supreme Court. Butterworth & Co. (Publishers) Ltd., 88 Kingsway, London W. C. 2. Pp. viii & 66.

Part III of the English Finance Act, 1969 (Sections 35-40) contains the provisions which make substantial changes in the estate duty system as regards deaths after 15th April 1969. As to those who died before that date the rules of estate duty will apply unaffected by the changes. As an appreciation of the law as it stood is necessary for understanding the provisions of the new legislation, the book under review gives some explanation of the old law as an introduction to the new law. The latest law repeals many of the old charging sections and adds new ones; the rate structure has been altered, and old reliefs have been abolished. The law concerning estate duty on settled property has been substantially changed, and there are many new definitions. As regards interpretation and construction it has been specifically provided that Finance Act 1969 (Part III) shall be construed as one with the Finance Act, 1894 (Part I). It was the latter Act that introduced the estate duty and still remains the basic code. It provides the scheme of liability to duty and the basis of valuation of property liable, specifies the persons accountable for the duty, and prescribes the machinery of collection. The provisions relating to estate duty operate as law in England, Wales and Scotland.

2. Estate duty on benefits under superannuation schemes was the subject of discussion in Parliament, but the present book makes the position clear. When the book went to press, the Estate Duty Office issued certain supplemental notes under the heads. Payments to the deceased's legal personal representatives; where the deceased had a general power of nomination; annuities which continue to be payable after the deceased's death; interests provided by the deceased; death of pensioner or annuitant; payments made in exercise of a discretion; and gifts inter vivos. These notes have been incorporated in the present book.

Sections 35-40 of Part III of the Finance Act, 1969 relate to amount and estate rate of estate duty; changes as to property passing on death; part only of the property to be treated as passing in certain cases; estate duty in respect of interests in expectancy; objects of national, scientific, historic or artistic interest; supplementary and transitional provisions. The present publication includes Schedule 17 (Pts. I, II and III) on the determination of the amount of estate duty on estate, supplementary provisions and consequential amendments, as well as Schedule 21 on Estate Duty Repeals. There is also a useful index.

THE WEST BENGAL COURT FEES ACT, 1970. (With Suits Valuation Act, 1887.) By Shambhu Das Mitra, M.A., LL.B., Advocate. 1st Edition. 1970. Eastern Book Agency, Calcutta 16. Pages xii & 157. Price, Rs. 15.

The Court-fees Act (VII of 1870), an all-India Act, remained in force in West Bengal for about a century. The Provinces and States having been empowered to amend or modify the provisions of the Act, it was amended several times by the West Bengal State between 1922 and 1968. The West Bengal Court-fees Ordinance, 1969 came into effect on 10th January 1970. Until then no ad valorem Court-fees were payable in the Original Side of the High Court, Calcutta, although such fees were leviable in the district and other Courts. To remove this disparity it was thought desirable to introduce ad valorem Court-fees in the Original Side of the High Court also. Further, with the increase in the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Calcutta City Civil Court from Rs. 10,000 to Rs. 50,000, litigants could pay ad valorem Court-fees on suits valued upto Rs. 50,000, while those in the High Court remained exempt from the application of this provision even on suits of greater value. But as the legislature was not in session, the above Ordinance had to be promulgated. It repealed the Court-fees Act, 1870 and has been replaced by the present Act, which is the subject of the present volume. The repealed Act still applies however, to all documents presented before any officer serving under the Central Government, and to all suits and proceedings instituted before the commencement of the Ordinance and to all appeals and revisions arising therefrom.

2. The charging provisions of the Act are schedules I and II, Schedule I prescribing the ad valorem fees payable and II laying down the fixed fees. The Act of 1870 prohibited documents specified in these Schedules from being filed, exhibited or recorded in any Court or received or furnished by any Public Officer, unless such document was properly stamped. These provisions are to be found in the present Act also, which is based substantially on the framework of the 1870 Act. Article 11 of the I Schedule and Arts. 7, 12, 14, 20 and 21 of the II Schedule of the 1870 Act applied to the Original Side of the High Court. The present Act removes this distinction and applies equally to the High Court in Calcutta as well as to the Courts in West Bengal.

3. The framework and scheme of the present Act are substantially the same as those of the 1870 Act, although it differs in some matters of detail. The sections and articles of the old Act have been re-arranged in the present Act, which has not only omitted some of the provisions of the old Act, but has also incorporated some new heads of taxation. In some cases the rate of fees payable has been increased while in others relief has been given to the litigants, e. g., relief given to widows in suits for maintenance. The Appendix gives the text of the Suits Valuation Act, 1887; the two Annexures relate to the valuation of movable and immovable property, and schedule of debts. The General Index and table of cases are useful.

4. The present publication not only states the law as it is, but also indicates the law as it was. Comparative tables of new and old sections and clauses have been given where necessary, and all important decisions under the repealed Act which are applicable in the interpretation of the new Act have been incorporated in the book.

LAW OF CENTRAL EXCISE IN INDIA (in 2 Volumes). By B. L. Kanodia, B. Com., LL. B., Attorney-at-Law. Eastern Book Agency, 4 Wood Street, Calcutta 16. 1st Edition. 1969. Vol. I, Pp. xix & 360. Price, Rs. 17.50.

Excise duties are duties paid by the manufacturer on goods produced or manufactured in India other than salt, the tax being chargeable with reference to the value, quantity, volume, or weight of the product. It is necessary for the manufacturer or producer to have a clear grasp of the excise laws, which affect him very closely. Until 1944, when the Central Excises and Salt Tax Act was passed, there was no complete codification of the laws of Central Excise. The Act of 1944 is a consolidation of various pieces of legislation introduced in the Centre and in the Provinces. Divided into seven chapters and forty sections, the second chapter lays down that the duties will be collected and levied on all excisable goods and salt manufactured or imported by land into India at such rates as are specified in the First Schedule. The duties are chargeable on ad valorem basis and may alter any prevailing tariff value, the tariff values themselves being different for different classes or descriptions of the same article. The chapter also lays down the procedure for determination of value for the purpose of duty as well as the procedure for the issue of licences under the Act. Offences and penalties and the power of Courts to order forfeiture and the recovery of the sums due to the Government are dealt with in subsequent sections.

2. The third chapter lays down the powers and duties of the officers and landholders and gives powers of arrest and summoning persons to give evidence and produce documents, searches and arrest, and the procedure to be followed by the officer in charge of a Police Station. Transport by sea and a special provision regarding salt are the subject of the next two chapters. The Act next proceeds to specify provisions regarding the power of adjudication, option to pay fine in lieu of confiscation, bails, and revisions, and provides for bar of suits and limitations of suits and other legal proceedings against the Government and its officers.

3. The various sections of the Act have been serially dealt with in the book under review, with short commentaries, each preceded by useful synopsis, and based on the decisions of the various High Courts and the Supreme Court. It contains also the First Schedule and all the Notifications thereon, as well as references to the relevant Rules relating to each section of the Act; the Schedule gives the names and descriptions of the excisable goods, and disputes sometimes arise as to the entry or category under which an article is taxable. All the Notifications relating to the items under the Schedule are given against each of them. Relevant portions of the Finance Act, 1969 have also been included. The second volume, we are informed, contains the Rules portion, with a short commentary.

4. Useful alike to the lawyer and the industrialist, the book contains a table of cases, a table of Notifications, and a detailed general index.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE CONSTITUTION OF THE SOMALI REPUBLIC. By Dr. Haji N. A. Noor Muhammad, M. A., B. L., LL. M., J. S. D. Published by the Government of the Somali Republic, Ministry of Grace and Justice, Mogadiscio, 1969. Pp. xii and 262.

In the present publication, Dr. Noor Muhammad, Vice-President of the Supreme Court of the Somali Republic, gives the reader what is perhaps the first full-length study in English of the Somali Constitution. The Somali Republic is made up of the former Italian Trust Territory of Somalia and the former British Protectorate of Somaliland, so much so that there has been an inevitable blend, to more or less extent, of Italian and English legal traditions in the State. The experiment is being tried in it of developing under a unitary constitution a unified legal system out of the Civil Law and Common Law systems which have been co-existing with customary law and institutions, which in turn have been considerably influenced by Islam and Shariat law. The present study covers not only the provisions of the Constitution, but also the laws enacted to implement it, as well as the decisions of the Supreme Court relevant to the subject.

2. The provisions in the Constitution for legislative power follow Italian precedent while the British influence can be seen in the executive sphere. The Supreme Court is the highest judicial organ and has to reconcile the different modes of judicial administration. The importation of the notion of administrative law follows Italian precedent, but the writ of Habeas Corpus is a typically Anglo-American instrument for the protection of individual liberty; as to the constitutional guarantees of fundamental rights, there is a meeting of both the continental and the British traditions. Freedom of religion is protected by the Constitution, and the new integrated judicial system no longer recognises Qadis' Courts or specifically customary Courts.

3. The book gives a historical outline and traces the development of the Constitution in Part I, and describes the general characteristics of the Constitution in Part II, followed by an analytical study of its provisions. The Somali Republic is an Islamic, representative, democratic Republic, with a written and rigid constitution and a Parliamentary system of government, establishing the supremacy of the law, or, the Rule of law. There are separate chapters in the book on citizenship, the President of the Republic, the National Assembly, the Government, Central and Territorial Organization, Civil Service, Local Government and Public and auxiliary bodies. The judicial guarantees of fundamental rights include the right to institute legal proceedings, the right of defence, non-retroactive nature of penal law, penal liability, and redress of judicial errors.

4. The judicial power in the Republic is vested in the judiciary, with the Supreme Court as the highest judicial organ, and the Judiciary is independent of the executive and legislative powers. It consists of the Supreme Court, the Courts of Appeal, the Regional Courts, and the District Courts; there are no Qadis' courts and Civil courts. The Constitution contemplates judicial review of legislative action by the Supreme Court constituted as the Constitutional Court (Arts. 98 and 99), and judicial review of administrative action (Art. 94). The Supreme Court constituted' as the High Court of Justice has jurisdiction over proceeding against the President of the Republic and the members of the Government. Based upon the values of a free society, the Constitution establishes a proper distribution of powers with a view to preserving the initiative and dignity of individual citizens, and has thereby laid the foundations of the Rule of Law.

5. In an appendix is reproduced the text of the Constitution, and the bibliography and table of cases add to the usefulness of the volume. All the foot-notes in the text and explanations are carried over to the end.

THE YOUNG LAWYER. Kishinchand Chellaram Law College, Dinshaw Watcha Road, Bombay 20. 1970 Pp. 51.

THE YOUNG LAWYER is the annual magazine of the Kishinchand Chellaram Law College, Bombay, and contains, in addition to the message of the President of the Governing Board and the Editor's notes, several articles contributed by the students of the College and others, besides the reports on the working of various College Associations and societies during the year. 'Collisions and Contributory Negligence', 'Towards Socialisation of Law', the 'Population problem' and 'Student unrest' are the titles of some of the student contributions.

Presiding over the elocution competition trophy award function, Mr. Justice J. L. Nain dealt with the practical side of legal education and deplored that 'Conveyancing' is a neglected subject. The drafting of pleadings, petitions and memoranda of appeal, memoranda and articles of association and other important documents is an art in itself, and in order to be a good draftsman one must have the basic principles of law concerning the transaction in question at the tip of one's fingers.

Writing on criminal law, the Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate, Bombay, lists the following fundamentals: an accused is presumed to be innocent till he is proved guilty; the burden of proof is on the prosecution to establish the guilt; else, the benefit of doubt must go to the accused, who should be assured a fair trial, and whose constitutional and legal rights must be scrupulously respected. The rights of the accused include freedom from illegal arrest and detention, bail, counsel and public trial, cross-examination, immunity from testimonial compulsion or self-incrimination, appeal, and double jeopardy. In the matter of testimonial compulsion, the Editor offers useful comments on the case of Ramesh Chandra v. West Bengal (AIR 1970 S C 940);

he also comments on double jeopardy in reference to the case of Assistant Collector of Customs v. L R Melwani (AIR 1970 S C 932). The Editor's other notes are on the Bank Nationalisation case (R. C. Cooper v. Union of India, AIR 1970 S C 564).

'Should the law concern itself only with that conduct which is harmful to others and breaks the peace within society, or may it be used to protect the morals of society?' Is a topic which the Editor discusses in his other article. A line should be drawn, he says, between private life and public control, so that the individual may not be eaten up by the Welfare State in the same manner as has happened in the totalitarian countries. The four principles which should guide us are; toleration of maximum individual freedom consistent with the integrity of society; law to move slowly in any new matter of morals; respect for privacy; the concern of the law to be for minimum standards, and not the maximum ones.

In his contribution on the linguistic re-organisation of States, Mr. Jethmalani shows how, although the Constitution created a strong Union of India, the constituent units have begun to function as independent States. Linguistic regionalism has become a powerful lobby for securing as much as possible for particular regions, and national planning has consequently to suffer. The linguistic principle has failed and it must be eradicated. A new commission should thoroughly re-examine the question on the basis of three principles: the newly formed States should promote the political unity of Indians as Indians; citizens must willingly live in multi-lingual provinces or administrative units, which should not permit any political or economic advantage to any one political group; the primary objective should be the economic prosperity of the whole of India and administrative efficiency. "Either we destroy this Frankenstein of linguism, or it shall destroy us as a nation." — Not mere rhetoric, this.

SHINGNE'S SUMMARY OF SALMOND'S JURISPRUDENCE. By A. K. Sarkar, M.A., LL.B., Advocate, High Court, Bombay. 2nd Edition. 1970. N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., 164 Samaldas Gandhi Marg, Bombay 2, Pp. xi & 194. Price Rs. 9.50.

Jurisprudence is said to be study of fundamental legal principles, including their philosophical, historical, and sociological bases, and an analysis of legal concepts. For the last seventy years Salmond on jurisprudence has been a legal classic with students, lawyers and Judges. In recent times jurisprudential thought has undergone considerable change, particularly in the realm of social philosophy underlying Law. From the view-points of both social stability and social necessity, law is seen as a stabilising factor in human society as well as a need-based factor for the satisfaction of human want. Because of the impact made on law by the phenomenal progress in other disciplines like medical science, sociology and economic theory, the concepts of liability and ownership (state or public ownership) have undergone a radical change. In the book under review the author has given some Indian decisions and noted some new developments in the foot-notes.

2. In general Jurisprudence is a subject without practical applicability. The value of an ordinary legal subject like Contract, Tort, Crimes, lies in its practical use, but Jurisprudence is an abstract, theoretical subject. On the other hand, researches into Jurisprudence may have repercussions on the whole range of medical, legal, political and social thought. They may also wean away lawyers from excessive formalism to the social realities of the time. The law of contract, for example, may well call for a general knowledge of economics and economic theory on the part of the lawyer, and the law of crimes, for a knowledge of criminology and psychiatry. They make the lawyer more conscious as to the consideration of present social needs, pushing precedents into the background.

3. The present work discusses the nature of law, the administration of justice, the sources of law, legislation, precedent, and custom, in the earlier pages. It describes the three theories about the nature of law, law as a system of rules, the function and purpose of law and its territorial nature, international law and constitutional law. It examines the necessity for the administration of civil and criminal justice, purpose of criminal justice, civil justice, and the secondary functions of courts of law, and it illustrates the legal and historical sources of law. Supreme and subordinate legislation, codification, interpretation of enacted law, the authority of precedents, circumstances weakening their binding force, judicial reasoning, reception of customary law, kinds of custom, and conventional and legal customs, are covered in three chapters.

4. The later chapters deal with legal rights, ownership, persons, titles, and liability. They explain the characteristics of a legal right, the kinds of legal rights, the subject-matter of ownership, sole ownership and co-ownership, trust and beneficial ownership, legal and equitable ownership, vested and contingent ownership, possession in law and in fact, concurrent possession, incorporated possession, and possession and ownership. The legal status of dead or unborn persons, double capacity and double personality, agents and beneficiaries of a corporation, its rights and liabilities, and unincorporated associations, are then considered. The next two chapters are concerned with void and voidable agreements, and four distinct kinds of agreements, as well as the theories of remedial and penal liability, two classes of wrongful acts, mens rea, intention, motive, negligence, the theory of strict liability, mistakes of law and of fact, and vicarious responsibility. The law of property, the law of obligations, and the law of evidence, are the subjects of the concluding three chapters.

5. The present book, which is primarily meant for students, should amply meet their needs. R.S.S.

ADMINISTRATIVE LAW IN INDIA.

By S. P. Sathe. Foreword by Justice P. B. Mukharji, Acting Chief Justice of West Bengal. N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Bombay 2. 1st Edition. 1970. Pp. xxxviii & 294. Price, Rs. 22.

The growth of bureaucracy in the modern State is largely responsible for the growth and importance of Administrative Law. Administrative Law enforces the rule of law against the State, and provides safeguards against illegal and arbitrary exercise of power by the Government. The present book is an exposition of the principles of administrative law as they have been developed by courts, legislatures and government and semi-government departments in India, and it is designed to acquaint the student with the principles of Indian Administrative Law. It examines the existing law and attempts to suggest the lines along which it should develop.

2. What sort of power does the administration exercise? What procedures do administrative authorities follow in the exercise of their powers? What are the limits of the powers of the administration? What are the ways in which the administration is kept within those limits? And what remedies are available to the individual against the illegal actions of the administration? These questions form the central theme of the book.

3. A combination of both case book system of study and theoretical analysis of the principles of Administrative Law, the book begins with a classification of administrative actions. The second chapter explains how the administration has become a meeting point of the legislative, judicial and executive functions, and attempts to formulate tests for distinguishing these powers and make a broad classification, which should help one to understand the broad questions that have been posed. The legislative functions are discussed, the practice of delegated legislation is analysed, and the constitutional limitations upon the delegation of legislative powers by the legislatures are examined. Then follows a discussion of the various mechanisms for the control of delegated legislation and a study of how the courts exercise supervision over administrative tribunals and other quasi-judicial bodies. Judicial review is limited to matters of jurisdiction and conformity with the rules of natural justice. The author then proceeds to examine how administrative discretion is controlled by the courts by determining the constitutional validity of legislation conferring discretionary authority on the executive and the validity of the exercise of that discretionary power by the executive. The author considers that the Indian Constitution provides an ideal set of remedies to the individual against the illegal actions of the administration, and the courts have applied them with discrimination and vigilance. Although the State still enjoys certain privileges, immunities, and preferences, the trend of the law is towards taking them away gradually.

4. Admitting the inevitability of delegated legislation, the author emphasises the need to ensure its conformity with the constitutional principle of the rule of law. Will it be desirable, he wonders, to have a Council of Tribunals as in England to supervise the working of tribunals and quasi-judicial bodies? Functional separation and reasoned decisions should be encouraged. Public corporations are becoming increasingly important and it is the province of administrative law to provide new mechanisms for balancing administrative justice and administrative efficiency. Finally the author commends the institution of Ombudsman as a possible remedy for the disease of corruption and maladministration.

5. Appendices to the book contain the Government (Liability in Tort) Bill, 1967, List of Public undertakings, and the Lokpal and Lokayuktas Bill, 1968. The bibliography, table of statutes, table of cases, and index are useful.

6. The need today is for "a technique of adjudication better fitted to respond to the present official requirements than the elaborate system of decisions provided by litigation in the Courts of Law", and this need has been carefully analysed in the book. A scholarly and erudite contribution, it should be useful to the Bench, the Bar, the administrators, and Government.

IDENTIFICATION OF HANDWRITING AND CROSS-EXAMINATION OF EXPERTS. By M. K. Mehta, Examiner of Questioned Documents. N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Bombay 2. 4th Edition. 1970. Pp. xxii and 398. Price, Rs. 32.50.

In all cases of forgery, the identification and proof of handwriting, especially signatures, is of supreme importance, and the evidence of a handwriting expert, though not always conclusive, is useful in testing the validity of other evidence; it is believed that with proper data for comparison a correct and reliable opinion is possible. The present book aims at presenting a broad insight into the subject and guide lawyers and others who have to deal with documents suspected to be false. The latest edition, more comprehensive than the earlier ones, includes a large number of illustrations to help the reader to appreciate the various characteristics of handwriting. There is also a chapter on photography and the role of photographs in solving intricate problems of handwriting and allied subjects such as chemical and mechanical erasures, additions, and alterations, as well as up-to-date case law on expert evidence for the benefit of lawyers.

2. Identification of handwriting occupies an important place in the administration of justice, where the rights and liabilities of persons depend upon the genuineness of questioned documents in Courts of Law. A recognised mode of obtaining proof of disputed documents is to call a handwriting expert to give his opinion on a disputed signature or other writing; his opinion is relevant evidence under Section 45 of the Indian Evidence Act. The expert witness must have made a special study of the subject or acquired special experience in it. When he is called for cross-examination, the object is to establish that his opinion is not correct, or not dependable, and this is possible only if the lawyer himself has some knowledge of the subject, although the courts may sometimes ignore the expert opinion and report and rely on their own judgment in the background of other evidence on record.

3. Writing about the expert, the author examines expert opinion on photographs and evidence on commission, and whether the knowledge of a particular script is essential. He deals with writing habits under the heads of movement, pen pressure, shading, pen position, alignment, slope or slant, spacing, arrangement, size or proportions, style, quality of strokes, and general execution. The personal characteristics are covered under the heads of form and formation, variations, relative position of letters, pencil and ball-point pen writing.

tings, and carbon impression writings. The author would like one expert to cross-examine another, as that will ease the work of the court and promote the ends of justice, many of the lawyers not being well versed in the subject. In the chapters on standard of comparison, general characteristics, writing habits, personal characteristics, forgeries, and examination-in-chief, the author gives a specimen of the present unsatisfactory style of questioning, and gives numerous model questions for examination-in-chief and cross-examination. There are also separate chapters on the languages and dialects of India (there is a separate chart at the end giving the numerals and the alphabets in all the 14 languages recognised by the Constitution), inks, additions, alterations, erasures and sequence of strokes, and on disguised writings.

4. Although identification of type-script is said to be more reliable than handwriting identification, that has not yet been made admissible in evidence. The cross-examination of an expert is sometimes lengthy and unproductive of any result owing to the want of a general understanding of the subject, and the present book should therefore be valuable to lawyers preparing for such cross-examination; it should prove useful to judges and magistrates as well.

5. The bibliography, table of cases and index are useful adjuncts. R.S.S.

LAW RELATING TO ESTATE DUTY, GIFT TAX, AND WEALTH TAX. By C. C. Anajwala, B. A. (Hons.), LL. B., Advocate, High Court, Bombay. 1st Edition. 1970. C. Jamnadas & Co., 145-C, Princess Street, Bombay. 2. Pp. xviii & 348. Price, Rs. 15.

The book under review deals with the direct tax laws relating to Estate Duty, Gift Tax, and Wealth Tax. These laws aim at reducing the concentration of wealth in the hands of the few and the removal of inequalities in the distribution of wealth, thereby enabling the State to finance development and welfare programmes. It contains an exhaustive commentary on the various provisions of the tax laws, each commentary being preceded by a useful analysis and supported by the latest case law, particularly, the decisions of the Supreme Court, and giving practical illustrations with calculations as working models in order to make abstruse provisions easily intelligible.

2. The Estate Duty is a capital levy taxing capital wealth which accumulates after payment of the other taxes and meeting expenditure. While the law provides for the exemption of certain properties, it also provides for aggregation of property for rate purposes, so that the rate is enhanced, and what is given with one hand is taken away with the other. It provides also for bringing within its purview the properties transferred to controlled companies. The Gift Tax is a levy on gifts intended to fill up a gap in the taxing structure which made it possible to avoid or reduce the tax liability by gratuitous transfer of property. It includes any transaction made with intent to diminish the value of one's property in order to increase that of another. The Wealth Tax, on the other hand, is a tax levied on the net wealth, which means the specified assets minus all debts owed by the assessee. The Supreme Court has held that income tax liability on the valuation date is such a deductible debt, because it is a present obligation to pay an ascertained sum of money and, therefore, a perfected debt.

3. There are three parts in the volume under reference. Part I deals with the Estate Duty Act 1953, the Estate Duty Rules, and the Estate Duty (Controlled Companies) Rules; Part II deals with Gift Tax Act 1958 and the Gift Tax Rules, and Part III, with the Wealth Tax Act 1957 and the Wealth Tax Rules. The 85 sections of Part I are appropriately grouped under such heads as imposition of the duty, exceptions, aggregation, value chargeable, deductions and collection of the duty, and jurisdiction of courts, followed by the First and Second Schedules. The 46 sections of the Gift Tax Act, 1958 are divided into chapters on the charge and gifts subject to such charge, Gift Tax authorities, assessment appeals, revision and references, payment and recovery of the tax, refunds and rectification of mistakes, followed by the Schedule giving the rates of tax. The 46 sections of the Wealth Tax Act have been grouped under similar chapter heads, followed by the Schedule of rates.

4. The Supplement to the book contains sections 26 and 27 of the Finance Act, 1970 with comments, other amendment Acts, Notifications and recent case law. The intelligent reader should be able to gather several hints for the avoidance of tax liability by suitably arranging his own affairs. Tax avoidance is not the art of dodging tax without actually breaking the law. Rather, it is the 'Lawful carrying out of a transaction which was either entered into, or took a particular form, for the purpose of minimising taxation'. As observed by Justice Jagadisan in Aruna Group of Estates v. State of Madras, (1955) 55 ITR 642 (648), it is sound law, and not bad morality, for anybody to so arrange his affairs as to reduce the brunt of taxation to a minimum. There is a full discussion of the subject against the background of the law in England in Potter and Monroe's Tax Planning (Sweet & Maxwell, 1970). The present book should therefore be highly useful to lawyers, tax consultants, tax payers and law students alike. R.S.S

COMMENTARY ON THE CONSTITUTION OF INDIA. Vol. 5. (Arts. 300-End.) Fifth Edition (Revised, rewritten, and enlarged). 1970. By Durga Das Basu. S. C. Sarkar & Sons (Private) Ltd., 1-C College Square, Calcutta 22. Pp. xvii, 662, & (312). Price, Rs. 45.

The present volume of this monumental and encyclopaedic work of learning and research incorporates the several judicial decisions and legislative enactments that have accumulated since the publication of Volume IV in 1963. The comments on the provisions relating to Services in Part XIV (Arts. 309-323), covering nearly 230 pages, form virtually an independent treatise, and deal with such topics as recruitment and conditions of service, tenure, dismissal, removal or reduction in rank, appointment and term of office of members of the Public Service Commissions, removal and suspension of a member, and functions, expenses and reports of Public Service Commissions. A detailed casebook regarding these constitutional provisions and their application by the courts to different sets of circumstances is to be found in Madan Bhatia's Public Service through the Cases (1969).

2. In the present work the chapter on Amendments (Part XX) has also been developed with particular reference to the controversial decision in Golak Nath's case (AIR 1967 S C 1643), various aspects of which have been discussed from the juristic standpoint. In this case the Supreme Court has taken the view that the Fundamental Rights in Part III of the Constitution cannot be subject to the process of amendment provided for in Art. 338 and that if any such right is to be amended, a new constituent assembly must be convened for making a new constitution. In a tabular form the author summarises the reasons given by the Supreme Court (majority of 6 in a Bench of 11) and gives the comments against each of those reasons.

3. All amendment Acts upto the Twenty-third have been incorporated in the text. The Constitution (Twenty-second) Amendment Act 1969, followed by the Assam Reorganisation (Meghalaya) Act, 1969 have called for a thorough revision of the 6th Schedule, and this is now believed to be the only book giving a complete treatment of the autonomous States of Meghalaya. Parts XIII and XV to XVIII (Arts. 301-307, 324-360) deal with the subjects of trade and commerce, elections, special provisions relating to certain classes, language, and emergency provisions. They cover the Power of Parliament to impose restrictions on trade and commerce and the restrictions on these legislative powers, the control of elections by an Election Commission and bar to interference by Courts in electoral matters, the language of the Union and the Supreme Court, and Emergency Provisions. Articles 361, 362 and 363 dwell on the powers of the President, the rights and privileges of the Rulers of Indian States, and bar to interference by Courts in disputes arising out of certain treaties, agreements, etc. They are among the points at issue in the present proceedings before the Supreme Court, in which the Rulers have challenged the validity of the President's order de-recognising them. The Schedules, nine in number, have been appended at the end, and account for as many as 312 pages.

4. The method of treatment adopted in the work is comparative. It is a commentary not only on the Constitution of India, but also on the parallel provisions of the Constitutions of the United States, Eire, Australia, Canada, South Africa, Japan, France, Burma and Ceylon and, most important, England. After each Article of the Indian Constitution, the comparable provisions of other Constitutions are reproduced and the commentary refers in detail to the legal position under those other constitutions. It is claimed that such a systematic comparison of different Constitutions from the standpoint of legal interpretations has not so far been attempted. In order to avoid confusion, the comments under each Article have been divided under two heads: (a) 'Other Constitutions'; (b) India.

5 The present work presents, primarily, a judicial interpretation of the Constitution of India for use in Courts whose decisions shape its application, progress and development. At the same time full attention has been paid to the political and constitutional aspects so as to be useful to political scientists and parliamentarians. Reference to existing laws is imperative for constitutional interpretation from the legal standpoint, and the book therefore includes references to the statute law under the major constitutions. In a word, the book is invaluable, to the judge, lawyer, parliamentarian and political scientist alike.

6. Though there is no general index, the commentary on each Article is immediately followed by an index. R.S.S.

The late Shri V. V. CHITALEY, B.A., LL.B.
Senior Advocate, Supreme Court of India
(FOUNDER OF THE ALL INDIA REPORTER, LTD.)
(1885—1971)

IN MEMORIAM

'Tis all a chequer-board of Nights and Days
Where Destiny with Men for Pieces plays:
Hither and thither moves, and mates and slays,
And one by one back in the Closet lays.

—Omar Khayyam

It is with feelings of the utmost grief that we are recording in this issue the passing away of our beloved founder, Mr. V. V. Chitaley, on the 11th of March last at Nagpur, after an illness of several months which he bore with exemplary patience and fortitude. For more than a year he had to suffer the anguish of Cancer to which he had to succumb in the end in spite of the best medical aid. He was 85 years of age at the time of his death.

The late Mr. Chitaley was unquestionably one of the greatest Indians of his time in his own way. As he had not entered active political life and had not taken upon himself the career of a social reformer or any other career which would have brought him into limelight, the general public had not much opportunity of knowing about his real greatness, work and achievement. But his service in the field of law was in no way the less significant on account of his not having cut a prominent figure on the stage of public life. There is practically no one in the legal world, whether Judge or Lawyer, to whom the name of Chitaley is not known.

The All India Reporter founded by the late Mr. Chitaley is now practically synonymous with law reports in India, and Mr. Chitaley's name is synonymous with the All India Reporter in legal circles. It is not that before Mr. Chitaley started the All India Reporter in 1922 there were no Law Reports in India. There have been Law Reports in India for a very long time, for nearly a hundred years now, but practically all of them were Provincial Journals, except one or two which were either meagre or too expensive for the generality of the profession. It was left to the late Mr. Chitaley to conceive of a Law Journal on a popular basis which would combine both the functions of an All-India Journal and of a provincial journal. It is this feature that made an immediate appeal to the entire body of the legal profession in India.

and made Mr. Chitaley's name familiar throughout the length and breadth of India in legal circles.

It was Mr. Chitaley who visualised, as it were by inspiration, the need for a journal on an All-India basis which would be equally useful in every High Court in India. It is said that all great things are, in their nature, simple. The same thing can be said about Mr. Chitaley's concept of an All-India Journal. Though it was of such obvious value for the country, the idea had not occurred to any of his predecessors at least in the form and with the vividness with which he conceived the idea. In that sense, the late Mr. Chitaley can be truly accorded the position of a pioneer, nay, a public benefactor.

Whatever may be the vicissitudes of the Commonwealth ties in other spheres, collaboration in the professional and academic fields has proceeded uninterruptedly, as was proved by the recent Commonwealth Law Conference in Delhi. The above statement applies with much greater force to India and its component States. It is one of the most priceless parts of the British heritage that we have the same legal and administrative system in India in all the States and the fissiparous tendencies seen in other spheres have not been noticed in the field of law. The contribution of the A. I. R. in this matter has been not only not negligible but genuinely significant inasmuch as understanding has to be based on knowledge, and knowledge has to come from books.

The dedication with which Mr. Chitaley worked for his ideal is something which only his colleagues and collaborators knew and of which the outside world cannot have a sufficient idea. Almost till the last breath of his life he was thinking only of the giant concern which he had built up and of the lines on which its service to the legal profession and to the cause of law could be improved and developed.

It must also be mentioned that Mr. Chitaley had taken upon his own shoulders the cause of freedom of law reporting in India and whenever there was a threat to such freedom it was he that stood in the forefront and took upon himself the brunt of the struggle.

Mr. Chitaley sincerely believed that there must be absolute freedom of law reporting, if there should be a proper development of law in this country. It is a self-evident proposition that in our system of jurisprudence case-law furnishes the bricks with which the edifice of law is built up and any move to affect this source of law cannot but operate adversely on the growth of law in this country. Mr. Chitaley felt very strongly on this point like many other Jurists in the world. His work in this field is one of his most important contributions to the development of law in India.

Mr. Chitaley's name will be remembered not only as the founder of the All India Reporter and other All-India Law Journals but also as the author, inspirer and promoter of a new model of Law Commentaries and other publications like the Digests and Manual, in which the same thoroughness and systematic and scientific methods which he adopted in the case of the Law Journals can be seen. Everywhere his object was maximum usefulness to the lawyer, and the profession has come to regard thoroughness and usefulness as guaranteed characteristics of Mr. Chitaley's publications, which therefore carry a reputation of their own among lawyers and Judges.

It is not known to many that Mr. Chitaley was a radical nationalist and many are the patriotic causes to which he has made generous contributions without undue publicity. He was also very much devoted to the Hindu religion and Hindu ideals of life — facts which the outside public do not know.

In personal life Mr. Chitaley was simple to the point of austerity and sometimes staggered people by his ways of living. His heart was always touched by poverty and he never stinted help to the poor and the needy. His humility of behaviour was something absolutely genuine and unassumed and he was a gentleman to the core in every sense of the term.

Mr. Chitaley died full of years and honour.

May his soul rest in peace.

PATENTS, TRADE MARKS, COPYRIGHT AND INDUSTRIAL DESIGNS. By T. A. Blanco White, one of Her Majesty's Counsel, and Robin Jacob, Bar-at-Law. Sweet & Maxwell Limited, 11, New Fetter Lane, London. 1970. (In India: N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Bombay). Pp. xv and 189. Price Rs. 36. Paperback edition. Rs. 18.

The subject of the present publication is the law of commercial and industrial imitation; imitation by one manufacturer of another's products, imitation by one trader of the names and badges by which another's goods or services are known. The parts of mercantile law with which the book is concerned are sometimes regarded as specialised, but businessmen or lawyers cannot, on that account, put such questions aside as matters purely for the specialist. A good many of the disputes in this field arise from ignorance from failure by one or both parties to foresee the likelihood of legal rights being infringed. The Design Copyright Act, 1968 is believed to have increased the chances of such failure occurring. The present book is intended to provide enough knowledge to let the reader know when he needs to seek specialist advice.

2. In addition to the introductory section, there are three sections in the book, broadly along the lines drawn by the Acts of Parliament. The first Part, or Section (Chapters 3-7), is concerned with the copying of the product, and deals mainly with the law of patents and of industrial designs, and explains how patents are to be obtained, to what extent they are useful, the patenting of important inventions, industrial designs, Crown rights and security. The second part (Chs. 8-15) is concerned with the way things are sold, and deals mainly with the law of passing-off, trade marks, and other rules preventing unfair competition or unfair selling techniques. After discussing in detail the rights of the registered proprietor of a trade mark the author proceeds to explain what sort of thing can be registered as a trade mark, gives an outline of the procedure for registration, discusses the conditions necessary for registration and explains when other people's application can be opposed, and what precautions should be taken to keep a trade-mark registration valid. A separate chapter is concerned with a special sort of trade-mark intended, not to indicate the existence of a trade connection between the owner and the goods, but to indicate that the owner has certified the goods as reaching certain standards. The general rule governing passing-off and its ramifications is then discussed, and the law on the matter of trade libel or slander of goods is explained with the aid of a few examples.

3. The third part (Chs. 16-22) deals with the law of copyright and the law of confidential information. It tackles the question of who owns a copyright in the first place and what may happen to it afterwards. It defines what infringement is, deals with questions arising from dealings in copyright, and finally, discusses the right, not to stop others from reproducing a work, but to stop them making use of the information contained in it. The present book is about the English law, but, generally speaking, foreign legal systems have something corresponding to the rights discussed in it, although the rules are not always the same. Where Commonwealth countries are concerned the differences are small, but outside them, the differences are significant and the approach is different; the present book contains short notes about them. Most of the law discussed in it is contained in a few Acts of Parliament, but text-books on the subject give the texts of these Acts, with explanations of what they are believed to mean; other sources of information are the reports of decided cases.

4. The present book contains a useful table of cases and index. R.S.S.

MASSACHUSETTS COURT CLINICS. APTO Monographs No. 1. Published by International Journal of Offender Therapy, 199 Gloucester Place, London NW1. England. European Editor: Melitta Schmideberg, M. D. 1970. Annual Subscription, £2. Single copy, $ 1.75.

Although the United States of America has reached undreamt of standards of welfare and social services, delinquency and drug addiction continue unabated, and it was the need to adopt an imaginative approach in dealing with these evils that gave birth to the establishment in New York in 1950 of the Association for the Psychiatric Treatment of Offenders (APTO), a pioneer organisation in the field of offender therapy and correction, membership of which is open to all professions dealing with the problems of anti-social behaviour.

One of its goals is to establish "the psychotherapy of offenders as a speciality, by encouraging treatment, research, and active co-operation with allied disciplines." Psychiatrists need to know about the law and to appreciate the functions, prerogatives and duties of the Court, and the legal profession should become acquainted, says the Editor, with the fundamentals of psychiatry and psychotherapy, what it can and what it cannot do. The Association's International Journal of Offender Therapy, published thrice a year, has so far brought out authoritative therapeutic, psychiatric, sociological and legal articles from over twenty-five countries.

2. The APTO monograph under review deals with the unique set-up and the solid accomplishment of the Massachusetts Court Clinics for the treatment of offenders. It includes a study of the Administration and Community aspects of these clinics, and articles on Enforced Psychotherapy and Diagnosing Offender Patients. The writer of the last article concludes that consistent and meaningful criteria for establishing the competency of an offender, and his criminal responsibility or dangerousness have not as yet been developed and that, perhaps, the Court room is not an appropriate laboratory for such a scientific task. It would appear that the work of the twenty Court clinics in Massachusetts, carried out for many years, has demonstrated that therapy in the Court setting can be fruitful, that initial difficulties with patients can be overcome, and that harmonious co-operation with Judges and Court personnel can be developed. A HANDBOOK ON THE GENERAL PRINCIPLES OF THE LAW OF CONTRACT. By Prof. M. Krishnan Nair, M. A., M. L., LL. M., Lekha Publishers, Thampanoor, Trivandrum. 1970. Pp. 246. Price Rs. 3.

An agreement enforceable by law is a contract. All agreements are contracts if they are made by the free consent of the parties competent to contract, for a lawful consideration, and with a lawful object, and are not expressly declared to be void. The book under review describes the general features of a contract, the formation of contracts, factors invalidating contracts, performance breach and impossibility, damages, specific relief, and quasi-contracts. The author discusses, inter alia, the essential elements of a contract, agreements creating obligations, simple contracts and contracts under seal, express and implied contracts, unilateral and bilateral contracts, and void and voidable agreements. Offer and acceptance, communication of offer, meaning of acceptance and its manner, when acceptance is to be effected, revocation of acceptance, and intention to create legal obligations are then examined. The necessity of consideration, consideration being distinct from motive, privity of consideration, executed and part consideration, adequacy of consideration, consideration and discharge of contracts, limitations, and application in negotiable instruments, are analysed, and among the factors invalidating contracts are mentioned mental incapacity, mistake, coercion and undue influence, fraud and misrepresentation, legality of object, and void and contingent agreements. The discharge of contracts by performance, the parties who must perform them, time, place, and manner of performance, appropriation of payments and contract which need not be formed are the topics covered by Part IV. The other three parts deal with effect of breach of performance, the doctrine of frustration, discharge of contract by operation of law, nature of damages in breach of contract, specific performance and equity and defences to specific performance and the nature of quasi-contracts.

2. When a party to a contract breaks the obligation imposed by the contract a right of action is conferred on the party injured; it may even discharge the injured party from performance of his part of the agreement. He can claim damages from the other party for compensating the loss suffered; in certain cases the injured party may obtain a decree for specific performance of the contract. The first is a common law remedy and the second, a remedy in equity. The law relating to specific relief including specific performance of contract was till recently contained in the Specific Relief Act 1877; now it is contained in Specific Relief Act, 1963, which came into force on 1st March, 1964. A quasi-contract, on the other hand, belongs to an entirely different category which has little or nothing in common with genuine contracts, beyond the fact that the same procedure is used for actions in contract and in quasi-contract; after all it is a branch of the law of contract and subject to the same limitations.

3. With several model questions given at the end for the benefit of the student, the neat handbook under review should be very useful in practice. But there is no preface, introduction, table of cases, or index. R.S.S.

GENERAL SALES TAX LAW IN MADHYA PRADESH (in two volumes). By M. C. Gupta, B.A., LL. B., Advocate, and Tax Consultant. 2nd Edition. 1970. Wadhwa & Company, Rampurawala Building, Indore 2. Vol. I, Pp. xii &

263. Vol. 2, Pp. xi & 265 to 660. Price Rs. 30 per volume. (Sold in sets only).

Since the introduction of the Madhya Pradesh General Sales Tax Act, 1958 and the rules framed under it, there have been several amendments virtually altering the entire body of the law. The need was greatly felt for an up-to-date book on the subject by the tax-payers, tax consultants, legal practitioners, and the administrative authorities, who were at a loss how to keep themselves abreast of these successive amendments, and the present book is designed to meet that need. The 1st edition of the book was published in March 1967, followed by a companion volume in September 1968, and it included a comparative study of the Schedules and Notifications issued under Section 12 and other Sections which are of practical use in day-to-day business. In the 2nd edition have been incorporated the Delegation Orders issued by the Commissioner of Sales Tax, which are not easily available to tax consultants. The legislative history of the Act and the Rules give the position of all the sections and clauses on different dates since the coming into force of the M. P. General Sales Tax Act.

2. Volume I of the book contains the M. P. General Sales Tax Act 1958, legislative history of the sections, the history of the Schedules, and Notifications. Of the 55 sections in the Act, the earlier ones deal with the taxing authorities, incidence and levy of tax, levy of purchase tax, tax-free goods, licensing and registration of dealers, returns, assessment of tax, and payment and recovery. Refunds, remission of tax, accounts, establishment of check posts, powers of the officers of the Sales Tax Department and the delegation of the Commissioner's powers are among the topics covered by Sections 22-30. The other sections consider, inter-alia, the transfer of proceedings, the powers of the Commissioner, control of clearing agents, bar to certain proceedings, appeal, court-fee stamps, application of the Limitation Act, statement of case to High Court, rectification of mistakes, and offences and penalties.

3. Volume 2 contains the M. P. General Sales Tax Rules 1959, history of the amendments to the Rules and the Delegation Orders. The Rules are given under 15 Parts, the first four of them dealing with Sales Tax authorities, licenses, and registration of dealers, while the return of turnover and statement of purchases, payment of tax, assessment and refund are covered in the next five parts. Parts IX-XIV dwell on inspection of accounts, check posts, appeals and revision, serving the notice and summons, fees, and delegation of powers. All the Forms prescribed for use have been appended at the end.

4. The scheme of the book has been well designed for purposes of quick reference. All those connected with the study, practice, and administration of the sales tax law in Madhya Pradesh should find the publication very useful. Said to be the only book available on the subject, it brings the various amendments of the law within easy reach of all concerned. Each of the volumes has several blank pages at the end for the reader's personal notes. The law is stated as on 31st August 1970. R.S.S.

THE CARRIERS ACT (Act 3 of 1865),
By Dasugopal Mitra, M.A., LL.B.,
Advocate. 1st Edition, 1970. Sarat
Book House, 18-B Shyamacharan De Street, Calcutta 12. pages 60, Price
Rs. 5.

A common carrier or a public carrier denotes a person other than the Government who is engaged for all the purposes of transporting for hire property of persons from place to place, by land or inland navigation. A 'person' includes any association or body of persons whether incorporated or not. There are different laws relating to the carriage of goods by land, including inland navigation, carriage by sea, and carriage by air. The 'carriage' may be by private carriers, who are ordinary bailees and for which there is no special enactment, and which are guided by the Indian Contract Act. The Carriers Act 1865 deals with common carriers of goods over land and by inland navigation. The Indian Contract Act does not govern their rights and liabilities, which are regulated by the principles of English common law as modified by the Carriers Act, 1865. The Railways Act, 1890 deals with the carriage of goods over land by railway. Carriage by sea is governed by the Indian Bills of Lading Act, 1856 and the Indian Carriage of Goods by Sea Act 1925, and carriage by air, by the Indian Carriage by Air Act 1934, which gives effect to a convention for the unification of certain rules relating to international carriage by air; internal carriage by air is governed by the English common law.

2. The small book under review is a compilation on the Carriers Act 1865, with notes and comments. The Act contains eleven sections, by the third of which carriers are not to be liable for the loss of certain goods above one hundred rupees in value, unless they are delivered as such. The carrier may fix the rates for carrying, but the person who is entitled to recover money in respect of property lost or damaged may also recover the money paid for its carriage. Section 6 specifies the categories of property regarding which the liability of the carrier is not limited or affected by Public Notice, and lays down that carriers, with some exceptions, may limit liability by special contract. But the special contract does not limit the liability of the owner of a rail-road constructed under Act 22 of 1863. Section 7 lays down in which cases the owner of a rail-road or tram-road is answerable for loss or damage. A common carrier is liable for the loss or damage caused by neglect or fraud of himself or his agent, but plaintiffs in suits for loss, damage, or non-delivery, are not required to prove negligence or criminal act, although notice of loss or injury is to be given within six months. This Act follows the scheme, but not the details, of the English Carriers Act; the former's emphasis is on the carrier's liabilities and duties and the latter's on the protection available to him.

3. In a suit for loss, or damage, or non-delivery, a consignee, not being a party to the carriage contract, cannot enforce a contractual obligation between the consignor and the carrier, but can sue in tort. In the case of loss, the onus of proof that there is no negligence falls on the carrier. Arts. 10 and 11 of the Limitation Act prescribe the period within which a suit against a common carrier can be filed.

4. The book has a useful subject index and index of cases.

A CONCISE TREATISE ON COMPANY LAW. By Philip K. Thayil, Professor and Principal, Government Law College, Cochin. Foreword by A. T. Markose, M. A., LL. D., Deputy Judge, International Administrative Tribunal, and Dean, Faculty of Law, University of Kerala. Published by Kuriachan P. Thayil, Thayil House, Kalathiparamb Road, Ernakulam South, Cochin 16. 1970. Pp. xiv and 234, Price Rs. 18.

With its 658 sections and 12 schedules, the Companies Act, 1956 is a piece of fundamental socio-economic legislation. Although it is based mainly on the English Company Act 1948, it contains certain additional provisions to meet the peculiar business conditions prevailing in India. It aims at restricting the powers of directors and managements and eliminating dishonesty in corporate management, and the statutory changes in the field of company law are calculated to achieve the nation's aspirations as codified in the directive principles of State policy contained in the Constitution of India. Measures to check concentration of economic power, for checking income concentration and to ensure proper management, are among its special features. The latest amendments to the Act abolish the managing agency system and seek to prohibit companies from making contributions to political parties, and there has been a move to make proportional representation to shareholders on Boards of Director compulsory.

2. The present publication elucidates the principles of company law comprehensively with the aid of important judicial decisions. Divided into two parts, Part I deals, inter alia with the formation of companies, memorandum and articles of association, capital, prospectus, dividend, interest, and annual returns. Part II discusses the position of directors; Board meetings; auditors; arbitration and amalgamation; private, Government, and foreign companies; administration; investigation; managing agents; and winding up. Government control over companies, provisions regarding minority share-holders, prevention of oppression and mismanagement and the proposed abolition of the doctrine of ultra vires, are some of the chapters and topics of special interest. As the position of manager or secretary has become infinitely more important after the abolition of the managing agency system, every section concerning it has received special notice.

3. The Act contains a number of provisions for protection of the interest of commercial moralities and prevention of abuses, and arms the Government with even quasi-judicial powers. The establishment of the Board of Company Law Administration should go far to prevent any possible misuse of power by them.

4. The present book has been written topic-wise, and not through commentaries section by section; references to the relevant sections of the Companies Act have been given throughout the commentaries. Wherever possible the law has been stated in the form of simple enumeration of points, but where important doctrines are dealt with, attempts at fairly detailed discussion have been made, and references have been given to periodical literature and select books to enable the interested to pursue in more detail the respective topics. The book should be very useful to students, for whom it is primarily intended.

5. The table of cases and index should also be mentioned.

MISCONDUCT IN EMPLOYMENT (In Public & Private Sector). By B. R. Ghaiye, B. A., LL. B., Legal Adviser, Birla Cotton Spg. & Wvg. Mills, Ltd. 1969. Eastern Book Company, 34 Lalbagh, Lucknow. Pp. cii & 932. Price Rs. 40.

The present publication aims at throwing light upon the nature and scope of various acts of misconduct in their relation to the contract of employment, for the employer has a right to award punishment of discharge, dismissal, fine, demotion, and suspension, in such cases. During the last twenty years a massive volume of case law on the subject, by the Supreme Court, High Courts, Labour and Industrial Tribunals and Labour Courts, has accumulated, but little has been done to collect, analyse, and co-relate them. A knowledge of the principles involved for application to day-to-day problems is necessary for officer, worker and Union leader, and the author has tried to meet their want.

2. The various acts of misconduct were formulated by the Model Standing Orders mentioned in the Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Rules 1946, and the different courts and tribunals have interpreted and classified them. The Model Standing Orders have classified these acts as disobedience, insubordination, subversion of discipline, and riotous and disorderly behaviour on the premises. As a misconduct is the breach of an express or implied obligation on the part of the employee, the author has tried to elucidate these rights and obligations in relation to a strike, defamation, picketing and other activities. Some of the items of misconduct, like theft, criminal breach of trust, misappropriation, forgery, falsification of accounts, defamation and abuse, have been taken from the criminal law of India and, as the industrial tribunals follow that classification, the author clarifies what they mean in criminal law and shows in what way the concept of criminal law has been applied in industrial adjudication also.

3. The first three chapters in the book describe the nature of master and servant relationship and its historical development, the general nature of misconduct, and the employee's non-observance of his duty. The employer's right to effect a change in the duties and methods of work, disobedience of specific orders, the communication and infringement of orders, strike as misconduct, and acts of misconduct associated with it, are dealt with in five chapters. The author then proceeds to consider the topics of insubordination, acts subversive of discipline, non-performance of work, absence without leave, negligence in work, acts involving bad faith and dishonesty, and the special features regarding 'misconducts' in Government employment. In each chapter there is a synopsis and abundant case law, which has been brought upto May 1969. The table of cases and subject index are useful.

4. Each chapter contains the case law for framing the charge and specimen charge sheets, which are followed by a departmental enquiry; though not strictly within the purview of the book, the author also discusses the employer's and worker's evidence in relation to every act of misconduct. Although mainly based upon case law, an attempt has been made to co-ordinate the different decisions of courts and industrial tribunals into legal propositions, to explain their justification, and to trace their historical evolution. The book should be of considerable assistance to the practising lawyer and the research worker as well as to the layman.

THE POSITION OF THE JUDICIARY UNDER THE CONSTITUTION OF INDIA. By H. M. Seervai, Advocate-General of Maharashtra. The University of Bombay, University Buildings, Bombay 32. 1970. Pp. XIV and 16., Price Rs. 12.

The present volume brings together the lectures delivered by the author under the Chimanlal Setalvad Law Lectureship established by the University of Bombay as a result of the magnificent donation by Mr. M. C. Setalvad, former Attorney-General of India, in honour of the memory of his father. The Supreme Court and the High Courts in India with their power of judicial review touch the lives and happiness of the citizens at many points and the proper working of these courts is necessary if the Constitution is to function properly. That a fearless, independent, incorruptible and non-political judiciary, exercising the power of judicial review with wisdom and restraint, is vital to our free democratic country is the central theme of these lectures.

2. In the first lecture, the author describes the exercise of judicial review by the U. S. Supreme Court, because the framers of the Indian Constitution wanted to avoid the grave consequences which flowed from the abuse of judicial review in that country. The author considers that the majority judgment in the Golaknath case shows that the lessons of American experience have not been learnt. The judgment, which the author calls a 'strange paradox of judicial review' (Lecture 6), held that Parliament had no power to amend fundamental rights, a power twice upheld by the Supreme Court itself (Shankari Prasad's case, 1952 S. C. R. 89, and Sajjan Singh's case, 1965 S. C. R. 933). As it puts in issue the position which the judiciary was designed to occupy, the author gives particulars of the case and the reasoning behind the judgment, and tries to show that every step in the reasoning is wrong. Quoting the French and American examples, he strikes a note of warning that, where judicial wisdom and restraint fail, the judiciary is stripped of its power to interfere with executive and legislative action. He deals briefly with some of the important cases in which judicial review brought the U. S. Court in conflict with the legislature and the executive.

3. The second Lecture, which shows that our judiciary is non-political, considers the several factors on which the satisfactory working of a Court, particularly a final Court of Appeal, depends, like the nature and extent of its jurisdiction, the judges, the relations between the Bench and the Bar, the procedure and equipment for preparing the judgment, and the judgment itself. The third Lecture makes it clear that, by and large, the Supreme Court has exercised the power of judicial review with wisdom and restraint. The author acclaims the judgment in A. K. Gopalan's case (1950 S. C. R. 88) as having 'preserved judicial review from the reproach that it enables judges to substitute their views on the wisdom of a law in the place of the views of the elected representatives of the people'. That the views of the ex-Chief Justice of India, Mr. K. Subba Rao, both in Golaknath case and in Gopalan case, are completely at variance with those held by the author should set us furiously to think.

4. Dealing with the harmful effect of Dicey's 'Law of the Constitution' on the Supreme Court's constitutional doctrines, the author discusses the four connected topics of separation of powers, Rule of Law, administrative law, and delegated legislation (Lecture 4). The fifth Lecture emphasises the imperative need for keeping the springs of justice undefiled by corruption. In the Preface the lecturer refers to the Bank Nationalisation case and critically comments on the majority judgment of the Supreme Court and its effect on the doctrine of Stare Decisis.

5. The volume is provided with a bibliography, table of cases, and index, and should make interesting and instructive reading for judges, lawyers, and jurists.

THE INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES ACT, 1947. By Kirpa Dayal Srivastava, Advocate. 4th Edition. 1970. Eastern Book Company, 34 Lalbagh, Lucknow. Pp. lxviii & 1073. Price Rs. 50.

The Trade Disputes Act, 1929 imposed restraints on the right to strike or lock-out in industry, but there was no provision for referring the causes thereof to a board of conciliation or Court of enquiry, and the present Act was the sequel. The two new institutions provided for in this enactment are the Works Committees, which are expected to remove the causes of friction between worker and management in day-to-day working, and Industrial Tribunals, which bear references made by the parties to an industrial dispute and by the State Government at its discretion. The Act also gives a reorientation to the administration of the conciliation machinery provided in the Trade Disputes Act. When an industrial dispute is under enquiry by an industrial tribunal, a strike or lock-out on the issue can be prohibited by the State Government concerned, which may also declare, in the public interests and in emergencies, any industry to be a public utility service.

2. The publication under review presents the text of the Act section by section, each section being followed by exhaustive commentaries and synopses with up-to-date and voluminous case law. The Act consists of seven Chapters and 40 Sections. The first Chapter traces the history of industrial legislation in India, the important provisions of the Constitution regarding industrial laws; provisions which secure for labour the objects laid down in the Directive Principles, writs, powers of the Supreme Court and the High Courts, industrial tribunal discharging judicial functions, appeals from awards to the Supreme Court, and the latter's jurisdiction. Sections 3-9 of the Act deal with the relevant authorities like Works Committees, Conciliation Officers, Courts of Enquiry, Labour Courts and national tribunals. Ss. 22-25 cover prohibition of strikes and lockouts, illegal strikes and lockouts, and prohibition of financial aid to them. Strikes and lockouts have a habit of eventually holding the whole community to ransom and endangering the interests of the public. The reported changes in British Trade Union legislation seeking to make them justiciable in the ordinary Courts of law would seem to come not a day too soon. Sections 25A-25J consider the topics of lay-off and retrenchment and Ss. 26-31 are concerned with the subject of penalties, while 10 sections relate to the notice of change, reference of disputes to Courts, Boards or Tribunals, and the procedure, powers, and duties of the Authorities under the Act.

3. The appendices include the texts of several State and Central Amending Acts and Acts relating to banking and insurance companies, working journalists, and standing orders in industrial organisations, accompanied by an index and table of cases. The author's discussion of the implications of an industrial dispute, misconduct and domestic enquiry, as well as natural and social justice, is comprehensive. The topic of bonus has been removed from the text, for there are separate treatises on it (one by the present author himself, and by F. Berarwalla, and D. N. Vohra).

4. In following the principles of social justice in industrial disputes, the approach is pragmatic and seeks to find a solution just and fair to both parties and to establish harmony between capital and labour. Just as the fundamental right of a citizen is subject to reasonable restriction in the public interest in constitutional law, in industrial adjudication the claims of the employer based on freedom of contract have to be adjusted to the worker's claim for social justice. LAW AND PRACTICE OF EVIDENCE. (Civil and Criminal) By S. N. Bhattacharjee, M.A., LL.B., Retired District and Sessions Judge, Calcutta. Eastern Law House, Calcutta. 3rd Edition 1970. Pp. xxxvi & 516. Price, Rs. 17.50.

The Indian Evidence Act, 1872 reproduces the English law on the subject and reduces it to the form of express propositions, arranged in their natural order, with modifications to suit the peculiar Indian circumstances. The law of Evidence determines the relevancy of facts, or what sort of fact may be proved; the proof of facts, or what sort of proof is to be given of those facts; and the production of proof of relevant facts, or who is to give it, and how, and the effect of improper admission or rejection of evidence. The Evidence Act applies to all judicial proceedings, a judicial proceeding being nothing more or less than the steps taken by a Court in the course of the administration of justice in a pending case.

2. The latest edition of the commentary under notice has been thoroughly revised, and several new topics have been added, so much so that the note-head paragraphs now run to 1035 (900 in the second Edition). The contents have to a large extent been rearranged or re-written, and several old cases have been replaced by more recent ones; the case law has been brought down to June 1970, the latest decisions being included in a separate addenda.

3. Articles 14 & 20 (3) of the Indian Constitution pose several questions regarding the admissibility and production of evidence in Court as well as the procedure and conduct of police investigation. The Supreme Court decisions have laid down that the giving of thumb, or foot or palm impressions or specimen writings or showing parts of his body by the accused for identification do not contravene Art. 20 (3). Another important decision is over Ss. 123 and 162 of the Act as to the privilege and procedure with regard to affairs of State. The enactment of S. 342-A in the Criminal Procedure Code, giving the accused the right to be examined as a witness for the defence, has given rise to some important questions, which the present commentary discusses at length.

4. Relevancy of facts (Ss. 5-55), Proof (Ss. 56-100), and the production and effect of evidence (Ss. 101-167) are the titles of the three parts into which the Act is divided. The first part examines statements by persons who cannot be called as witnesses, statements made under special circumstances, how much of a statement is to be proved, and when judgments of Courts of justice, the opinions of third persons, and character, are relevant. The second part deals with facts which need not be proved, oral evidence, documentary evidence, public documents, presumption as to documents, and exclusion of oral by documentary evidence. Burden of proof, estoppel, examination of witnesses, and improper rejection and admission of evidence are the topics included in part 3.

5. In the present attempt to bring out the basic principles of civil and criminal evidence, the Sections of the Act have been printed in big, bold type, and the commentaries divided into several numbered paragraphs, each containing a heading in bold type. Apart from the large body of judicial decisions (Supreme Court and High Court rulings), there is a critical examination of the principles of the law.

6. In addition to the subject-index and table of cases, there is an appendix which includes the Indian Oaths Act, the Bankers' Books Evidence Act and the Commercial Documents Evidence Act, 1939. R.S.S.

ADMINISTRATIVE LAW. By S. Rajagopalan, Advocate, High Court, Madras. With a Foreword by M. Ananthanarayanan (Former Chief Justice of Madras). N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., 164 Samaldas Gandhi Marg, Bombay 2. 2nd Edition. 1970. Pp. xxxiii, & 427. Price, Rs. 25.

The coming into existence of a welfare state with an ever-expanding bureaucracy for its administration and the paramount need, in the public interest, to keep that bureaucracy under the Rule of Law have together conspired to bestow special importance on the subject of Administrative Law in India, as is evidenced by the appearance of numerous publications on the subject in recent times. The present treatise has grown out of the lectures delivered by the author to law students studying for the Diploma in Administrative Law of the University of Madras.

2. Opening the introductory chapter with a description of the administrative process and the boundaries of administrative law, the author proceeds to deal with the origin and growth of this law and its history in India, England, France, Russia, America, Canada, and the Scandinavian countries. The concepts and ramifications of the Rule of Law and the doctrine of separation of powers are covered in the next two chapters. The fifth chapter, on delegated legislation, is concerned, inter alia, with the topics of stages of delegation; procedural requirements; Parliamentary control; statutory rules and Constitutional law; sub-delegation; principles and types of delegated legislation; delegation and taxation; validity of such legislation, and methods of review. Chapter VI, on Judicial Review, considers the grounds for review, natural justice, principles of fair hearing, Audi Alteram Partem, bias, procedural ultra vires, error of law, locus standi for judicial review and procedural safeguards. Crown liability and Act of State, Writs, statutory tribunals and enquiries, domestic tribunals, public corporations, estoppel, Stare Decisis, and Res Judicata, are the subjects of discussion in the last six chapters. Each subject is dealt with in the light of its history and evolution in India as well as in other countries.

3. The author considers that there should be a more categorical assertion of the powers of the judiciary vis-a-vis the penal jurisdiction of the legislatures, that delegation in the sphere of taxation should be confined within strict limits, and that the old notion of 'Act of State' and of the non-liability of the State for the torts of its servants should be given up. Further the right of the State to withhold documents needs to be abrogated in view of the latest pronouncement of the House of Lords in Conway v. Rimmer. Considering the difficulty of discovering the principles of natural justice in any one source, an anthology of the leading decisions on the principles of natural justice, together with a theoretical exposition, would serve a long-felt need, according to ex-Chief Justice Anantha-narayanan, who contributes the Foreword.

In this thoughtful work of reference, precedents have been carefully selected and marshalled; the erroneous ones have also been spotlighted. The leading principles and precedents have been duly stressed particularly where inferior tribunals have dealt with questions exclusively of fact. Although designed to meet the requirements of the syllabus, it should also be a source-book to everybody to whom an acquaintance with this branch of jurisprudence has become indispensable, because the judiciary has become something like a protecting buffer against administrative wrong-doing.

The book contains bibliography, a table of cases and index.

SOME CONSTITUTIONAL PROBLEMS. By K. Subba Rao, University of Bombay, 1970. Pp. 318. Price, Rs. 20.

It will be admitted that an insight into the social perspectives of the Indian Constitution is necessary if it is to serve the needs of a fast-changing society. Against the background of the changing political climate, some of the constitutional provisions are believed to be already in need of meaningful re-interpretation, which has however to be done without losing sight of the enduring values of the Constitution. And this, ex-Chief Justice of India, Mr. Subba Rao, has attempted to do in the five lectures which he delivered in the Sir Chimanlal Setalvad Law Lectureship series of the Bombay University, and which have been collected in the volume under review. The five lectures focus the reader's attention on the experience of the working of the Indian Constitution, the judicial salvage of the people's freedom, the Supreme Court of India, Parliamentary Executive and Presidential Executive, and the position of the Union President and Governors.

2. The learned lecturer deploras that what was intended to be a democracy based on a multi-party system has degenerated into a single party rule, most of the fundamental rights have been either abrogated or abridged by a process of amendment and construction, there has been a steady and imperceptible movement away from federation, and, instead of a welfare state ensuring prosperity, equality, liberty and social justice to all, the constitutional provisions are being amended to suit the policies of the party in power. What is of particular relevance at the moment is the lecturer's complaint that the Supreme Court, which should be the final arbiter of the disputes between the different arms of Government, should look on idly while the Union Executive, by the amending process, made Parliament decide in its favour; the Constitution is being amended like any other statute or rule.

3. During the last 17 years, says the lecturer the Supreme Court was not allowed to contribute effectively to the progress of the country in the constitutional field, for Parliament was able to amend it whenever it suited it. As regards the language of the Courts, if the English language is replaced by a regional language or languages, it will not only deflate the legal standard of the country but also become a major disintegrating force. Being located at New Delhi, the Supreme Court has had to work in the oppressive bureaucratic atmosphere, but the judges have been able to withstand their subtle pressures and make an impact on the powerful Executive and the people of the country. In the fourth lecture, on the Parliamentary and Presidential forms of Government, the lecturer explains why the cabinet system of executive cannot be worked unless all the parties believed in the Constitution and entered the legislature to work it and not to mutilate it. We have been familiar with the cabinet system for a long time, and, if we are not able to work it successfully, how, he asks, shall we succeed with the Presidential or any other form of Executive?

4. In a situation like the present when the political complexion of the party in power at the centre differs from that of the States, the lecturer suggests that the appointment of the Governor should be made by the President in the exercise of his discretion on the advice of a high power body, the person selected should be one with a high status and able to influence the Ministry by the sheer strength of his personality, and he should be irremovable except by impeachment. The lecturer has in these lectures critically analysed the trends of Indian Constitutional development and emphasised the importance of interpreting the provisions of the Constitution in the light of the background of Indian tradition and the aspirations of Indian society.

5. The book is provided with a table of cases and index.

THE INDIAN COMPANY LAW (with the Indian Companies Act, 1956). By N. K. Roy, M.A., LL.B., Lecturer, City College of Commerce and Business Administration, Calcutta. 1st Edition 1970. The World Press Private Ltd., 37 College Street, Calcutta 12. Pp. xxii, 432 & 463. Price Rs. 20.

The Indian Companies Act, 1956 is a gigantic piece of socio-economic legislation which aims at checking the concentration of income and economic power, restricting the powers of directors and managements, and ensuring proper management, aims which accord with the Directive Principles of State Policy contained in the Constitution. A company has ceased to be the exclusive concern of share-holders or directors, and is now considered a national asset. In the present commentary, the important provisions of the Companies Act, 1956 have been explained, and the latest case law, both Indian and foreign, has been referred to, as well as the various amendments to the Act.

2. The first half of the book contains the commentaries, and the second half, the text of the Act. A company is an artificial person, having a legal personality. The preparation of a memorandum of association and articles of association, preliminary contracts, registration, and issue of prospectus are the several stages in the formation of a company. The memorandum of association is the character of incorporation and it defines the extent within which the company must move; the articles of association are the regulations for the internal management of the company. A prospectus, simply speaking, is a document offering shares or debentures to the public. The directors, who are not merely agents of the company for its work, are also trustees for the company's monies. The powers of the directors are limited by the memorandum and by the fact that they can only do such acts as are delegated to them. It will be the duty of the Board of Directors to lay before the annual general meeting an annual balance sheet and profit and loss account. Certain discretionary and obligatory powers are conferred on the Central Government to appoint inspectors to investigate into the affairs of a company. Any member of a company can apply to a Court if its affairs are conducted in a manner oppressive to him.

3. Application and allotment, borrowing, shares and debentures, reduction of share capital, transfer of shares and debentures and forfeiture shares, are discussed in six of the chapters, while others cover rectification of share registers, arrangement with creditors, and offences under the Act. The appendices in this part relate to circumstances when special notice is required and the documents to be maintained by a company, and they are followed by the index, while the table of cases comes first.

4. Under separate page numbers the text of the Act is reproduced, along with the twelve schedules. It consists of 13 Parts, Parts 2 to 5 (Ss. 11-145) dealing with incorporation, prospectus and allotment of shares, share capital, and registration of charges. While Parts 8 to 13 (Sections 561-658) cover application of Act to companies formed under other laws, winding up of unregistered companies, registration officers, offices and fees, and collection of information and statistics. Management, administration, and winding up, are considered inasmuch as two-thirds of the Act (the 13 Chapters of Parts 6 and 7; Ss. 146-560). The 1969 Amending Act, also reproduced, abolishes the managing agency system and seeks to prohibit companies from making contributions to political parties.

5. The present volume should be of use to lawyers, students of law, and businessmen.

Mr. CHITALEY AS I KNEW HIM

(By S. Appu Rao, Chief Editor, All India Reporter.)

I had known the late Mr. Chitaley for more than 45 years. During this period I had come into close contact with him in connection with my work in the Editorial Department of the All India Reporter in all its branches.

I can say without hesitation that he was a most remarkable man and also, (to adopt the words of a title often appearing in the Reader's Digest) "a most unforgettable character".

I remember my first meeting with him in Madras. He had asked me to meet him at a certain place at 8 o'clock on one morning. Of course, I reached the place at the appointed time. But he had already arrived there, but was standing behind a tree. After I had reached the place and begun to look here and there, he came out of his hiding place and revealed himself to me. He said that he had wanted to test my punctuality. I thought this was rather a peculiar way of testing a man's punctuality. He could have tested my punctuality even without hiding himself behind a tree. During my long contact with him, I have noticed many other peculiarities of his nature, not very harmful in themselves, but which seemed to me not having much purpose in them.

From the moment of my first meeting with him, I got the impression that he was indeed a man out of the ordinary. The most important characteristic of his, which impressed itself indelibly on me, was his extraordinary energy which was seen in every aspect of his life. I remember his telling me that he had changed the proverb "Never postpone till tomorrow what you can do today" into "Never postpone till the next moment what you can do this moment". I think he followed this rule practically literally in his life.

Mr. Chitaley was not only very energetic but had a very sharp intellect and was capable of great concentration of mind. He told me that he made head-notes while travelling in trains. In those days he would travel third class for long distances as he was always on the move from one corner of the country to another, as the task of organising his infant business required his meeting people in different parts of the country.

Another characteristic of Mr. Chitaley was his will-power and resourcefulness. It must be remembered that he had to build up his concern almost from scratch and his difficulties, financial and otherwise, can be better imagined than described. It was only his grit and toughness of fibre, foresight, dogged perseverance, endless resourcefulness, astounding will-power, tenacity of purpose, thrift and other qualities that enabled him to overcome all his difficulties and build up such a vast concern.

One characteristic of his which must be specially emphasised is that he never lost heart or slackened his efforts, whatever the obstacles and difficulties in his way. He never yielded to pessimism. He was a true Karmayogi, who believed in doing what he thought was his duty without caring for praise or censure. He belonged to that rare type of people who say "What do they say? Let them say".

In the words of Longfellow, he had an extraordinary capacity to "labour and to wait".

One thing which impressed me very much from the beginning was that, unlike many others, Mr. Chitale never put off paying his bills—whether it was printing bills or paper bills or even pay-bills of his employees. This ensured for him extraordinary credit all round besides enabling him to get what he wanted at a cheaper rate.

Mr. Chitale's most striking feature was his absolute indifference to the conventions of society. He was most unconventional in his dress and manners. He also never attached any importance to appearances. To some extent he was like Mr. Churchill, who is reported to have said while he was sitting in his bath-tub in Tehran (where he had gone to attend one of those war-time conferences, which used to take place between the heads of the three super-powers from time to time) when President Roosevelt came and knocked at the door of the bathroom "come in, England has nothing to hide".

The late Mr. Chitale had an extraordinary capacity to come down to the level of the most humble person when talking to him. He never assumed airs and never allowed it to be felt by others that he thought himself to be a rich man.

Mr. Chitale, though extremely calculating in money matters, never stinted spending on objects which he thought would help his business. Though he was shrewd beyond all ordinary men, there were always clever people who could, at times, wangle out of him sizeable amounts of money, on some pretext or other. Mr. Chitale did not seem to very much mind these matters.

Mr. Chitale never believed in ostentatious living. Till a few years before his death he always travelled only in third class. He rarely rode in a car although he could have easily afforded a car. Even a couple of months before his death he could be seen riding in the crowded buses of Bombay and sometimes catching such buses while they were in motion. Mr. S. P. Kotwal, the Chief Justice of Maharashtra, when he came to the A.I.R., openly complimented him on his excellent health at an age when he had passed 84 and mentioned that he walked faster than Mr. Kotwal himself in the Hanging Garden of Bombay.

Mr. Chitale was very regular in his personal habits, in matters like food and other things. His diet was very simple and frugal. He took meals only twice a day. He never took tea or coffee, or pan. He was a pure vegetarian, and never drank or smoked. He enjoyed classical Indian music and used to attend Marathi Dramas. But he never liked cinema shows.

Like Mahatma Gandhi, Mr. Chitale sometimes committed Himalayan blunders, but only persons of Himalayan stature can commit Himalayan blunders and get over their effects without being too much bruised. Mr. Chitale was such a person.

Mr. Chitale was never afraid of admitting his errors, even to his subordinates. But he had his own way of valuing things with which one might not always agree.

Mr. Chitale was a deeply religious man and a staunch believer in Hindu rites and ceremonies which were scrupulously performed under his orders in his house till the end of his life.

Mr. Chitale had his own share of family and personal difficulties but he never allowed them to affect the equanimity of his mind or his work to which he attended unremittingly till his last days. Even when he came to know that he had cancer, he made light of the matter and never allowed it to affect his usual routine of work, reading, business discussions, enquiring minutely into the working of the different departments of the A. I. R. and so on. Truly, he had the stuff of a hero in him. He knew that his end was approaching. But he wanted to finish as much work as possible before death overtook him and ensure that the concern, especially the Editorial and Commentary departments in which he was particularly interested, would work on what he conceived to be the right lines, without any dangerous deviations.

Mr. Chitale had a very keen and alert mind. He was an avid reader of books, newspapers, magazines, and periodicals of all sorts. He was fairly well informed in recent and contemporary world history. My feeling is that he had no special preference for books or periodicals in Marathi which was his mother-tongue nor could I see in him any allergy to English.

I had not much opportunity of knowing his political views, though I know that he was an ardent nationalist. I think he was not for the over-fragmentation of the country or for the attachment of too much importance to linguistic considerations in public administration. He was against anything that would weaken the country.

One of his pastimes was the study of novel and curious positions in law and recording them in note-books. He used to call them "Pocket pistols". One might call them "legal curios".

There was very little of a "doubting Thomas" in Mr. Chitale. If anything, he was too cocksure of things. Lord Palmerston, Prime Minister of England, is reported to have said about Lord Macaulay: "I wish I could be half as sure of one thing as Macaulay is of everything". I used to be reminded of the above words in my contacts with Mr. Chitale.

Mr. Chitale was a born debater and had always the best of the argument in his discussions with his assistants. But this does not mean that his assistants were always convinced as to the soundness of his proposals or policies. They too often found themselves in the unenviable predicament of being neither convinced nor able to convince. As one great man in contemporary India, is said to have told another great man, "Sir, you are able to confuse us but are not able to convince us", Mr. Chitale's capacity of supporting the most untenable conclusions with the cleverest of arguments was astounding and it was impossible to dislodge him from his conclusions or make him change his decisions when once he had made up his mind. But he would always listen to you patiently and hear your arguments but, for what? Just to find fresh arguments with which to support what we, some of his workers thought to be wrong conclusions. But he never felt in the least offended if his proposals were opposed by any of us. There was full freedom of speech in his presence to the least among us.

Mr. Chitale was very hospitable in his house. He was a true "Grihastha" in the Hindu sense of the term and kept open house where his relations and friends were always welcome. He used to feed a number of poor students in his house in the olden days, even at a time when he was just at the beginning of his career and could not be said to be rolling in wealth.

He was an ideal host and on occasions like marriages he used to feed a large number of guests lavishly. He never forgot his friends of his boyhood days or neglected his relations. His wealth and success never went to his head. But he was very sensitive to haughty behaviour by others and sometimes his sensitiveness led him to take decisions which have been turning points in his life.

He was a tireless experimenter—in every field—in dietetics, medicine, etc. He was an ardent believer in Homoeopathy and the Sanjivani system of treatment.

All in all, Mr. Chitale was not only a remarkable man but a great man. If he built up a mighty law-publishing concern, it was not by a mere fluke of good luck, but by the extraordinary qualities of his head and heart, his dogged perseverance, courage, intelligence, resourcefulness and other qualities to which I have already referred. Today, his concern is easily one of the biggest law-publishing concerns in the Commonwealth. I remember that long ago, during the early days of my acquaintance with him, he told me that his ambition was not merely to amass wealth but to build up something that would live after him for the benefit of future generations. Who can say that his was a vain and empty dream? If he was a dreamer of dreams, he was also a hero of action, who knew how to achieve his dreams and transform them into realities. In fact, he was more a man of action than anything else. He was a born strategist and tireless campaigner. In another age he might have fought battles and established a kingdom or even an empire.

A. G. Gardiner in one of his essays once wrote "Wherever Meredith sits there is the throne of English literature". Mr. Chitale had not any paraphernalia to show his position in the A. I. R. Office of which he was the supreme boss. He would be found sitting anywhere in the vast building and doing his work without anything in the furniture or the surroundings to show his supreme position in the concern. I would often quote to him the above sentence from A.G.G. and say "wherever V.V.C. sits, there is the throne of the A. I. R.". Of course, he enjoyed the joke. I also used to cite to him the example of Lord Kitchener, who, like him (I have read somewhere), would not mind even using dealwood furniture. Mr. Chitale used to like the comparison, because by nature he loved simplicity and appreciated it when this trait of his was admired by other people.

Such was the mighty Chitale under whom I had the privilege of serving for more than 45 years. Mr. Chitale was diminutive in size but was mighty in his resolution and will-power, and the iron determination with which he pursued his aims. He was a sort of 'pocket Hercules' as regards his capacity to fight and overcome all sorts of obstacles and difficulties, as it used to be said about the late L. C. M. Amery, Secretary of State for India, with reference to his physical toughness when compared to his size.

Such people are indeed rare. They are also public benefactors, as the institutions that they build up and leave behind them not only perpetuate their memory but benefit mankind.

Mr. Chitale, no doubt, had his faults, but in the words of Mr. M. C. Setalvad, who said when writing about his senior, the late Mr. Bhulabhai Desai that Mr. Desai had his faults, "but who has not his faults?" Mr. Chitale was unquestionably a great man of whom not only his family but also India may be proud.

"Lives of great men all remind us,
We can make our lives sublime,
And departing, leave behind us,
Foot-prints on the sands of time."

—Longfellow.

SPEECH OF THE HON'BLE MR. M. H. BEG, CHIEF JUSTICE OF THE HIGH COURT OF HIMACHAL PRADESH, AT THE FIRST REFERENCE OF THE COURT HELD ON THE 15th MARCH, 1971.

My learned brethren Lal and Thakur, the President and Members of the Bar Association.

2. When I was approached by members of the Bar with a request for holding a Reference not only to mark the assumption of office by my learned brethren, who have taken their seats today for the first time, but also to say something about me, I felt like saying that I was not leaving this Court so soon. I may explain here what a Reference means.

3. "Every High Court", says Article 215 of our Constitution, "shall be a Court of record." This means that the proceedings of the Court are recorded and preserved for future generations to see and to gather such light as they can from the record. The proceedings of the Court, which are to be so recorded and preserved, are all judicial proceedings with one exception. That exception is made when the Court, interrupting its ordinary business, takes notice of something which has occurred and which deserves to be recorded and which is recorded after a reference is made to it. The speeches made at the Reference form a part of the Court's official record. This non-judicial proceeding of the Court, which sits for it formally as a Court, is known as a "Reference".

4. I do not know of any occasion on which a Reference of this kind has been held at the Supreme Court of India. But, the Allahabad High Court, where I had the honour of practising and then holding the office of a Judge before I came here, has had the practice of holding References either when successive Chief Justices and Judges have sat for the first or the last times in Court, or, upon their deaths whether they were in or out of office. A Reference is also held when one of the leaders of the Bar has expired. References have also been held at Allahabad when a dignitary of State of nationwide importance, such as a President or a Prime Minister of India, has died while in office. A Reference was also held in that Court when Mahatma Gandhi, the father of our Nation, who was not only a great advocate but a moral giant, utterly dedicated to the causes of justice and truth, was killed. On such occasions, the Court is closed after a Reference. A Reference occasioned by the death of a sitting Judge or a leader of the Bar has also not infrequently necessitated a rising of the Court after the Reference, partly as a mark of respect and partly to enable the members of the Bench and Bar to join the funeral.

5. Now, with a High Court as large as the Allahabad High Court, with about 40 sitting Judges, a number of retired Judges, and a large number of leaders of the Bar, References at appointments, retirements, and transfers of Judges or deaths of Judges and ex-Judges and leaders of the Bar, threatened to become too frequent and time-consuming occurrences which a High Court like the Allahabad High Court, with its mounting arrears of work, could ill afford. Therefore, successive Chief Justices of the Allahabad High Court, particularly Chief Justice Nasirullah Beg, tried to do away with References altogether but only succeeded in curtailing them. In that Court, when a Judge is appointed, a short Reference is held before the commencement of the day's work, and, when he retires, it is held at the end of the day's work. It is generally held before a Division Bench only and not before the Full Court. The presiding senior Judge or the Chief Justice speaks first on behalf of brother Judges and himself. Representatives of the Bar, beginning with the Advocate-General, speak next. The Reference is closed after a reply by the recipient of it. At a Reference on the death of a leader of the Bar, the first speech is from the Bar followed by the closing speech from the Bench. Full Court References are now reserved, at the Allahabad High Court, for very special occasions. I am glad to inform you that when I had to leave the Allahabad High Court to come here as the Chief Justice of this Court, that Court honoured me, and, through me, this Court also, with a Full Court Reference.

6. Today, we are holding a Full Court Reference because it is a special occasion. Not only have my learned brethren taken their seats for the first time today, but we are also marking, by holding this Reference, the completion of the constitution of this Court as provided by Article 216 of our Constitution. Coming as I do from the Bar and from a High Court where there is a practice of holding References of this kind, it was not possible for me to refuse the request of the Bar of this Court for a Full Court Reference on such an occasion.

7. As this is the first Reference in this Court, I have tried to explain and describe References and mention their drawbacks. Before I indicate what can be said for adopting the practice of holding References on suitable and exceptional occasions, I will also mention what has been considered by some to be another objection to the practice. A Reference on an appointment or on a retirement or transfer of a Judge is only held if the Bar, through its representatives, makes a request for it to the Chief Justice, or, in his absence, to the seniormost Judge of the Court present. The right to make such a request is one of the privileges of the Bar. The request is almost invariably granted, although some adjustment about the time to be given to the Reference, and whether it is to be a Full Court Reference or a Reference before a Division Bench only, is arrived at after discussion between representatives of the Bar and the Chief Justice, or the seniormost Judge, as the case may be, in Chambers. The Bar is generally represented by the Advocate-General and the President of the Advocates' Association at such a discussion. At Allahabad, the Bar had made it a practice to ask for References only on appointments of Judges from the Bar. Again, there have been occasions on which the Bar has not asked for a Reference on the retirement of a particular Chief Justice or Judge. Hence, some Judges have felt that the practice of holding References was capable of being used for the purpose of making invidious distinctions. However, in 1963, when I was appointed a Judge with another member of the Bar and two members of the Judicial Service, we were all sworn as Judges, at the same sitting in open Court, and a Reference was held for all four of us together. I am glad that the practice of making invidious distinctions, which has been broken only recently at the Allahabad High Court, has not commended itself to the members of the Himachal Pradesh Bar. I am happy, Mr. President and other members of the Bar, that you have started with a healthier and better precedent by requesting me for a Reference even though my brother Judges happen to have come to this Court through channels other than practice at the Bar. You have thereby shown your generosity and capacity to rise above narrow professional prejudices and vanities and to pay a tribute to worth and merit wherever it may be found. In doing so, you have conformed to the highest traditions of the Bar. These traditions, I may remind you, are the common heritage of both the Bench and the Bar. They serve the cause of a Justice which is unhampered by any fear except of that which is wrong, which is not deflected by any affection or ill-will, and which serves as the measure of the moral stature of a Society or State in which it is administered. It has been said that it is the degree to which Justice as defined by law, is actually realized in its administration, both as between one private citizen and another and as between private citizens and members of the Government, which provides the truest test of "a nation's rank in political civilization". I am confident that members of the Bench and the Bar of this Court will spare no effort in doing all they can to maintain the highest standards of administration of justice in the newly born State of Himachal Pradesh.

8. I am reminded here of a statement which I prepared for my own edification at the first Reference I had the honour to receive on my appointment as a Judge of the Allahabad High Court on 11-6-1963. I then said what I may repeat here:

"The first and foremost qualification of a Judge is the possession of a very sharp and exacting conscience. And, I know of no process which sharpens one's conscience more than the life of a practising lawyer utterly devoted to the task of procuring justice for his clients by all fair and legitimate means in a manner befitting the 'honest lawyer' depicted in Lord Denning's 'Road to Justice'.

A sharp conscience or a desire to see 'justice done even though the heavens fall' can, like other valuable qualities, be perverted and become a menace unless it is guided by a broad, balanced, and generous philosophy of life rising above narrow prejudices, bigotries, idiosyncrasies, obsessions, complexes, phobias and mental cobwebs of every kind. Therefore, the second essential requirement of one who aspires to be a Judge is a liberal philosophy of life sustained by a constant endeavour to study and understand, with a detached objectivity, what is right and what is wrong in every department of human life—whether legal, economic, political, moral or social. Without a correct philosophy of life, a Judge's appraisal of facts is apt to be lopsided and he runs the risk of earning epithets such as 'pro-capitalist', 'pro-labour', 'pro-husband', 'pro-wife', 'pro-prosecution', 'pro-accused'.

It is true that Judges are human and are bound to disclose certain predilections while performing their judicial functions. But, the direction in which these predispositions of a Judge should manifest themselves is indicated for us by the Constitution of our Secular Democratic State which we have sworn today to uphold and enforce without fear or favour. Underlying that Constitution is an egalitarian philosophy which makes no distinction between man and man on grounds of caste, creed, class, colour, race, birth, position, power, wealth, influence, or for any other similar reason. Our Judges are the specially constituted custodians of what may be called the 'religion'—from 'religio' meaning a 'binding together'—of the Secular Democratic State which promises justice to all without discrimination.

Thirdly quite apart from the liberal philosophy and outlook, which are expected to result from what has been described as a liberal education, a Judge must possess a firm grasp and a full understanding of the basic principles which regulate the system of law he has to administer. Without such a grasp and understanding, undigested erudition, instead of 'clearing thickets' (which is what learning should do according to Judge Learned Hand), can mislead a Judge with even so brilliant a mind as that of the late Mr. Justice Mahmood. Those who do not possess the required knowledge and understanding should remember the advice of Alexander Pope who said:

'Little learning is a dangerous thing;

Drink deep or taste not the Pierian spring.'

I have deliberately mentioned the need for a 'full understanding' in addition to a 'firm grasp' of principles underlying the set of laws a Judge administers because I believe that one cannot adequately comprehend one's own system of law unless one studies and knows enough about other systems too so as to be able to compare them with one's own. The greatness of the Roman lawyers and jurists was due to the fact that they studied and understood not only their own 'jus civile', but, they also scientifically analysed the laws of all the other peoples of the world with whom they came into contact, and, they deliberately evolved a host of common or universal principles or a 'jus gentium' with the help of which they progressively broadened, changed, improved, rationalised, secularised, and liberalised their own laws known as the 'jus civile'.

Judges can never forget that they are not legislators. But, at the same time, they should remember what Edmund Burke once observed:

"The law sharpens the mind by narrowing it; but, in a few of our great Judges law has lifted the mind to a level of comprehension and has kindled a degree of human ardour unsurpassed in any other profession."

Judges, theoretically, do not legislate when they find a meaning, as they usually can, sometimes 'within the interstices of the statute', which brings out the true purpose and object of law or when they fill up a gap in existing law. The particular selection made, out of the several alternative interpretations or principles of law between which Judges have often to choose, makes the world of difference there is between making law the preserver of justice, which it should be, and the destroyer of justice, which is not its true function.

Fourthly, I would like to point out—particularly in view of the problem of arrears in our law Courts—that, as Judges, we should try to develop and practise and master a science and an art of adjudication as separate and specialised fields of our endeavours so that justice is speedily and smoothly administered, and, at the same time, does not fail 'to appear to be done'.

In ancient India, special attention was paid to perfecting the technique of doing justice, and sets of simple rules and directions were framed with this end in view. One such rule was that the Judge should maintain a smiling countenance even in the face of the worst criminal.

Last but not the least, requirement from a Judge is that he must possess a temperament which enables him to view, with a crystal clear clarity of mind and an unruffled disposition, the essential features of a case before him, without being distracted by the irrelevant, the unessential, and the disturbing factors which he has to encounter sometimes during the performance of his duties."

9. I have read out this passage so as to illustrate what could, I think, be the utility of the practice of holding References on appropriate occasions. A Reference could and should, I think, be a method of holding up before ourselves certain standards to which we, who participate in the processes of rendering justice, whether as Judges or as advocates, ought to conform. It could also serve as a means of expressing our appreciation, where this may be due, of individual attainments and worths of those whom we choose to honour, at a Reference, so that the recorded story of these achievements is woven into a rich and glorious fabric of tradition at which the Bench and the Bar of a Court could look back with pride. If, however, References, are to serve this serious and valuable purpose, they should not, I venture to suggest, degenerate into merely mechanical repetitions of set formulae eulogising, in almost exactly the same general terms, the wonderful qualities of 'the head and heart' of the recipients of the honour. I have mentioned 'the head and the heart' because I recall, with possibly some uncharitable amusement, this pet expression which was invariably used by a quite lovable and certainly very loving old member of the Allahabad Bar who used to speak at every Reference at a time when there were three associations of the Bar — the Bar Library, the Advocates' Association, and the Bar Association — at the Allahabad High Court, and a representative of each of these three bodies, in addition to counsel for the State, had to speak. Whenever I heard about the qualities of his Lordship's 'head and heart' I wondered why there should be a prejudice against mentioning other parts of the human anatomy, such as their Lordships' livers or painful backs, which, according to judicial humorists, like Mr. A. P. Herbert and Mr. Henry Cecil, have also played their parts, although they never should, in the judicial process.

10. I may, while I am still on the subject of References, mention that the little homily to myself, which I have quoted above, was criticised by a very senior Judge of the Allahabad High Court when he told me that, although I had purported to deliver it to myself, it looked very much like a lecture from a newly appointed Judge to his more senior brethren. My learned brother thought that it was more appropriate for a junior Judge, coming from the Bar, to give some advice to his erstwhile colleagues at the Bar on such an occasion. I confess that, in my mind, the distinctions between senior and junior Judges and between Judges and advocates have always tended to be rather blurred and hazy. I have, in particular, been inclined to view the distinction between the Judge and the advocate as one between functions of different participants in the same process rather than one of approach, method, or of vocation which is that of administering law, in a spirit of dedication to Justice, whether we decide or argue cases. I have thought that, although it is the function of an advocate to state his client's case, an advocate is able to approach and put his client's case objectively as a Judge would as strongly as possible, that function is more effectively performed where he does it, that is to say, after fully appreciating the strength of the arguments against it, by meeting the case against his client by cool invincible logic, where this is possible, and by fair and speedy concessions where these are obviously unavoidable. Such an approach creates a very favourable impression on a Court and wins its respect and esteem. And, I have considered it to be a part of the qualities of a good Judge to be able to see and even to argue with himself both sides of a case, before reaching a conclusion, even where the advocates for one side or for both sides are not able to put the cases of their clients sufficiently well.

11. I have now very great pleasure in welcoming, as members of this Court, my brothers Lal and Thakur whose backgrounds and special qualifications for holding the very High office which the President of our Republic has been graciously pleased to confer upon them will soon be detailed by Mr. R. S. Phul, the President of the Bar Association, who was good enough to send me an advance copy of the speech he is going to make on this occasion. It is for these very qualities, about which you will soon hear, that I picked my learned brethren to help me in the arduous tasks ahead of me. I did not know them at all personally before I came here as a Chief Justice. But, I can say that their shining records, with which I soon acquainted myself, left no doubt in my mind that my learned brethren should be the first two choices if your aspirations for a model High Court of Himachal Pradesh were to be fulfilled. I will call upon Mr. Phul, the President of the Bar Association, now to give us his speech before calling upon my learned brethren to reply and then thanking you very briefly myself at the end.

LAW RELATING TO ENTRY INTO AND EXIT FROM INDIA. By B. R. Agarwala, M.A., LL.B., Advocate. With a Foreword by Mr. K. Subba Rao, former Chief Justice of India. 1st Edition, 1970. Metropolitan Book Co. (Private) Ltd., Delhi 6. Pp. xxvi & 324, Price Rs. 25.

For a long time it was the practice to issue passports according to administrative regulations, through proper procedures and through passport officers; there was provision for appeal, control and supervision. In 1967, however, in the case of Satwant Singh Sawhney v. Union of India, with which the author of the present publication was closely associated, the Supreme Court held that every citizen of India had the fundamental right to get a passport. The judgment was based on Article 21 of the Constitution which says: "No person shall be deprived of his life or personal liberty except according to procedure established by law," but the Supreme Court decided that there was to be no laying down of restrictions on the issue of passports, and the denial of a passport was, therefore, a violation of Article 21. In this view the right to travel abroad and to return to India becomes an aspect of personal liberty enshrined in the above Article, and freedom of movement inside and outside the country becomes an integral part of that liberty. The arbitrary discretion of the executive in the matter of issuing or refusing passports was in consequence a violation of Article 14 of the Constitution.

2. The foregoing decision led to the passing of the Passports Act, 1967 (27 sections) which, with commentary and synopsis, forms the main theme of the present book (Part D. The other four Parts contain the Passport Rules 1967, Passports (Entry into India) Act, 1920, with commentary, and the Passport (Entry into India) Rules, 1950, as well as all the relevant Acts, rules, notifications and other general information about passports and the procedure prescribed for obtaining passports, for securing foreign exchange, for avoiding the infringement of rules and incurring punishment, which the reader will find in the Appendices (Part V). All Acts and Orders regulating the entry and stay of foreigners in India have also been incorporated. Reference should be made to the table of cases and index.

3. A compilation of all the relevant laws on the subject, with clear commentaries on their provisions, the book under notice is said to be the first of its kind to furnish the necessary information for persons going out from and coming into India. Practising lawyers should find the commentary and case law highly useful, for the author has pointed out both the merits and defects, and made suggestions for improvement. It should be a book of ready reference for judge, lawyer, officer, and citizen alike. R.S.S.

PROMISSORY NOTES (Law, Practice and Procedure). By Gentla Satyanarayana Guptha, Advocate. Andhra Law Times, Balaji Sadan, Hyderabad 36. 1970. Pp. 257, Price, Rs. 12.

The work under review, perhaps the first of its kind, meets the need for an exclusive account of the law of promissory notes. Most of the provisions regarding promissory notes are contained in the Negotiable Instruments Act, although there are several other Acts which have a bearing on them. The Negotiable Instruments Act deals with a particular form of contract and the law laid down for special cases prevails over the provisions of a general character. Strictly speaking, it is a branch of the law of contract, with some special provisions in it. The object of the Act is to legalise the system under which negotiable instruments pass from hand to hand like ordinary goods. As far as possible the Indian legislature has followed the English law; in fact, it often reproduces the principles of the English law as enunciated in English decisions and English text books.

2. A 'promissory note' is an instrument in writing (other than bank-note or currency note) containing an unconditional undertaking, signed by the maker, to pay a certain sum of money only to, or to the order of, a certain person or to the bearer of the instrument. It may be discharged by cancellation, release, payment, operation of law (being time-barred by Limitation Act) or insolvency of the debtor. Any material alteration in it will invalidate the instrument against all parties not consenting to it, and its transfer can be negotiated by means of endorsement and delivery. Where a written document like a promissory note exists, it is produced in a Court as being the evidence of its own evidence. If a promissory note is executed by the managing member of a Hindu joint family for the benefit of the family, it is not open to the other members to plead that they are not liable. If the defendant in a suit for the execution of a promissory note pleads that he has not executed the instrument and that the writing, signature, or thumb impression is not his, the burden of proof is on the party who relies on the instrument; in such a case the evidence of the scribe who wrote it, or of the attestors, is admissible. In the last resort it is the expert who has to give his opinion on the genuineness of the writing in dispute.

3. Of the twenty-five Chapters in the present book, each preceded by a synopsis and illustrations, three deal with the holder of a pronote, consideration, and construction and details of the document, and six Chapters cover the position in law of a pronote, in relation to agency, partnership firm, minor, legal representative, and surety. The other Chapters consider presentment of pronote, interest on it, the pronote in relation to the Succession Act, Stamp Act and Limitation Act, place of suing and pleadings.

4. A special feature of the book is the inclusion of corresponding provisions of other allied laws, both procedural and substantive, which have a bearing on the subject of pronotes. All aspects of the law, procedure and practice, relating to pronotes, have been covered, and the latest case law is given. The appendix gives the texts of the Hyderabad Money-lenders Act and the Negotiable Instruments Act and model Forms. The book should be a useful addition to the library of a judge, lawyer, or law school. R.S.S.

HOMICIDE. By S. K. Ghosh, Formerly Inspector-General of Police, Orissa. Eastern Law House, Calcutta. 2nd Edition. 1970. Pp. xvi & 189. Price Rs. 12.

Homicide may be culpable, or not culpable. Every case of culpable homicide is not murder, but every case of murder is one of culpable homicide. The present comprehensive book discusses the different problems that are met with in the investigation and trial of a case of homicide and gives up-to-date decisions of the Supreme Court and the different High Courts, selected with care and discrimination. Since the appearance of the first edition, far-reaching amendments to the Code of Criminal Procedure (many of them believed to be still on the anvil) and the Indian Penal Code have added considerably to the volume of case law. The book has gone through very careful revision in the present edition, which includes two new Chapters, "Death due to rash or negligent driving" and "the Art of Interrogation."

2. There are thirty sections in the book, ten of them dealing with deaths due to wounds caused by blunt weapons, cutting and stabbing wounds, gunshot wounds, poisoning, asphyxia, criminal abortion, rash driving, sexual assault, and infanticide (See Text-Book of Medical Jurisprudence, C. K. Parikh, 1970). Ten sections cover abetment of murder, attempt and conspiracy to murder, joint liability, motive, bail, identification, provocation, right of private defence, search for and examination of blood and semen. The author examines the position of approvers and accomplices, when pardon can be tendered, when it can be forfeited, approver's evidence, and the magistrates empowered to tender pardon. The general considerations of investigation, statements to the Police and magistrates during investigation, and the art of interrogation are considered in three sections. They dwell on the first information report, examination of the scene, identification of body, post-mortem examination, determining the murderer, arresting the suspect, and examination of witnesses. One section is concerned with the examination of witnesses by Police and the use of their statements in evidence, diary of proceedings in investigation, power to record statements and confessions, and enquiries into suicides. The remaining sections are devoted to the general considerations of evidence, circumstantial evidence, and the admissibility as evidence of dying declarations, admissions and confessions, and expert evidence, which last includes the medical expert, handwriting expert, fingerprint expert, foot-print expert, coin expert, firearms and explosives expert, motor-vehicle expert and chemical examiner. One way of thinking would make confessions made to a police officer admissible in evidence as well as include type-script in documentary evidence.

3. The book under review embraces a formidable range of subjects within a small compass, and its utility has been greatly enhanced by the author's practical experience in investigation. Although primarily designed for the use of police officers, who are taught not only the path they are to follow but also the pitfalls they have to avoid, it should be found useful as a guide also by the magistrate. The author's other works "Crime on the Increase", "Lawbreakers and Keepers of Peace", and "Law of Preventive Detention in India" have already been noticed.

4. There is an index but no table of cases. R.S.S.

CONTRACTS OF EMPLOYMENT. By N. C. Lahiri, Advocate, High Court, Allahabad. With a foreword by Mr. Justice P. B. Mukharji, Chief Justice, Calcutta High Court. Eastern Law House Private Ltd., 54, Ganesh Chunder Avenue, Calcutta 13. 1st Edition, 1970. Pp. xxxi & 393. Price Rs. 20.

Special contracts have generally appeared as contracts of insurance, bills of lading, bills of exchange, or contracts of carriage, or building and town planning leases. The contract of employment of Government Servants and employees of public undertakings and corporations is however an area that has been somewhat little explored, and the present publi cation seeks to outline some of the principal problems arising out of it, including within its purview also employment under industrial organisations and mercantile firms.

2. After an introductory chapter the author proceeds to discuss the legal position and status of Government servants, and the public corporations and their employees. He finds that the Civil Service in England enjoys more security than in India, where it enjoys only the procedural protection embodied in the Constitution against wrongful dismissals. The Supreme Court has held that the relationship between the Government and its servants is not like an ordinary contract of service; the duties or status are exclusively determined by law and not by agreement between the parties concerned. Similarly, the employees of public Corporations do not hold any 'civil post' either under the Union or the 'State' and therefore cannot seek a constitutional guarantee under Article 311 of the Constitution.

3. Three chapters deal with the conditions of service, the legal character and incidents of disciplinary proceedings, and powers of removal, dismissal and compulsory retirement. Probation and confirmation, seniority and promotion, their justiciability, transfer, resignation, and retirement, are discussed, after which the author examines the procedure prescribed when an employer, including the Government, initiates disciplinary proceedings on account of misconduct or delinquency. In this last mentioned capacity the employer acts as an administrative agency and is called a 'domestic tribunal', the proceedings of which are quasi-judicial. It has to act according to law and must follow, in the absence of statutory provisions, the rules of natural justice, and its decisions or administrative actions are subject to Judicial Review, which is the title of a separate chapter; it includes a discussion of Article 311 (2) of the Indian Constitution. The last chapter examines in brief the nature of the Standing Orders in industrial establishments, their legal aspects and evidentiary value.

4. The Appendices, which account for more than half the book, are exhaustive. They include the relevant portions from the Constitution of India, the All India Services Act, 1951, and the Rules and Regulations (about 30 in number) of the All India Services, Central Services, and the Indian Administrative, Police and Forest Services. Several prescribed Forms, the table of cases, and index complete the usefulness of the volume.

5. There is no lack of case law in the book. The essential principles of important decisions are extracted and expounded with clarity to explain the relevant law and the Forms of these special contracts of employment; the nature of the impact of the constitutional provisions on these special contracts has also been clearly brought out. The book throws a flood of light on the specialised aspects of administrative law on the topics discussed, and explains the constitutional background of this branch of law in India. It should be highly useful to members of the Bench and Bar as well as to law students and research workers.

CITIZENSHIP OF INDIA. (Dual Nationality and the Constitution). By Meher K. Master, M. A., (Oxon), LL. M. (Michigan). Eastern Law House, Calcutta. 1st Edition. 1970. Pp. xvi and 332. Price Rs. 20.

Published under the auspices of the Institute of Constitutional and Parliamentary Studies, New Delhi, the present work makes a cogent plea, on behalf of Indians abroad generally and Indians of East Africa in particular, for the recognition of dual nationality in the Indian Constitution. At bottom citizenship is a matter for legislation, and nationality, one of birth or origin. Where the two converge there is no trouble; else, the situation of the migrant populations becomes precarious, as in some of the newly independent countries, and the author attempts an elaborate analysis of their problems.

2. When India attained independence in 1947, many of Indian origin in East Africa were British subjects by birth under the existing British Nationality Acts. Many of them were conferred the status of citizen of India under the Indian Constitution in 1950, in which year the British Government threw open the citizenship of U. K. and the Colonies to all persons in East Africa falling within the ambit of the British Nationality Act, 1948. Neither the U. K. Government nor the Indian Government at the time thought dual citizenship was wrong or illegal. In 1955, however, the Indian Citizenship Act was passed, by S. 9 of which they were deprived of their Indian Citizenship. At the time the new East African nations gained independence they gave the option to the Indians either to retain their U. K. Citizenship or to acquire the citizenship of the nation. At the same time, faced with economic pressure, the U. K. Government passed the Commonwealth Immigrants Act, 1968, which prevented these Indians, who are British subjects, from entering and settling in the U. K. Those of Indian origin who are British subjects were therefore rendered homeless, and S. 9 of the Indian Citizenship Act, 1955 calls for immediate repeal.

3. Five out of the ten Parts, into which the book is divided, deal with the British Nationality Act, the Constitution of India, Citizenship under the Indian Constitution prior to the enactment of the Citizenship Act 1955, Commonwealth citizenship, and laws of Commonwealth and other countries permitting dual nationality, and four cover the Citizenship Act 1955, S. 9 of the Act, loss of citizenship and dual nationality and passports. Applying the test of fundamental rights to S. 9 of the Citizenship Act, it would appear that that Section and the rules framed under it are unconstitutional, because they violate those rights. The writer has shown that both under the Indian Constitution and the Citizenship Act, 1955 dual citizenship is permitted in some cases and not in others, with the result that certain classes of citizens have dual citizenship, certain citizens are permitted to have it, and certain others do not enjoy it at all. While U. K. and other countries, recognise dual nationality and citizenship; it is up to India, urges the author, to emulate them.

4. Nearly two-thirds of the book is taken up with the Appendices, which include the passport rules and ordinances, the registration of foreigners rules, Act and orders, and the Citizenship Act and Rules, followed by a subject index. Fortright in criticism, humane in sympathies, and eloquent in advocacy, says the General Editor, True. Intended for lawyers and legislators, it should interest the layman also. R.S.S.

PRINCIPLES AND PRACTICE OF VALUATIONS (Land and Houses).

By John A. Parks, F. S. I., Chartered Surveyor. 4th Edition, 1970, by B. P. Chatterjee, Formerly Government Advocate, Calcutta Improvement Tribunal. Eastern Law House, Ganesh Chunder Avenue, Calcutta 13. Pp. xi & 319. Price Rs. 25.

In the present publication the principles and application of making a valuation of land and buildings are set out in a simple manner. The latest edition contains more decisions showing the approach of the Supreme Court and High Courts regarding the valuation of lands under the Land Acquisition Act and other allied Acts, and brings the case law up-to-date. When the book was in the press, the Supreme Court in State of Gujarat v. Shantilal (AIR 1969 S C 634) overruled its own decision in Union of India v. Metal Corporation of India Ltd. (AIR 1967 S C 637). Regarding the valuation of machinery under the Acquisition of Undertakings Act, 1965 in the latter decision the Supreme Court had held that the worth of an article depends, apart from all other considerations, upon the market conditions at the time of acquisition. The Act under reference was thought to violate Article 31 (2) of the Indian Constitution.

2. After explaining the theories of value, market value and rent in the first chapter, the author discusses ground rent, residential property, shops and business premises, godowns and warehouses, and industrial properties. The most common way, it is said, of supporting a valuation is to give evidence of sales of similarly situated properties in the same area. The rental method of valuation is dealt with under the heads of gross rent, deductions from gross rent, and year's purchase or security. Where the land is not developed by buildings, the rental method of valuation is ruled out, and a new method is followed by which to the market value of the land is added the value of the buildings, the value of the land depending on situation, size, shape, frontage and depth, return frontages, width of roadways, vistas, and nature of soil and tanks. It is sometimes possible to estimate the value of one plot of land fairly accurately in comparison with another plot of known value by what is called the 'Belting Method'. For the valuation of leasehold interests of the lessor and the lessee regarding property subject to a lease, there are certain points which have to be carefully ascertained and on which the author dwells at length. When a valuer has to value a property which is subject to the life interest of a person, he should have a good grasp of Mortality Tables, Expectation of Life Tables, and Year's purchase for Life Tables. The valuation of lands subject to restrictions as to user covers lands subject to resumption by Government without compensation, common passage, strip of land, and unauthorised structures. The last chapter, on valuations for various purposes and under different statutes, embraces valuation for mortgage purposes and auction reserve and under the Land Acquisition Act. Two of the chapters consider hypothetical building schemes and valuation of building estates, and valuation of easements, which are a right to receive a reasonable amount of light across another owner's property.

3. Bengal Land Measure, Valuation Tables, the Land Act 1894, the Calcutta Improvement Trust Act, the Calcutta Municipal Act, the Acquisition of Immovable Property Act and Defence of India Act, 1962, along with the index, go to make the concluding part of the book. The book deals with a number of matters not so far discussed, and includes a table of cases.

4. It should be eminently useful to students, valuers, pleaders, advocates, and others concerned with valuation matters. R.S.S.

THEORY OF BLENDING AND AN EMPTY H. U. F. HOTCHPOT

(By Shri V. SETURAMAN, Member of the Income-tax Tribunal, Calcutta.)

The problem for discussion is the familiar one under Hindu Law which goes by various names, blending, throwing into common stock and throwing into the hotchpot. The question that has recently cropped up is; can there be blending where the HUF has an empty hotchpot, i.e., where the HUF has no property at all? In other words, can you blend separate property with nothing? One in a hurry may refer to the last para for the proposed answer.

2. In two recent pronouncements of the Supreme Court where though the problem did not directly arise, there are observations which create a doubt on this point. The first case is reported as Mallesappa Bandeppa Desai v. Desai Mellappa (1961) 3 S C R 779=1962-2 S C J 589. In that case there were certain properties obtained by one Channma by succession to her father. She had married one Ramappa. After his death, his grandsons by one son filed a suit against another son of his (uncle of the plaintiffs) for division of the said properties, among others, on the ground that they were joint family properties by virtue of blending. The defendant uncle (son of Ramappa) resisted the claim by contending that they were not joint family properties. The trial court upheld the plea of blending. The Madras High Court on appeal rejected that plea. The matter went on appeal to the Supreme Court.

3. In the judgment of the Supreme Court, the problem has been approached from two angles. They are (1) whether the doctrine of blending applied to properties held by a Hindu female as a limited owner and (2) whether the plea of blending was made out on the facts.

4. It was pointed out by Gajendragadkar J. as he then was, that the doctrine of blending is not based on any texts. We shall revert to this aspect a little later. His Lordship observed at page 593 of 1962-2 S C J as follows :—

"The rule of blending postulates that a coparcener who is interested in the coparcenary property and who owns separate property of his own may by deliberate and intentional conduct treat his separate property as forming part of the coparcenary property; in other words, the separate property of a coparcener, loses its separate character by reason of the owner's conduct and gets thrown into the common stock of which it becomes a part. This doctrine, therefore, inevitably postulates that the owner of the separate property is a coparcener, who has an interest in the coparcenary property and desires to blend his separate property with the coparcenary property A mere intention to benefit the members of the family by allowing them the use of the income coming from the said property may not necessarily be enough to justify an inference of blending; but the basis of the doctrine is the existence of coparcenary and coparcenary property as well as the existence of the separate property of a coparcener" (underlined (here in italics) by us).

It is not necessary for our purpose to go into the conclusion about blending on the facts of that case.

5. In a more recent case (1970) 76 I T R 675, Goli Easwariah v. Commr. of Gift-tax, the question was whether the throwing into common stock or blending would amount to a gift for purposes of levy of gift-tax under the Gift Tax Act, 1958. It was held that there was no gift as there was neither a donor nor a donee. After referring to Mallesappa's case and to the principle that a coparcener alone could blend his separate property, the following passage occurs at page 678 :

"the doctrine of throwing into the common stock inevitably postulates that the owner of separate property is a coparcener who has an interest in the coparcenary property and desires to blend his separate property with the coparcenary property." (emphasis supplied.)

6. At this stage it is enough to mention that in neither of these two cases was there any scope for the contention that there could be no blending when the hotchpot was empty. In the first case (Mallesappa's) there were quite a few items of properties other than the ones which were the subject of the plea of blending. In the gift tax case also, there is nothing to show that the family was otherwise impecunious. It is submitted that these two decisions should not be taken as laying down the proposition that there could be no blending where there is no other coparcenary property, as the problem did not arise for decision there.

7. Having regard to the above observations of the S. C., it would be proper to examine the development of the law regarding blending in so far as it has a bearing on the point under discussion. It has been pointed out by Gajendragadkar J. in Mallesappa's case that in Shiba Prasad Singh v Prayag Kumari Debi, L R 69 I A. 331 the Privy Council had wrongly proceeded on the basis that there was authority to be found for blending in the following text of Yajnavalkya :—

सामान्यर्थे समुत्थाने

विभागस्तु समः स्मृतः ।

(Where there is increase of the common property, partition is equal). (Nirnaya Sagar Press Edn. 1949, p. 226).

8. Vijnaneswara's commentary on this passage runs as follows :

अविभक्तानां भ्रातॄणां सामान्यर्थस्य

कृषिवाणिज्यादिना संभूय समुत्थाने सम्यग्वर्धने

केनचित्कृते सम एव विभागः नार्जयितुं शक्यः । (ibid)

(Among the undivided brothers, if the common property is improved by cultivation, commerce or other means by any one of them, the division is equal and the acquirer does not get a double share).

9. This passage follows after Vijnaneswara noticed another extract from Vasishtha which runs as follows :—

येन चैषां स्वयमुपाजितं स्यात्

सः इच्छमेव लभेत। (sic)

(When there is a self-acquisition, then the acquirer gets a double share).

This passage would show that even self-acquired property had to be divided, subject to the acquirer having a double share. After referring to the dictum of Vasishtha, Vijnaneswara starts the rule “सामान्यं समुत्पत्तये” given earlier here (para 7) with these introductory words “अस्यापवादमात्” showing that the rule set out from Yajna Valkya in para. 7 above is an exception (to the dictum of Vasishtha). To build a theory of blending, out of the words last given above, read along with the Commentary of Vijnaneswara extracted earlier here, appears to be clearly far-fetched.

10. Thus, we have to look further backwards and see how far the rules regarding blending are traceable to Sastraic law. Let us briefly trace the point regarding the rights of the sons to the father's property during his lifetime. The word “Daya” occurs in Aitareya Brahmana. Dr. R. B. Pal in his History of Hindu Law, (Tagore Law Lecture of 1930) at Page 337 has referred to “daya” as occurring in Rigveda (x, 10,114). But the word found there is मागधेय and has no connection with any succession to property. Sayana gives the meaning thereof as “(देवाः) स्वस्वमां हविः धादयन्ति” (sic) (The Gods take their respective share). This has nothing to do with secular property. The concept of the family as such owning the property does not appear to be so well-known or at any rate not referred to in the Vedas. There are, however, some stories which appear to throw some light on this topic.

11. We may first see a story of Nabhanedishta, a son of Manu, which occurs in three places, viz., (a) the Aitareya Brahmana (part of the Rigveda), (b) in the Samhita portion of the same Veda (x.5.61) and (c) Yajurveda Samhita (3.1.29 at seq. 9th Anvaka). The story is a simple one. Nabhanedishta (hereafter referred to as N for brevity) was pursuing his studies when his father Manu divided his property among his sons other than N. It appears from the context that Manu did not keep a share even for himself.

On return from his studies, N asked his brothers for his share. They referred him to Manu, who said that he had not deprived him of his share and who then, indicated to him the means to get property.

12. Manu told him about one Angirasa performing a sacrifice for ascending to heaven. The persons participating in the sacrifice could not make progress beyond the fifth day thereof and were thus getting frustrated in their attempts to ascend to heaven. Manu told N that he could chant a Brahmana (mantras) by which they could ascend to heaven.

13. Accordingly N went to the place of the sacrifice and asked them to accept him so that he would remind them about the mantras and that he would get the sacrifice fruitfully completed. He was accepted in the sacrifice. It was completed with the mantras chanted by him, and he got as gift from Angirasa a thousand cows (and perhaps other wealth also left over on the sacrificial ground).

14. N was about to return home with his wealth when Rudra appeared and said that whatever was on the sacrificial ground when the sacrifice was over belonged to him. N claimed that all of them had been gifted to him by Angirasa before he ascended to the heaven on the performance of the sacrifice. Rudra said that he would abide by Manu's decision on the dispute.

15. On N's return, Manu asked him whether he got the wealth. N said all about the completion of the sacrifice and Rudra's dispute over what was given to him by Angirasa. Manu agreed that Rudra's claim was justified. N came back to Rudra and reported that his claim was held to be justified by Manu, his father. He thus gave up his claim to the cows, etc. Appreciating N's truthfulness Rudra allowed him to have the cows, etc., given by Angirasa. The story given here is mainly as found in Aitareya Brahmana with some details supplied from the other places referred to already.

16. The relevance of this story to the point under discussion is that this shows that Manu could divide the wealth he had among his sons, leaving out one of them (N) from the division and that N could keep all his acquisition made in the manner given above to himself.

17. There is another story in Yajurveda about Prajapathi saving his son Indra from destruction by a foe set up by a sage called Tvashtra whose son had been killed by Indra (see Yajurveda Kanda 2, Prasna 5). At the end of the story it is said “जेष्टं पुत्रं निखसाययन्ति” (sic).

“People distinguish their eldest son with heritage”.

18. The story of Sunahsepa occurs in the Aitareya. Brahmana of the Rig Veda. Harischandra was issueless. He got a son Rohita by the grace of Varuna. He had undertaken at the time of getting the boon from Varuna to sacrifice the son, but would not do so after the son was born. He was going on postponing the event. When Rohita came to know of his father's promise, he left for the forest with a bow. He heard that his father was afflicted with a stomach ailment. When he was returning home, Indra asked him to do a pilgrimage. Five times he tried to return home to see his father and every time Indra managed to send him back. When he went into the forest for the sixteenth time, he saw a sage called Ajigartha who had three sons. Rohita wanted him to sell the first son. He got by purchase Sunahsepa the second son, brought him to his father and told him that he could now do the sacrifice. Harischandra was cured of his disease and he started the sacrifice. Viswamitra acted as the priest therein. When Sunahsepa found that he was going to be sacrificed, he began to pray to Indra. Indra was pleased and Sunahsepa was released from the bonds that bound him to the sacrificial pole. Then Sunahsepa ascended the lap of Viswamitra who was acting as the priest. Ajigartha wanted him to come back to the family. Sunahsepa refused. Viswamitra declared that Ajigartha had sold him and could not be his father and that Harischandra could not be the father as he had offered him in the sacrifice. Viswamitra offered to take him, but Sunahsepa wanted to join Viswamitra only if he would make him his first son. Once bit twice shy. Viswamitra agreed to this. He had 101 sons, of whom 50 were elder and 50 younger to Madhu Chandas. The elders refused to accept Sunahsepa as their elder brother. Madhuchandas and his younger brothers agreed to this wish of Viswamitra. Viswamitra cursed his first 50 sons who became Dasyus. The others were blessed as they agreed to his wishes. He told them that they would take his Daya. (युष्मिन् दायं मे उपेत). Sunahsepa was thereafter known as Devarata and he was the progenitor of the Kausika Gotra. (This story is found also in Bhagavata 9th Kanda and 7th and 16th Adhyayas. The Ramayana story in Balakanda Sargas 61 and 62 slightly different.)

19. This story shows that Viswamitra could disinherit 50 sons and instal a stranger as his eldest son. This brings out the extent of the father's right.

20. There are also references to division in the Jaiminiya Brahmana (III, 156) of a division among four sons, while their father was old but alive, and also in the Brihadaranyaka Upanishad (III, (iv) 1) of Yajnavalkya wanting to divide his property between his two wives, Maitreyi and Katyayani, when he was about to renounce the world.

21. Dr. Sarvadhikari holds that there was a preference for the eldest son and also that the rule of primogeniture operated in some contexts (See his Tagore Law Lectures P. 224 et seq). Dr. R. B. Pal also at p. 353 of his History of Hindu Law (Tagore Law Lectures 1930) infers from some of these stories that there is little indication of the family being regarded as the owner of the property. He holds the view that there was some kind of a preference for the eldest son. It is necessary to remember that the Vedas did not primarily concern themselves with property and it is not surprising that we do not get any direct guidance from them.

22. The guidance from the Vedas being thus only marginal, we may turn to the Sastrakaras. Gautama (Ch. XVIII) envisages division after the father's death or after the mother becomes incapable of bearing children. He poses the possibility of the whole estate going to the first born who would support the rest as the father is expected to do. But he considers that there would be spiritual merit in partition, in which the eldest son could get an additional share. Thus partition appears to be optional and not obligatory.

23. Baudhayana (II, 2) is not also specific about equality of division. In his conception, also, the equality is permissive while the eldest son can get some preference.

24. Apastamba (II, 6, 14) shows a distinct preference for equality while he also envisages that equal partition could take place after gladdening the eldest son by choice presents.

25. Vasishtha (Ch. XVII) and Manu (Ch. IX) give a greater share for the eldest son. Yajnavalkya (Ch. II) would also give a greater share for the eldest son, but the rest of the sons have to divide equally. Narada (Colebrooke's Digest V. 32) makes the father the lord during his lifetime. In the division after his death, the eldest son takes a larger share, the younger smaller and others equal share. Vishnu (Colebrooke's Digest 54) is in favour of equality while Brihaspati (Colebrooke ibid) shows a preference for the first born and Katyayana for equality of division.

26. The above would show that there was a lack of unanimity among the law givers. The references have been given in the particular order adopted by Dr. Sarvadhikari who has taken them in their historical order determined by him. It is not necessary for our present purpose to examine the background and details of this historical order.

27. The summary of the Smriti texts would show generally that the father's right by and large was absolute and even where equality of division (with or without reservation as Jyesta Bhaga) was envisaged the idea of any right in the other members of the family is not evident. In this state of the law, it is Vijnaneswara who gave it a direction.

28. Vijnaneswara is only a commentator of the Yajnavalkya Smriti. There is a reference to one Yajnavalkya in the Vikrama Charita of Bilhana. Bilher has translated this work into English. Bilhana flourished in the Chalukya Court. The ruler at that time was Vikramaditya, and it is in his honour that the work was composed. In it there is reference to Vijnaneswara who appears to have been assigned with the work of giving and administering law. The scholars are agreed that the commentator on Yajnavalkya smriti is the same as the person who adorned Vikrama's Court. His time is thus determined as the latter part of the 12th century.

29. Vijnaneswara appears to have given an introduction to his work which is not found in the edition published by Nirnaya Sagar Press, Bombay in 1949. Some details therefrom as recorded by Dr. Sarvadhikari (p. 367) are reproduced here. His father was Padmanabha Bhatta of Bharadwaja Gotra. He was at the time of writing the commentary a Sanyasi of the Parama Hansa order. He refers to an earlier commentary by Viswarupa. He describes himself as a disciple of Viswarupa. It would not be proper to confuse this Viswarupa, with the earlier commentator on Yajnavalkya, as then Vijnaneswara would not have then said that the other commentary was "hard and turgid". It would then be decrying his own Guru's work, which one would not expect him to do. Viswarupa's must thereore have been much more ancient.

30. Of his own commentary says Vijnaneswara with humility;

"My object has been to explain as concisely as possible the texts of Yajnavalkya, but in doing so, I have not to the best of my knowledge omitted the explanation of single word or letter nay even of a single dot of the text. But it is not improbable that I have sometimes misconceived the true interpretation of the great sage. If the learned should meet with any such error. I beg them to correct it, remembering that all writers are liable to err."

31. Vijnaneswara in the commentary on Yajnavalkya (well known as Mitakshara) in the chapter dealing with Daya Vibhaga Prakaranam (the chapter on the division of property) examines the texts of Narada, Gautama and others.

32. It is Vijnaneswara who brings in various clear concepts in the law e.g. (a) सप्रतिबन्धदाय (translated not so happily as "obstructed heritage") and अप्रतिबन्धदाय ("unobstructed heritage") (b) जन्मनैव पुत्रादीनां स्वर्त्वं (right to property by mere birth etc. He has sought to derive proposition or concept (b) given above by a close reasoning reminiscent of the method adopted by Sankara and other authors of Vedanta treatises.

33. Vijnaneswara notices the distinction between "separate property" and "common property" and deals with Narada's dictum :

शौर्यभार्या धनं चोमे

यच्च विद्याधनं भवेत् ।

त्रोज्येतान्य विभाज्यानि

प्रसादो यश्च पैतृकः ॥

(Wealth obtained by prowess, from wife, by teaching (or education) and by gift from father are indivisible). In those days, immovable property was subjected to a more rigorous restriction as :

स्थावरं द्विपदचैव

यद्यपि स्वयमार्जितं ।

असंभूय सुतान् सर्वान्

न दानं न च विक्रयः ।

(Though immovables and bipeds have been acquired by a man himself a gift or sale of them should not be made without consulting all the sons). Thus regarding immovables there was no need to invoke any doctrine of blending as the sons had a say in their alienation.

34. The development of the law appears to have been in stages. Originally the father had an absolute right in property. He could, if he cared to, divide as he pleased as Manu did. Later the first son, though it is not quite clear, seems to have been the sole successor. The Sunahsepa's episode is indicative of the eldest son having special rights. See p. 225 et seq of Dr. Sarvadhikari. Subsequently unequal partition was envisaged by many of the Smritikaras. It is to some extent Gautama and later Vijnaneswara who have evolved the doctrine of equality in partition.

35. As regards self-acquisitions, or other separate property, the father had an absolute right except in immovables (bipeds also). It follows that there was no need to invoke any doctrine of blending the separate immovable property with the joint family property as the father had no right to alienate the immovables without consulting the sons. It was also said :

मणिमुक्ता प्रवालानां

सर्वदेव्य पिता प्रभुः ।

स्थावरस्य तु सर्वस्थ

न पिता न पितामहः ॥

(The father is the master even of all gems, pearls and corals; but neither the father nor the grandfather is so of the whole immovable property). (Mitakshara, Nirnaya Sagar, 1949 Edn., p. 218). Thus there was no question of any blending of what were moveables, as they could be dealt with by the father as he pleased.

36. The concept of money being the means by which goods (even human) could be purchased is clear from the story of Sunahsepa. Rohita purchased him for a hundred pieces of gold. But the economy was more a barter economy and money or currency assumed substantial proportions only in later days. It is, therefore, not surprising that there was no question of blending as such considered by the ancient law givers. Things could be kept separately. Even now in villages, vessels and items of gifts received at the time of a son's marriage are segregated and not mixed. The law on blending is thus a modern development. That this is so is clear also from the absence of a Sankrit equivalent for it.

37. To the extent I have been able to see, the earliest case I come across is reported in 10 M I A 490 Ram Pershad Tewari v. Sheocharan Das. One Deenanath was the youngest of the five sons of Sheo Dutt who was a purohit in Allahabad. He started a moneylending business which flourished well. There was no ancestral nucleus. One of the brothers filed a suit claiming partition of the properties acquired from that business as joint family properties. They were held to be partible family properties and at page 505, it was observed :

"It may be further admitted that Deenanath laid the foundation of the future fortune of the family. But there is no proof that he kept as separate or treated as separate property, that which he acquired at Agra". (from the money lending business).

38. In Lal Bahadur v. Kanhaiya Lal 29 All 244 = 34 I A 65, there was some family nucleus. Three sons of one Gobind Ram constituted a H. U. F. One of the sons was in service in the Education Department and his savings were mixed with the family. There was a partition and Durga Prasad got a share therein. Claiming that his properties were self-acquired, he left a will giving meagre maintenance allowance to two of his sons and the rest to his eldest son. The two sons, who suffered by the unequal arrangement, filed a suit for partition. The claim for partition was accepted by the Privy Council. After referring to the evidence, their Lordships held :

"This is strong evidence that there was but one common stock of the whole family into which each voluntarily threw what he might have otherwise claimed as self-acquired; and that the property purchased by, or with the assistance of, the joint funds was joint property of the family, and not of any particular member of it." (See p. 255 of 29 All).

39. A large volume of case law has come up later. But the cases when examined would show that persons mixing up their separate income in the joint family accounts have been taken to have blended and converted their separate property into joint family property. See Lal Bahadur v. Kanhaiya Lal, 29 All 244 = 34 I A 65, Suraj Narain v. Ratan Lal, 44 I A 201. In the latter case it was held that the fact that other moneys not belonging to other coparceners were there in the accounts would not suggest that there was no blending as far as the family members were concerned.

40. It is enough to refer to one decision of the Supreme Court reported as Venkata Reddy v. Lakshamma, AIR 1963 SC 1601 wherein it was laid down :

"Property separate or self-acquired of a member of a joint Hindu family may be impressed with the character of joint family property if it is voluntarily thrown by the owner into the common stock with the intention of abandoning his separate claim therein but to establish such abandonment a clear intention to waive separate rights must be established. From the mere fact that other members of the family were allowed to use the property jointly with himself, or that the income of the separate property was utilised out of generosity to support persons whom the holder was not bound to support or from the failure to maintain separate accounts, abandonment cannot be inferred, for an act of generosity or kindness will not support a legal obligation."

41. In none of these cases, the existence of family property was regarded as a sine qua non for the conversion of individual property into joint family property. If the principle is that an impecunious family cannot benefit from the individual property being thrown into common stock, then 10 M I A 490 would have been differently decided.

42. There are decisions of long standing which lay down the principle :

"Nor is there anything in Hindu Law which says that possession of property is a necessary requisite for the constitution of a joint family." (See Jankiram v. Nagamony, 49 Mad 98 at 103 and 115).

To the same effect are propositions laid down in R. Subramania Iyer v. C. I. T., (1955) 28 I T R 352; Damodar Krishnoji Nirgude v. C. I. T., (1962) 46 I T R 1252; C. I. T. v. M. Khanna, (1963) 49 I T R 232 and C. E. D. v. Annachalam Chettiar, (1968) 69 I T R 607. These cases have specifically rejected the contention that there could be no blending when the hotchpot was empty.

43. In fact in Keshavlal Lalubhai Patel v. C. I. T. (1962) 44 I T R 266 at 274, the Gujarat High Court extracted a passage from a decision of the Andhra Pradesh High Court saying that is not necessary that he (a coparcener) should own joint family property "in order to impress his self-acquired or separate property with joint family character." This decision was affirmed in (1965) 55 I T R 637. If the view was wrong, the S. C. would have at least made a reservation about it.

44. Blending, it is submitted, is possible even where the family owns no other property. It is not proper to take the word

"blending" or its equivalent too literally. This is a legal concept evolved out of judicial decisions. Possession of property is not a requisite for the constitution of a joint family. It is submitted that the two cases referred to in paras 4 and 5 above should not be taken as laying down the rule that there can be no blending where the family has no other property. In the absence of even a passing reference to any of the earlier cases noticed in paras 37 and 42, they cannot be taken as overruled.

REVIEWS

INDIAN CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

By M. P. Jain, LL. M. (Del). J. S. D. (Yale). N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Bombay. 2nd Edition, 1970. Pp. xxxiii & 816. Price Rs. 40.

This is a thorough and exhaustive study in narrative form, giving a coherent and integrated picture of the Indian Constitution as a whole, of the inter se relations between the various Articles, and of the workings and practices of the Governmental machinery. On major points references have been made to foreign Constitutions like those of the U. S. A., Canada, U. K. and Australia, and to the latest case law. Relevant facts of important cases and a summary of the law laid down in them have been given in the body of the text. Important provisions of the Constitution have been given an analytical treatment and there is a separate chapter on constitutional interpretation. While materials on the historical development of the Constitution are to be found throughout the book, the chapter on constitutional amendment is, within a short compass, a record of the historical development from 1950 to the middle of 1970. In the present edition the book has been practically re-written in view of the accumulation of new case law and the dramatic developments that have taken place since the fourth general elections in 1967.

2. Apart from the introductory part, there are six parts entitled, respectively, the Central Government, the State Government, the Federal System, Political and Civil Rights, Miscellaneous Topics, Constitutional Interpretation and Amendment. The early chapters deal with the composition of the Central and State Legislatures, their officers, their functions and inter-relation between the two Houses, Parliamentary privileges, and delegated legislation. The functions of the Central and State Executives, and their working, the composition of the Supreme Court and the High Courts, their jurisdiction and powers, the doctrine of stare decisis, and the independence of the Supreme Court, are dwelt on. The author considers the distribution of legislative power, the three Lists, and the principles of interpretation of the Lists, as well as the allocation of taxing power, restrictions on taxing powers, and the expedients to create financial equilibrium at the State level. The succeeding chapters focus attention on administrative relations, the emergency provisions, co-operative federalism, freedom of trade and commerce, the official language, citizenship, and elections. There are as many as seven chapters on Fundamental Rights, which are concerned, inter alia, with justiciability, reasonable restrictions, guarantee against double jeopardy, privilege against self-incrimination, protection against arrest, and preventive detention. The concept of Eminent Domain in India, right to constitutional remedies, and emergency and fundamental rights, are discussed. The other chapters cover the Directive Principles, safeguards to minorities, Government services, Government contracts, suits by or against Government, and the Rulers of Indian States.

3. In the formulation of the social objectives of the Constitution one can discern the impact of the modern political philosophy which regards the State as an instrument to secure the good and welfare of the people. It is possible to conclude that the judicial process in India has been informed by the same philosophy (see Crown Aluminium Works v. Workmen, AIR 1958 S C 30, 34). In a given situation, the Court may be faced with several alternative interpretations of the Constitution, and when it chooses one of these views, it does act according to its own policy considerations (see Golaknath case). The author considers that the Supreme Court majority opinion in this case was based on the fear of the possible erosion of fundamental rights, and does not agree about their non-amendability. Even the Supreme Court, he observes, only considers that the amendment of Fundamental Rights cannot be achieved by following the procedure under Art. 368, but by setting up a new Constituent Assembly for the purpose. And the author explains in the book why this course is not feasible.

4. The author, who was at one time Research Director of the Indian Law Institute, has made a useful and reliable contribution to literature on the subject, which should be of considerable assistance to students of law, political science and administration, as well as to legal practitioners.

5. The book contains a table of cases and an index.

R.S.S.

COMMERCIAL LAW. By Gordon J. Borrie, LL. M., Professor of English Law, University of Birmingham. 3rd Edition, 1970. Butterworths, London. Pp. lviii & 378. Price Rs. 40.50.

In the volume under review the author has selected the topics of agency, sale of goods, hire purchase, negotiable instruments, insurance law, contracts of employment, and contracts with a foreign element as being among the most important of Commercial Law. He considers all the key problems they give rise to and places special emphasis on the facts of decided cases, as their study is believed to help greatly to illuminate the legal principles involved much better than if the legal principles are merely stated in the text and the reader has to refer to bare foot note for the facts.

2. The law is given as it stood on 1st December, 1969, and the present edition deals fully with the Misrepresentation Act, 1967 and notices other incidental statutory changes; the numerous developments in case law have also been covered. The Misrepresentation Act, 1967, S. 2 (1) enables a buyer to claim damages for innocent misrepresentation unless the seller proves he had reasonable cause to believe that the facts represented were true. With regard to the equitable remedy of rescission, the buyer still has the right to seek it if he acts reasonably promptly, but now by S. 2 (2) of the 1967 Act, the Court has a discretion to award damages instead of rescission even where an innocent misrepresentation is made without negligence.

3. The opening chapter of the present book describes the creation of a contract of agency, the obligations of the agent to his principal, and agent's rights and authority, and proceeds to discuss the settlement with the agent, breach of warranty of authority, wife as agent and termination of the contract. It then examines a contract for the sale of goods, transfer of property to the buyer, risk of loss and transfer of title, and analyses the terms of a contract and the subjects of delivery and acceptance of the goods and personal remedies for breach of contract. According to the Misrepresentation Act, 1967, the passing of property no longer destroys the buyer's right to reject, and a buyer who does some act inconsistent with the seller's ownership will not be deemed to have accepted the goods under S. 35 of the Sale of Goods Act unless he has had a reasonable opportunity of examination as provided in S. 34.

4. The common law obligations of the parties to a hire purchase, rights against third parties, sale or pledge by the hirer and the effect of execution or distress are then explained and the Hire Purchase Act, 1965 and the Advertisement (Hire Purchase) Act, 1967 are discussed. The regulations for control of hire purchase have lately been revised and the Order now in force is the Hire Purchase and Credit Sales (Control) Order 1969. Bills of exchange, cheques and promissory notes, the duties of a holder, and damages, are considered, after which the author focuses the reader's attention on life insurance and other types of insurance and the contract of insurance and the principles of insurable interest. Other topics referred to include master and servant relationship, contract of service, mutual indemnities, and remedies and contracts with a foreign element, the last mentioned one referring to contracts which are to be made or performed in a foreign country or whose subject matter is situated in a foreign country.

5. By means of foot-notes the reader is referred to various detailed works on particular aspects of commercial law, and the book is bound to be useful as a basic text book for the Law Society examination as well as for university and other courses.

6. The book has a table of cases, a table of statutes, and an index. R S.S.

LABOUR LAW. By J. B. Cronin, LL.B., and R. P. Grime, B.A., B.C.L. Lecturers in Law, University of Southampton. 1970. Butterworths, London. Pp. xlviii & 500 Price, Rs. 67. 50.

The three Parts of the work before us are entitled Law of Employment, Employer's Liability, and Law of Collective Labour Relationships, respectively. Part I deals with the contracts of service, the duties of master and servant, termination of the contract of service, and statutory control; employer's liability in the nineteenth century and his liability today as well as the Factories Act, 1961. are covered in the next Part. The last Part is concerned with collective bargaining at common law, the regulation of collective bargaining, the regulation of trade unions, and industrial disputes in relation to the criminal law, the contract of service, and the law of tort.

2. Because labour law is one field in which a great deal can be learned from other systems particularly in the matter of dismissal, the authors consider also the law of France, Germany, Italy and Russia on the dismissal of individual workers. According to the Factories Act, 1961 a factory consists of premises where persons are employed in manual labour by way of trade or for the purposes of gain in making or repairing an article or adopting for sale.' Although the common law in England emphasises the individual contract of employment, the factual structure of industrial relations is collective. Formal or informal collective agreements are negotiated by and with representatives of groups; their interpretation and application are pursued in an equally collective manner. The subject-matter of such collective activity varies from the establishment of basic wage rates for thousands of workers throughout the country to the settlement of one man's grievance in respect of one job in one factory. The main characteristics of the common law approach to collectivism are said to be an excessive reliance upon the contract as an analytical concept; the pervasive relevance of the doctrine of restraint of trade, the piecemeal nature of both Parliamentary and judicial legislation, and the general vagueness of the conceptual framework. After showing how the common law has met the conceptual problems posed by the collective settlement of the terms of service by means of the law of contract, the authors proceed to describe how that law has been and may be used as an answer to the social needs presented by collective bargaining.

3. The Royal Commission on Trade Unions and Employers' Associations, under the Chairmanship of Lord Donovan, recommended in 1968 that the present formal system of collective bargaining at industry, or national, level should be discarded in favour of the recognition of workshop or factory bargaining. In response to the Commission's report, Government published a white paper, 'In favour of Strife,' which contained the outline of a proposed Industrial Relations Bill, containing twenty-five official proposals, which have been included in an Appendix to the present book.

4. As to trade unions, certain propositions are advanced as to the circumstances when an union can be sued, when it is liable for the torts of its servants and officers, and when its funds are liable for damages awarded. There is a systematic tabulation of nine different ways in which a tort can be created in industrial disputes.

5. The work contains a table of cases, a table of statutes, and an index. R.S.S.

CRACKNELL'S LAW STUDENTS' COMPANION NO. 2. TORTS, By D. G. Cracknell, LL. B., Bar-at-Law, 3rd Edition, 1969, Butterworths, London. Pp. vii & 231. Price. Rs. 22.50.

A 'Tort' is an act or omission unauthorised by law and, 'independently of contract, infringes either some absolute or qualified right of another causing damage or some public right causing substantial damage to another person, and gives rise to an action for damages at the suit of the injured party.' It may be regarded as the breach of a legal duty owed independent of contract, by one person to another, for which a common law action for damages may be brought. The duties in a tort are primarily fixed by law, and in a contract by the parties themselves. Generally, the question whether a fixed number of specific torts or all unjustifiable harm is remediable in tort is of academic interest, one's conduct being judged by the objective standard of the reasonable man. There must be both damage and injury to some legally protected interest of the plaintiff before an action may be brought in tort. Every tort is remediable by damages as compensation, improper motive being generally irrelevant. As between crimes and torts, the commission of a crime carries with it the punishment of the criminal law, such as fine or imprisonment, whereas the commission of a tort gives rise only to a right of civil compensation.

2. For a real appreciation of the law of torts the student must make himself familiar with as many cases as possible and there are over 800 of them in the publication before us the attempt being to include those cases and statutory provisions which are of importance to students. The statutes are self-explanatory and the case notes contain an outline of the facts and a summary of those points in the judgment which are important from the student's point of view. Cross references have been given in order that the student who refers to one case will have no difficulty in finding others in which the same or similar points arose. In the latest edition the text has been brought up-to-date by introducing summaries of many of the cases decided since 1965 and the texts of some recent statutory provisions, and this has necessarily involved the omission of summaries of several older cases.

3. Although not intended to compete with other legal text books, the present volume should be of use as a companion to textbooks, lecture notes, and correspondence courses. It should primarily satisfy the student who has no access to or time to take full advantage of a law library and therefore finds it difficult to ascertain the facts of the cases or the wordings of Parliamentary Acts to which he may have been referred in the course of his studies.

4. There is a useful index at the end.

R.S.S.

THE EVOLUTION OF THE INDIAN CONSTITUTION. (Sir Chimanlal Setalvad Law Lectures). By T. L. Venkatarama Aiyar, University of Bombay. University Building, Fort, Bombay 32, 1970. Pp. 132. Price, Rs. 12.

Melancholy interest attaches to the publication under notice; the distinguished jurist and authority on constitutional law whose lectures at the Bombay University it contains passed away only the other day. The theme of the lectures is the presentation of the Indian Constitution as a federal one. While the Constitution has drawn largely from the Federal Constitutions of foreign countries, it has actually taken shape from the federal structure which had been established in India under the Government of India Act 1935. The learned lecturer therefore first gives an account of the set up of the Government of India before the enactment of the present Constitution, and then makes a comparative study with the Constitutions with a federal form of Government, viz., U. S. A., Canada, and Australia. He proceeds to analyse the working of the Indian Constitution, the place of conventions in the Governmental set up, the Fundamental Rights and the Directive Principles of State Policy, the place of judicial review and the provisions relating to the amendment of the Constitution.

2. Until 1967, when these lectures were prepared, the working of the Constitution did not present any problem because the party in power at the Centre and the States was identical. But when different parties, with different political programmes, began to appear, the problem of Centre-State relations and other issues became rather complicated. Some of the problems envisaged by the lecturer became matters of practical politics. In the third lecture, for example, after citing the provisions of the Constitution relating to the allotment and distribution of revenue by the Central Government to the States, he has referred to the setting up of the Planning Commission (a non-statutory body) and to the investing of it with extensive powers and observes that "it is in keeping more with a unitary than a federal Government," which has been latterly the complaint of some States.

3. As regards the true position and powers of the Governor of a State, the learned lecturer considers that the appointment of the Governor by the President is not an appointment by the Union Government, but that it is 'one to be made by the President in the exercise of his individual judgement' and that the "Governor should be a non-party man." In the matter of the relationship between the Judiciary and the Legislature the lecturer discusses the law and practice in England, and suggests that Parliament should enact a law "codifying the conventions which have under Art. 105 (3) and Art. 194 (3) become vested in the Legislature of the Union and the State Legislatures respectively."

4. Another question of importance dealt with is the power of Parliament to amend or abrogate the provisions relating to Fundamental Rights. The majority judgment in Golaknath case is referred to; the lecturer is of the view that Parliament has the power to amend the provisions relating to Fundamental Rights, but that this power should be exercised sparingly, and subject to certain conditions.

5. Since these lectures were delivered, the changes in the political complexion of Government in the Centre and the States have brought about a situation in which the federalistic principles of the Constitution have come into play more than before. As the lectures have to a large extent anticipated the new situation, they should be of great use in understanding the latest developments. They should be of lasting practical value to the administrators, the members of the Bench and the Bar, and the students of constitutional law, alike.

6. A table of cases and a subject index are furnished in the book. R.S.S.

RIOTS: PREVENTION AND CONTROL. By S. K. Ghosh, Former Inspector-General of Police, Orissa. With Foreword by A. K. Sarkar, Retired Chief Justice of India. Eastern Law House Private Ltd., 54 Ganesh Chunder Avenue, Calcutta 13. 1971. Pp. xx & 304. Price, Rs. 25.

A riot, which is nothing else than mob violence, may consist of indiscriminate looting and burning, attack on a particular community, or officials, or passers-by; buildings, private as well as public, may also be the target of attack. Riots are of different kinds, such as communal riots, labour troubles, and student disorders, and each kind has its own peculiar characteristics and originates from apparently different causes, so that the methods of dealing with them vary widely. In the post-Independence period, most of them were occasioned by student protests, social discontent, communal, political, linguistic, regional and group conflicts. They are mostly the work of anti-social and criminal forces, and if the law and order authorities are vigilant, swift, and impartial in rounding up of known bad characters as a precautionary measure there would be no riots. During riots many people are arrested but seldom prosecuted or convicted. Exemplary and swift punishment for murderers and arsonists, urges the author of the volume under review, will help to reduce repetition of this phenomenon.

2. The objectives of the present volume are to highlight some of the underlying factors contributing to riots; to outline some of the procedures and techniques for the prevention and control of different types of riots, and to make readily available exhaustive and up-to-date case law on unlawful assembly and rioting. There are separate chapters each dealing with crowds and mobs, communal riots, student riots, labour riots, urban riots, rural riots, festival riots, linguistic and racial riots, as well as the police techniques evolved for handling them. There is a chapter on the law concerning riots which covers the Penal Code, Criminal P. C., Police Act, Criminal Law Amending Act, the Preventive Detention Act, the West Bengal (Prevention of Violent Activities) Act and the provisions in the Constitution of India; the Addenda provided at the end of the book contains the latest judicial pronouncements. The appendices include the Commission of Inquiry Act and the reports of several commissions on police firing in the past. A Bibliography and Index are also given.

3. The primary responsibility for the prevention and control of riots rests with the State Government and their law enforcement officers. The present author has very wide experience in the matter; there was a special chapter on crowd control and riots in his earlier work. Lawbreakers and Keepers of Peace, (1969) and many of his suggestions have been followed with success in actual practice. In the present treatise, which is principally concerned with the prevention and control of riots, he dwells at length on the methods of dealing with them. In doing so he has emphasised the fact that the police is our police and have to act, as observed by Mr. Sarkar in the Foreword, with sympathy and understanding so as to attract the willing co-operation of the general public. As usual, the suggestions made by the author for meeting the situation arising from a riot are quite comprehensive and should be helpful to all those in charge of law and order. R.S.S.

DICTIONARY OF ECONOMIC TERMS.

By Alan Gilpin. B.Sc., (Econ.), M.Inst. F., M. I. P. H. E., of the Queensland Public Service, Australia. Butterworths and Co. (Publishers) Ltd, 88 Kingsway, London W. C. 2, 2nd Edition, 1970, Pp. 276, Price Rs. 22.50.

The book before us has been inspired by the author's professional acquaintance with applied economics in a major industry and his experience as a lecturer in economics and allied subjects over many years. While the fundamental truths of economics are valid for all time, the details of their manifestation are constantly changing and the present edition of the dictionary (it first appeared in 1966) has undergone extensive revision, while the opportunity has also been taken to incorporate terms relating to new developments, particularly in the field of public policy.

2. The book is intended primarily for economists and students of economics, but it should prove of value and interest also to planners and engineers in industry who have to give more constructive thought to the long term development of their own industries in the context of positive national economic planning and the implications of their individual industry's development for the economy as a whole. Agreement and Arbitration, banks and negotiable instruments, Companies, articles and memorandum of association, taxation matters, instalment credit, hire purchase, monopolies and restrictive trade practices and a multitude of other economic terms and expressions do not generally lend themselves to precise definition or detailed exposition in legal treatises, but a clear understanding of them is nevertheless highly desirable for the members of the legal profession. This Dictionary will, therefore, be useful not only to economists and students of economics but also to lawyers and students of law, specially commercial law. R.S.S.

REMINISCENCES OF A JUDGE. By N. G. Shelat, Ex-Judge, Gujarat High Court, Gujarat Law Reporter Office, Ahmedabad, 1970, Pp. 282, Price Rs. 20.

Nanubhai Gaurishankar Shelat, who retired from the Bench of the Gujarat High Court in 1970 and is a cousin of Justice J. M. Shelat of the Supreme Court, presents his reminiscences to the public in the work before us. Born in 1908, he started practice as an advocate at Nadiad in 1930, but joined the Subordinate Judicial Service of Bombay in 1936. Appointed as Additional City Magistrate, Ahmedabad, in 1945, he was promoted to the post of Assistant Judge three years later. He became District and Sessions Judge, Mehsana in 1954, and Bhuj in Kutch, and worked also as Chairman of Tribunals such as the Revenue and Sales Tax Tribunal. Subsequently he was District and Sessions Judge at Surat, Rajkot, and Baroda, and Principal Judge of the City

Civil & Sessions Court, Ahmedabad (1962) for three years before elevation to the Bench of the Gujarat High Court.

2. The present book is divided into four parts. The first part refers to his school and college days and the six years of practice at the Bar, and the second part relates to his service as Subordinate Judge and in other capacities until 1948. The third part covers the period 1948-54, and the final part brings the Reminiscences to the time of his retirement as Judge of the Gujarat High Court. There is shrewd commonsense in the author's observation that a lawyer should not create the impression on the Judge that he is identifying himself too much with his client, and that he should not antagonise the Court by his behaviour in the conduct of the case, while at the same time remaining reasonably firm where the client's interests are concerned. In a Court of law, the lawyer has to be fair to all sides—to his own, to the other side, and to the Judge in particular.

3. On the appointment of High Court Judges, the author has something original to say. According to him, the appointment is now made by the President of India on the recommendation of the Chief Justice of the High Court concerned in consultation with the Chief Minister. Of course it goes also through the Chief Justice of India and the Union Home Minister. This power is rather extraordinary, for, if the High Court Chief Justice were to make his selection without consulting his colleagues, the element of arbitrariness is bound to creep in. These selections should therefore be made by the collective method and, for obvious reasons of the independence of the Judiciary, the Chief Minister of a State should have no voice in them. And to keep the Judges above the need for hunting for jobs in retirement, their remuneration and retirement benefits should be made sufficiently attractive.

4. The author's high sense of duty, love of truth and fearlessness, and broad vision and human approach to the problems before him made him popular with the public. In the Reminiscences he has expressed his views on men and matters objectively and without fear or favour. It is a running commentary on the successive stages of his career, and in the faithful chronicling of the events of his life there is just a faint hint of the Diaries of Pepys and Anandarangam Pillai, although there are no day-to-day entries. STUDIES IN INDIAN LEGAL HISTORY AND INDIAN CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY. By M. S. Rama Rau, M.A., LL.M. With a Foreword by M. A. Ansari, B.A., B.C.L. (Oxon), Bar-at-Law. 1970. J. S. Pillay, Law Book Sellers and Publishers, 4-1-319, Troop Bazar, Hyderabad 1, A. P. Pp. xxxiv & 333. Price, Rs. 7.25.

Divided into two parts, the first part of the present book gives a detailed history of the growth of the legal administration in this country during the British period starting from the days of the East India Company, with special reference to notable cases like the Cossijurah case and the Nandakumar case. In doing so, the author has analysed the growth of the civil and criminal Courts and the judicial reforms introduced from time to time. The second part narrates the history of the Constitution of India commencing from the Regulating Act of 1773 and ending with the Constitution of the present Republic of India. The landmarks in the history, like the Minto-Morley Reforms, the Montague-Chelmsford Reforms, Dyarchy, and the Simon Commission Report are described in this part.

2. The Indian High Courts Act, 1861 amalgamated the Supreme and Sadar Courts, and was a stepping stone to the introduction of a uniform and universal application of law and procedure in India. The High Courts were the highest Courts of appeal in the different Provinces and an appeal from their decisions lay to the Privy Council in England. A Federal Court was established in India under the Government of India Act, 1935, which in its original jurisdiction, adjudicated disputes between the Provinces inter se and between the Provinces and Federation. It had appellate jurisdiction also, although the Privy Council continued to be the highest Court of appeal until 1949, when the Supreme Court was established under the Constitution of India with a varied and wide jurisdiction. The Supreme Court of India, as a Federal Court, as a Court of appeal, and as guardian of the Constitution is a unique institution of integrity, independence, and impartiality.

3. The first part of the book describes the genesis of the East India Company, the administration of justice in Madras, Bombay and Calcutta from 1639 to 1726, the Mayor's Courts in the three Presidencies from 1726 to 1753, the Adalat system in Bengal and the judicial reforms of Warren Hastings. The Supreme Court at Calcutta and the Regulating Act, 1773, the judicial reforms of Lord Cornwallis in the period from 1786 to 1793, and the judicial administration in the Provinces of Madras and Bombay between 1753 and 1861 are then discussed. The development of English Law in India, the growth of the criminal law, and the personal laws of the Hindus and Muslims, are the topics of three other chapters. The second part covers Pitt's India Act, 1784, legislation between 1833 and 1903, the constitutional reforms of 1909-1918, the Government of India Act, 1935, and the constitutional developments from 1936 to 1950.

4. A sure and systematic understanding of the present legal and constitutional set-up must be based upon the knowledge of the evolution and development of the Governmental Institutions and systems from the time of the East India Company and the present author has systematically dealt with the historical events and developments leading to the present legal and constitutional systems. The present studies stop with the advent of the Constitution in 1950, but there has been a tremendous growth of the general and constitutional law since then and the reader will look elsewhere for an account of them. In the present book the author gives a full list of law reports, Acts, text books, digests, manuals, codes, regulations and judicial decisions which he has consulted, and the work should be useful to students, those appearing for competitive examinations, as well as practising lawyers.

CENTRAL EXCISE: LAW AND PRACTICE IN INDIA. By F. L. Berarwalla, M. A., LL. M., Advocate. Vora & Co., Publishers Private, Ltd., 3 Round Building, Kalbadevi, Bombay 2. 1971. Pp. xvi & 243. Price. Rs. 35.

The present publication is a section-wise commentary, with text and synopsis, on the Central Excises and Salt Act, 1944 and the First Schedule, and commentary, without text, on the Central Excise Rules 1944 (Central Excise Rules, Government of India, 9th Edition, corrected upto 1st August 1969). The Act lays down that the duties will be levied and collected on all excisable goods and salt manufactured or imported by land into India at such rates as are specified in the First Schedule. The duties are chargeable on ad valorem basis and may alter any prevailing tariff value, the tariff values themselves being different for different classes of the same article. The Act lays down the procedure for determining the value, as well as the procedure for the issue of licences. Offences and penalties and the power of the courts to order forfeiture and the recovery of Government dues are dealt with. It also lays down the powers and duties of the officers, the powers of arrest and summoning persons to give evidence and produce documents, search and arrest, and the procedure to be followed by the officer in charge of a police station. It specifies provisions regarding the power of adjudication, option to pay fine in lieu of confiscation, and bar of suits and limitation of suits and other legal proceedings against the Government and its officers. Included in the present publication are all Notifications, Central Excise budget proposals of 1970 at a glance, and model forms of writ petition and affidavit in support as well as departmental appeal.

2. The main Act consists of 40 sections and 234 rules, which change often. The several notifications and orders issued from time to time make it difficult for manufacturers to keep themselves abreast of the changes. The Schedule to the Act changes with every Central budget. Owing to their inability to understand the complex law and procedure the cases of many manufacturers go by default. The publication should act as a complete guide to lawyers, executives, manufacturers and excise officials. Special attention has been paid to the constitutional aspects of the Act and the Rules, and various decisions under the Constitution of India having a bearing on the excise law have been discussed; the case law has been brought up-to-date. A subject-index and table of cases are also provided.

3. Enacted in 1944, the provisions of the Central Excises and Salt Act have become inadequate. It was a concise Act leaving everything to the rules under it. Although from 1947 there is no duty on salt, its manufacture, supply and distribution, are being regulated under that Act. The Central Excise Reorganisation Committee recommended, therefore, that the law should be made comprehensive by including in it all substantive provisions which at present form part of the Central Excise Rules 1944 and that the proposed law should not contain any provision relating to salt. Chapter IV of the present Act and, Section 8 and the Second Schedule, which relate to the transport by sea and possession of tobacco need not, in Government's view, be retained. They would like to omit 'salt' and re-number all the other items in the First Schedule. A bill to consolidate and amend the law on these lines was introduced in the Lok Sabha by the Minister of State for Finance on 14th August 1969, and time must show how far the recommendations regarding the reform of this branch of the law achieve their purpose.

A GUIDE TO DISCIPLINARY PROCEEDINGS FOR THE EXECUTIVE IN INDUSTRY. By E. F. Eduljee (N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., 164, Samaldas Gandhi Marg, Bombay 2.) 1971. Pp. xv and 137. Price Rs. 15.

It is well known that the various Labour Acts, Rules, Orders and legislative enactments tend to confuse the decision making authorities of the personnel department, and the author of the work under review has therefore put together, in a methodical and chronological order, the complete procedure when disciplinary proceedings are called for against any person coming under the purview of the Industrial Disputes Act. When an employee is deemed to have committed a misconduct to merit punishment under the Standing Orders, the management is obliged to follow a definite procedure before actual punishment. The present work sets out the correct procedure in order that the management's order is not upset on a purely technical ground, should the matter be made the subject of an industrial dispute.

2. The majority of disputes concern wrongful dismissal, discharge, or punishment, and the Industrial Tribunal is empowered to examine whether the termination of service (or other punishment) is justified and, if not, to give appropriate relief. In the case of dismissal, the Tribunal interferes only when there is want of good faith; when there is victimisation or unfair labour practice; when there is a basic error or violation of the principles of natural justice, and when the finding is perverse. The different chapters in the work lay down the various steps and obligatory departmental procedures supported by the appropriate legislation and judicial decisions.

3. The cases of misconduct are enumerated by the Standing Orders; they include also cases of moral turpitude, cognisable offences under the Penal Code, acts subversive of discipline, threat of violence, fomentation of discontent, malicious charges against the management, participation in illegal strike, and adoption of go-slow tactics. An initial step in the proceedings, the topics of suspension pending inquiry, wages during that period, and suspension as punishment are dealt with, followed by a discussion of the subject of written complaints, necessity of informing union, and issue of charge-sheet. The fixation of enquiry proceedings, selection of enquiry officer, procedure for holding enquiry and presentation of company's case are then described, while the next chapter relates to the form of recording the report, the disposal of findings and final decision, and communication of final order. Punishments, warnings and reprimands, termination of service, and proceedings to be followed during the pendency of an industrial dispute, are then covered. The concluding chapters dwell on police cases and criminal proceedings, medical staff, vacation of official quarters, deduction from wages, probationers, temporary employees, and apprentices.

4. The Appendices give draft notices in cases of misconduct and during the pendency of an industrial dispute, and cover such subjects as habitual absenteeism, habitual late attendance, overstaying leave and prolonged absence from work, and aide memoire for holding an enquiry. The annexures give suggested lay-outs of room in which enquiry is to be held, of written record of proceedings and of written finding by the Enquiry Officer, and they are followed by some important definitions.

5. These notes have been prepared keeping in view the principles enunciated by Labour Courts, Tribunals and the Supreme Court, and the author substantiates his observations with relevant court and case references. The author suggests that necessary interpreters should be provided at the time of enquiry and that translations in local languages understood by the workmen should be provided.

6. This handy volume should be of assistance to executives in industry, whether concerned with personnel matters or not.

PROBATION AND PAROLE. By L. S. Saharyia. With a Foreword by Mr. Justice S. K. Verma, of the Allahabad High Court. M/s. Mukat Publications, 5/14 Koop Nagar, Delhi 7. 1970. Price, Rs. 12.50.

"Crime cannot be hindered by punishment, but only by letting no man grow up a criminal", said Ruskin. And probation and parole are two institutions which should help us towards that much-to-be desired consummation. Probation seeks to accomplish the rehabilitation of persons convicted of crime by returning them to society during a period of supervision rather than sending them to jails and reformatories, and calls for an adequate investigation into the facts of the defendant's environment, character, and previous record. Parole, on the other hand, is the release of a convicted offender under supervision and under certain restrictions, after he has served a portion of the sentence in a penal institution; it is not clemency, but a process of regulated reformation.

2. The State Governments have enacted legislation on probation of offenders, children's welfare, and prisoners' premature release. Lately the Government of India have enacted the Probation of Offenders Act 1958, which lays increasing emphasis on the reclamation and rehabilitation of the convict without subjecting him to the unhealthy effects of jail life. The book under review attempts to collect together all the probation and parole procedures obtaining at present along with other relevant information.

3. The book has been divided into four parts, each part bearing separate page numbers. Part I deals briefly with bail, for which the offender goes in immediately after arrest. The appeals, memorials and petitions for redress from a higher authority are then discussed. After the award of sentence for confinement in jail, there are rules for interviews with outsiders, so that the convict can keep in touch with his home and other affairs. Part II deals with the provisions which may enable a prisoner to secure release or leave under the different measures. The release on probation of good conduct under the supervision of a probation officer and the premature release of a prisoner on licence have been explained at length; it includes releases under the Probation of Offenders Act 1958.

4. Part III contains elaborate notes on juvenile delinquency, probation, parole, honorary aparadh nirodhaks, crime preventive societies and panchayats, on whom devolves the great reformatory and humanitarian work. It acquaints the reader with the various aspects of social welfare activities undertaken for the benefit of delinquents. There is also a chapter on open prison camps, a recent advance in the treatment of prisoners. Part IV, Appendix, gives the text of the relevant Acts and Rules with, whenever necessary, the latest amendments and notes. It includes the details which may prove useful to the members of the Bench and Bar either at the time of trial or after conviction.

The book brings together all the enactments and rules in one place and notices all the relevant authorities on the various topics. It should be of great use to the Bench, the Bar, Probation Officers and law teachers. There is a bibliography, but no index. R.S.S.

THE BOMBAY PUBLIC TRUSTS ACT 1950. By Kesarichand Nemchand Shah B. A., LL.B., Advocate. With a Foreword by Ratilal H. Patel, B. A., LL. B., Charity Commissioner, State of Gujarat, 4th Edition, 1970. N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., 164, Samaldas Gandhi Marg, Bombay 2. Pp. xvi & 777. Price Rs. 38.

Containing nearly 200 pages more than in the 3rd Edition, the latest edition of the present volume has been thoroughly revised, enlarged and re-written, and includes a number of new topics and considerable body of case law, with decisions reported as well as un-reported. All Notifications, Circulars of Charity Commissioners, Policy of Charity organisations, and amendments to the Act and Rules in both Gujarat and Maharashtra till 31st January 1970 have been included.

2. The Bombay Public Trusts Act 1950 is based on the report of the Tendolkar Committee which had been appointed by the Bombay Government to investigate and make recommendations for safeguarding, co-ordinating, and properly utilising the public religious and charitable endowments in the State. According to the Act a 'Public Trust' is an express or constructive trust for either a public, religious or charitable purpose or both, and includes a temple, math, wakf, dharmada or any other religious or charitable endowment, and a society formed for that purpose and registered under the Societies Registration Act, 1860. The 88 sections contained in the 12 chapters of the Act are each followed by detailed synopses and commentaries.

3. Under the present Act no civil Court has jurisdiction to decide questions which come under the former's purview. Section 18 enjoins the trustee of a public trust to make an application in the prescribed form, and, if a trustee fails to comply with the provision regarding registration of a public trust, he is debarred (S. 31) from instituting a suit to enforce any right on its behalf in a law Court. Section 35 lays down how public trust money has to be invested and the next section prohibits the alienation of immovable trust property except by way of leases for specified periods, without the previous sanction of the Charity Commissioner, who is authorised to enter on and inspect any property belonging to a public trust.

4. The Charity Commissioner is appointed by the author of the trust or by a Court of competent jurisdiction to act as trustee and in such cases the Act provides for the levy of administrative charges. Section 50 of this Act and S. 92 of the Civil P. C. contains provisions of almost the same character in respect of suits regarding public trusts. Two of the sections lay down the rule of 'cy pres' in relation to their administration and deal with the powers of the Courts relating to the application of this doctrine. The Public Trusts Administration Fund, whose establishment vests in the Charity Commissioner, lays down what funds shall be credited to it (S. 57), and every trust is obliged to pay to this Fund such a contribution as may be prescribed. There are penalties which are prescribed for trustees violating the provisions of the Act, and there is a separate chapter covering procedural matters regarding the jurisdiction of Courts and rights of appeal.

5. The schedules and appendix to the book include the Bombay Public Trusts Rules, 1951, the Administrators General Act, the Official Trustees Act, the Societies Registration Act, and the Wakf Act. There are also some blank pages for amendments to notifications and personal notes. There is an index but no table of cases. The book should be of assistance not only to the trustees who are to administer the trusts, but also to the Authorities under the Act, auditors, and the members of the Bench and Bar who are concerned with this branch of the law.

COMMERCIAL LAW. By Robert Lowe, LL.B., Solicitor of the Supreme Court. 2nd Edition. 1967. Sweet & Maxwell Ltd., 11 New Fetter Lane, London. (In India: N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Princess Street, Bombay 2). Pp. xxxix & 571. Price Rs. 78.75.

This edition takes into account the changes which have occurred since the publication of the 1st edition in 1964. The chapter on hire purchase, which explains the major provisions of the Hire Purchase Act, 1965, has been largely re-written. Since that Act does not form a comprehensive code but only deals with certain aspects, the present work deals first with hire-purchase agreements at common law, containing cross-references to the relevant sections of the Act. The regulations for control of hire purchase have lately been revised and the Order now in force is the Hire Purchase and Credit Sales (Control) Order, 1969.

2. The doctrine of fundamental breach has received a rude shaking as a result of the Suisse Atlantique case, and the possible effects of this decision are considered in the chapters on sale of goods (Ch. 3), hire-purchase (Ch. 4), bailments (Ch. 8) and export sales (Ch. 9). The Misrepresentation Act, 1967 affects the Sale of Goods Act in two ways; the passing of property no longer destroys the buyer's right to reject, and a buyer who does some act inconsistent with the seller's ownership will not be deemed to have accepted the goods under S. 35, unless he has had a reasonable opportunity of examination as provided in S. 34. The sections on the 'passing of property,' 'terms of the contract,' and 'delivery, acceptance and payment,' have therefore to be read in the light of the above. The chapter also contains the proposals made in the Twelfth Report of the Law Reform Committee dealing with the transfer of title to chattels.

3. The Redundancy Payments Act, 1965 is examined briefly in Chapter 2, the Diplomatic Privileges Act, 1964, in Chapter 10, and a number of new cases have been included in every chapter of the work. The present book first considers the powers of an agent to alter his Principal's legal relations with third parties and what the principal's rights and liabilities are vis-a-vis the third party. It discusses the agent's liabilities and the exceptions to the rule that an agent can neither sue nor be sued on a contract concluded between his Principal and a third party. It refers to the more important statutory provisions from which the terms of a contract between master and servant are derived, as, for example, wages, holidays, safety, health and welfare, and examines the ways in which a contract of service is brought to an end. A whole chapter is concerned with the functions of bills of exchange, cheques, and promissory notes, and the rules relating to them.

4. The volume before us does not include any reference to the Misrepresentation Act, 1967 for the reason that the Misrepresentation Bill had not yet reached the statute book at the time of publication. According to the changes made by that Act, the right to rescind for innocent misrepresentation will be available even though the contract has been performed and the representation becomes term of the contract; the court will have a discretionary power to award damages in lieu of rescission for innocent misrepresentation; and, if a party has been induced by a non-fraudulent misrepresentation to enter into a contract, he will be entitled to damages unless the maker of the statement can show that he had reasonable grounds to believe, and did believe, that the contract was made, that the facts represented were true.

5. The book contains a table of cases, a table of statutes, and index. R. S. S.

A DICTIONARY OF COMPANY LAW. 1968. By Dr. A. K. Sur, Director, Institute of Company Affairs, 11, Kalicharan Ghosh Road, Calcutta, 50, Pp. 220 & xvi. Price, Rs. 10.

The Indian Companies Act, 1956, which follows the recommendations of the Company Law Reform Committee, not only adopts several of the changes introduced into the English Company Act, 1948 but also departs from it in many ways. Ninety-five Sections of the Indian Act are calculated to ensure more effective powers of control and supervision by the Central Government over the activities of Companies.

2. An incorporated company, registered under the Act, is a distinct and independent person in law, and is endowed with special rights and privileges which are distinct from the rights and privileges of its members. It has perpetual succession and remains in existence "however often its members die" or change, until it is dissolved by liquidation. It has the right to sue or be sued or to hold property in its own name; its shares are transferable and the liability of its share-holders is limited; it can enter into a contract with its share-holders and is managed by its chosen representatives, the directors. In many matters the Government of India is empowered to intervene, and in some its approval is necessary. The Government's powers are exercised through the Department of Company Law Affairs, which functions through a Company Law Board. The Board consists of not more than five members one of them being appointed by the Government as its Chairman.

3. Conceived in an original way, the scope of the work under review is encyclopaedic, and it is designed in such a manner that the reader can easily and promptly obtain the answers to any of his inquiries. The topics in the Dictionary are arranged alphabetically and case law has been made available for all disputed points of law. Further light on disputed points is thrown by citations from the works of Backley, Palmer, Gore-Brown, Topham, and Halsbury. When looking for a point, enquirers should refer to the cross-references also if it is not found in the original article. In the appendices are listed the documents that should be maintained in the registered office of a company, the documents that should be produced or filed with the Registrar, the documents that should be filed with a stock exchange by a listed company, and a Table of Forms to be used.

4. The amendments to the Companies Act, 1956 abolishing the managing agency system and prohibiting company contributions to the funds of political parties were passed in 1969, i. e., subsequent to the publication of this book. All the same the Dictionary should be of considerable assistance as a ready reference book not only to the personnel in the Secretarial departments of companies and those who are quite familiar with the detailed provisions of the Act, but also to the many others to whom that Act is a sealed book. HOW ARE LOSSES TREATED UNDER INCOME TAX ACT 1961. By Champatrai and Devi Dayal Gupta, Advocates, Supreme Court. 1968. Taxmann, Kucha Chelan, Khari Baoli, Delhi 6. pp. 152. Price, Rs. 13.50.

Although there are many commentaries on the subject of losses under the Income Tax Act, the present treatise deals exclusively with all aspects of this important subject. It traces the history of the legal provisions, discusses case law on the subject, and presents practical illustrations and examples taken from the decided cases.

2. Losses may be due to fluctuations in rates, prices, arrivals of bumper crops, strikes in factories, the banning of exports, the removal of import restrictions, lack of supervision, bad debts, embezzlements and defalcations by employees, theft, dacoity or sinking of vessel. In computing business income, deduction is allowed of such losses, for unless it is done, genuine gains or profits cannot be arrived at. But in claiming such a deduction, the loss must be incidental to that particular business and should be of a revenue nature. There should not also be any law denying the same expressly or impliedly. Sections 70-80, Chapter VI of the Income-tax Act, 1961, are mainly devoted to this part of the law and its procedure.

3. The book under the review describes the various heads of income and the circumstances in which there can be a 'net loss' under these different heads. Section 14 of Ch. 14 classifies these heads of revenue as salaries (S. 16), interest on securities (S. 19), income from house property (S. 24), profits and gains of business or profession (Ss. 28-44A), capital gains (Ss. 45-55), and income from other sources (S. 57). Having seen the place of losses under the different heads of income, the author proceeds to study the circumstances and manner in which the losses can be set off against other incomes.

4. Although the profits of each separate source of income or business have to be computed separately, the tax is not charged separately on every distinct business, but on the aggregate of the profits of all the businesses carried on by the assessee. The relevant law relating to set off of losses is contained in Ss. 70 and 71 of the Income-tax Act, 1961, and S. 72 relates to the carry forward and set off of these business losses. The author considers the subject of losses in speculative business (S. 73), the losses under 'capital gains' (S. 74), the losses of registered firms (S. 75), the losses of unregistered firms assessed as registered firms and their partners (Ss. 76-78), the losses of companies (S. 79), and the submission of loss returns (S. 80). Losses due to theft and embezzlement, highway robbery, proper year for claiming loss, unabsorbed depreciation of past years, loss of cash by theft, and claim for development rebate, are then covered. Loss of capital cannot be set off against the profits or gains, but only trading or business loss. Whether the loss is of a capital or a business nature is a question to be decided on the facts of each case.

5. The publication before us, which contains a table of cases and an index, should be of assistance to the business community, accountants, and practising lawyers.

THE COMMON LAW IN INDIA. By M. C. Setalvad. 2nd Edition, 1970. N. M. Tripathi Pvt. Ltd., 164, Samaldas Gandhi Marg, Bombay. 2. Pp. viii & 251. Price, Rs. 11.

The volume under review embodies the lectures delivered in 1960 by Mr. M. C. Setalvad, ex-Attorney-General of India, under the auspices of the Hamlyn Trust, London (12th in the series), which aims at the furtherance of the knowledge of comparative jurisprudence among the common people of Great Britain and Northern Ireland. The author traces the development of Indian jurisprudence in the last two centuries and points out its similarity to the 'mother' jurisprudence of England. Common Law in India being taken to mean all that is of English origin in the Indian system of law, he covers not only what is known strictly in England as the common law but also its traditions, some of the principles underlying the English statute law, the equitable principles developed in that country, and even the attitudes and methods pervading the entire British system.

2. In the opening chapter on the rise of the common law, the historical introduction is followed by a discussion of the selective application of English law, equity and common law, Indian common law and some fundamental principles and traditions of the common law like the jury system, Habeas Corpus, independence of the judiciary, the adversary system of trial, the system of precedents, and the rule of law. Dealing with civil law, the author touches, inter alia, on the subjects of law of succession, contracts, specific relief, sale of goods and partnership, negotiable instruments, real property law, and torts. The base and foundation of civil law in India is the English common and statute law, but perfectly adapted to Indian needs and conditions. The ground work and features of the Indian Penal Code are then examined, as well as the concepts of mens rea, exemptions from criminal liability, self-defence, provocation, degrees of criminality, punishment, and criminal procedure. Explaining finally, the position since the coming into existence of the Indian Constitution, the author focuses the reader's attention on, inter alia judicial control over legislation, delegation by Parliament, subordinate legislation, administrative tribunals, fundamental rights, and the directive principles of State policy. The makers of the Indian Constitution have left the entire legal system untouched because it is suited to the needs of the people and has been a powerful integrating factor.

3. To sum up, the principles of the English common and statute law, after slowly taking root for 200 years, are now firmly embedded, with suitable changes, in the structure of the great Indian Codes. The present Constitution embraces not only the statutes in force at its commencement but also personal and customary laws and the common law principles applied in India by Indian judicial decisions, and the evolution of Indian law continues to be largely influenced by the development of English law and the decisions of English Courts. It is the author's hope that, with a greater interplay between legal minds in India and the Commonwealth and elsewhere, the time may not be far off when English courts themselves recognise Indian contributions to legal thought and principles.

4. The present publication is a reprint of the English edition, printed in 1960. The mistakes in that edition have been corrected and a Table of cases, Index, and Bibliography, have been added for the reader's convenience.

LAW OF PARTNERSHIP IN INDIA AND PAKISTAN. By Sunderlal Trikamal Desai, B.A., LL.B., Bar-at-Law. 4th Edition. 1970. S. C. Sarkar and Sons Private Ltd., 1-C College Square, Calcutta 12. Pp. lxii & 465. Price, Rs. 30.

Originally the law relating to partnership was regarded as a part of the ordinary law of contract (Indian Contract Act 1872), and it was only in 1932 that the Indian Partnership Act was passed incorporating the relevant sections of the 1872 Contract Act with modifications and amplifications. Based mainly on the English Partnership Act and incorporating many of its provisions, it did not depart substantially from the law previously prevailing in the country but only laid it down in an exhaustive manner in clear and definite propositions carefully and systematically arranged. An important and new element in the law, however, was introduced, viz., the provisions for the registration of Firms. An application for registration to the Registrar of Firms, in the form of a statement signed by all the partners, should state the Firm's name, the principal places of business, the names of other places where the Firm carried on business, the names and permanent addresses of the partners, and the duration of the Firm. Although the law relating particularly to partnership is embodied in this Act, many of the general principles of the Indian Contract Act continue to be applicable to partnership transactions and Firms.

2. The first part of the work under review, which deals with the Indian Partnership Act 1932, gives an exhaustive and dependable commentary on its provisions, particular care being taken to examine and incorporate all important cases, Indian and English. The second part deals with Practice and Procedure, particularly with the various questions which arise in suits between partners, the mode and manner in which the rights and obligations arising on the death of a partner may be enforced, and suits by and against partners. The law of insolvency affecting partners and partnership firms and the subject of illegal partnerships have also been discussed. Not simply a digest of cases, the book adequately summarises the principles involved in the leading cases.

3. Of the 74 sections in the Partnership Act, Ss. 9-13 consider the general duties of partners, determination of their rights and duties by contract, and the conduct of the business, and Sections 19-37 are concerned, inter alia, with the implied authority of the partner as agent of the Firm and his liability for the acts of the Firm; the Firm's liability for the partner's acts; the introduction, retirement, expulsion and insolvency of the partner, and the rights of the outgoing partner. Sections 45-55 relate to the liability for acts of partners done after dissolution; mode of settlement of accounts between partners; payment of firm debts and of separate debts; and sale of goodwill, while Ss. 58-70 refer to the application for registration, recording of changes in the Firm, rectification of mistakes, amendment and inspection of register, and penalty for furnishing false particulars.

4. The book includes the English Partnership Act, 1890 in the appendix and contains an index and table of cases. In the present edition some of the chapters have been rewritten and the case law has been brought up-to-date. The businessman and the lawyer should both find the necessary information for their guidance and solution in this one volume.

SARKAR'S SPECIFIC RELIEF ACT. By Sudipto Sarkar, B.A. (Cantab) and Ajoy Nath Ray, B.A. (Oxon). 11th Edition, 1970. S. C. Sarkar & Sons (Private) Ltd., 1/C College Square, Calcutta, 12. Pp. xxxii and 423. Price, Rs. 18.

Specific relief is a form of judicial redress where the suitor gets his relief by way of the very thing which the other party is bound to perform or to forbear from performing; the other type of remedy is the compensatory remedy by way of damages. The Specific Relief Act, 1963 is reproduced in the present publication with notes, illustrations, and examples. It omits certain sections of the old Act of 1877, amends some and inserts a few new provisions. The changes have been indicated by the use of italics, while there is also a comparative table showing, sectionwise, the provisions of the 1877 Act and the corresponding provisions in the new Act.

2. The different kinds of a specific relief dealt with by the Act are the recovery of movable and immovable property (Ss. 5-7), specific performance of contracts (Ss. 8-12), rescission of contracts (Ss. 27-28), cancellation of instruments (Ss. 31-33), and declaratory decrees (Ss. 34-35). Section 73 of the Contract Act provides for the remedy of damages for breach of contract, but specific performance, which the present Act ensures, is an additional remedy which can be had at the suitor's option. It, however, lays down that the dismissal of a suit for specific performance will bar a subsequent suit for damages, unless the suitor had already asked for this alternative form of relief; any other relief to which he may be entitled will always be available to him. Contracts which cannot be specifically enforced, persons for or against whom contracts may be specifically enforced, discretion and powers of the court and the enforcement of awards and directions to execute settlement, are the topics covered by Ss. 14-25.

3. The Specific Relief Act deals also with preventive relief by way of injunctions (Ss. 36-42) which are designed to prevent the invasion of or injury to one's rights by another. It would appear from decided cases that even independently of this Act the Court has jurisdiction to grant certain kinds of relief. Other kinds of specific remedy include the one available to a mortgagor or mortgagee under the Transfer of Property Act, and the remedy provided by the Partnership Act, like dissolution and accounts between partners, and there are provisions in the Civil Procedure Code for administration by a creditor and for the execution of trusts. In matters on which the Act is silent or does not lay down a contrary rule, the principles of English law are generally followed.

4. The authors make a few passing observations on the concept of 'possession' in law, of which uniform connotation seems to be impossible. As the cases show, the concept has developed through similarities and family resemblances like the concept of game (e.g., football and bridge are both games though quite different in character) and should be tackled accordingly. The law is stated as in May 1970 and the 11th edition of the book has been brought up-to-date, but no thorough revision has been attempted.

5. The book has a Table of cases and Index.

NEW YORK APTO THERAPISTS' REPORT. May 1970. International Journal of Offender Therapy, 199, Gloucester Place, London N. W. 1, England. Pp. 40, Price. $3.50.

Among the developments of recent times in the field of criminal justice and correction, special mention should be made of the realistic and sympathetic approach of the APTO Therapists. The Association for the Psychiatric Treatment of Offenders, New York (APTO for short) has for its goal the establishment of the psychotherapy of offenders as a speciality, by encouraging treatment, research, and co-operation with allied disciplines. Psychiatrists have to know about the law and lawyers have to know the fundamentals of psychiatry and psychotherapy. But, in India, the study of psychiatry has yet to begin on an adequate and systematic basis, as deplored by the 23rd Conference of the Indian Society of Psychiatry recently held in Madurai. The Monograph before us is a symposium of papers on the approach and technique of offender therapy by a group of prominent APTO members.

2. The first paper on the principles of reality therapy explains that the task of therapy is to improve the offender's reality sense and develop feelings of affection and guilt, so that he must become aware that social adjustment is in his own long term interest. The aim is to get the offender back into society; if he associates with social-minded persons, he tries to be like them. In working with offenders, says the second paper, we should focus primarily on helping them to achieve peace of mind and to adjust to society, and, for this purpose, society must change its attitude to the under privileged and should be more concerned than now with the equitable distribution of the good things of life if large scale delinquency is to be prevented. To convert the pattern of non-involvement to one of adjustment, the offender must be able to talk freely about what worries him. The present paper describes how far non-communicative and unwilling offenders were taught to express themselves to adjust better, and how they developed more interests. Although adjustment to one's family is a principal aim of modern treatment ideology, many are still being sent to far-away residential institutions, sometimes near mental hospitals. Mere good will and allotment of money is not enough, for poor planning leads to harmful consequences, as is highlighted by the article on mental health.

3. In the article on helping pre-offenders, effective mental health teams are invaluable, says the writer, and the help given to young children from a poor background is one useful preventive service. Even very difficult children often react positively to the interest shown by the guiding counsellor. The writer of another paper points out how any crisis or indeed any life situation can be used therapeutically, socially and educationally. The crisis may make him more responsive and more ready to discuss his problems.

4. Finally, there is a review of the book, "Emergency Psychiatric Treatment; A Handbook of Secondary Prevention," by Leon Hankoff, who urges that the prevention of violence is a mental health problem akin to suicide prevention, to which similar techniques and principles should be applied. The present monograph contains also summaries of these papers in English, French, German and Spanish.

5. The annual subscription to the International Journal of Offender Therapy, the publishers of this monograph, is £2.

THE ADMINISTRATIVE REFORMS COMMISSION AND ITS WORK. A Brief Survey. 1970. The Manager of Publications, Delhi. Pp. 68. Price, Rs. 1.45 Paise.

During the fifteen years after Independence, several studies were made of administrative problems but they were not co-ordinated or comprehensive. When administrative efficiency deteriorated complaints regarding the inadequacy of the administrative machinery became persistent. The Administrative Reforms Commission (ARC for short), with Sri Morarji Desai as Chairman, was therefore appointed in January 1966 and it was required to consider and report on the problems of the machinery of the Government of India and its procedures of work; the machinery of planning at all levels; Centre-State relationships; financial administration; personnel administration; economic administration; administration at the State level; district administration; and problems of redress of citizen's grievances. Though originally the Commission consisted of Sri Morarji Desai, Sri K. Hanumanthaiya, Sri H. C. Mathur, Sri G. S. Pathak, Sri H. V. Kamath and Sri V. Shankar, owing to transfer, retirement or death, it finally consisted of Sri K. Hanumanthaiya, Sri H. V. Kamath, Sri D. Mookerjee, Sri T. N. Singh, and Sri V. Shankar.

2. Commissions of Inquiry generally base their findings on replies to questionnaires, material supplied by Government departments, and examination of witnesses. The ARC decided also to set up a number of study teams and working groups for various sectors of administration. Twenty Study Teams were appointed, including one on Administrative Tribunals, and thirteen Working Groups, including those on Police Administration, Central Direct Taxes Administration, and Company Law Administration. The first Group considered the detailed working of the Police Department and of the department's reports on student unrest, and juvenile delinquency and crime prevention. The enquiries of the second Group mentioned related mainly to the Income Tax Department, while the third of the Groups examined the administration of the Companies Act, the Department of Company Affairs, and their adequacy in enforcing the provisions for dispersal of ownership and avoidance of concentration of economic power. It obtained also a wide variety of views on Agricultural Personnel, and District Administration through two seminars and a conference.

3. After making extensive enquiries and gathering direct evidence, the ARC forwarded its reports to the Government of India in June 1970, and they contain 537 recommendations on a wide variety of areas and organisations of Government. The brochure under notice provides general information on the work done by the A R C. The appendices in it contain the Government resolution appointing the Commission and the schedule of the 40 heads under which the terms of reference of the Commission were grouped, the biodata of members, list of witnesses examined, the staff position, and the table of expenses incurred by the Commission.

ADVOCATE'S HANDBOOK, 1970.

Compiled by B. R. Ranade, B. A. (Hons.) LL.B., Advocate. The Poona Lawyers' Consumers Co-operative Society Ltd., Dist. Court Buildings, Shivajinagar, Poona. 5. pp. xxxvi & 141. Price, Rs. 5.

Full particulars about court-fees, stamp fees, registration charges, advocates' fees, and a host of other topics are presented for the ready reference of the busy lawyer in the Handbook under notice. It opens with the rules of the Bar Council on the standards of professional conduct and etiquette, under the heads of duty to the court, duty to the client, duty to opponent, duty to colleagues, and restrictions on employment, followed by the Poona Bar Association Schedule prescribing minimum fees. Ad valorem court-fees, fees payable in certain suits, registration fees, copying and comparing charges in the Registration office, and the fees for the grant of copies and for custody of documents are then presented. The next few pages deal with the charges for search, refund of court-fees, documents exempted from court-fees, stamp duty, rules for computing advocates' fees, and valuation of certain suits. Then are listed the fees in industrial court or tribunal and labour court, under the Payment of Wages Act, the Workmen's Compensation Act, the Employees' State Insurance Act, the Minimum Wages Act, the Bombay Industrial Relations Act, the Industrial Disputes Act, the Bombay Public Trusts Act, the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, the Maharashtra

Agricultural Lands (Ceilings on Holdings) Act, the Bombay Sales Tax Act, the Bombay Rent Act, the Income-tax Act, the Co-operative Societies Act and the Marriage Registration Act. Several statutory notices and some sections of the Bombay Rent Act and the Transfer of Property Act have been reproduced. Lastly the periods of limitation have been indicated for suits relating to accounts, suits relating to contracts, suits relating to declaration, suits relating to decrees and instruments, suits relating to immovable property and movable property, suits relating to trust property and torts, and suits relating to other miscellaneous matters.

2. Besides the foregoing, the Handbook includes several items generally found in diaries, like calendar, postal information, table of Wages and Table of Interest Rates, Conversion tables, and an inset showing the process fees chargeable in Civil and Criminal Courts.

3. For the very busy lawyer who is engrossed in the multifarious activities of his profession from day to day this 'Multum in Parvo' should act as an useful time-saving device.

MY LIFE: Law and Other Things:
By Motilal C. Setalvad. Published by
N. M. Tripathi, Private Ltd., Princess
Street, Bombay 2. Pages 636. Price
Rs. 30.00.

"My Life—Law and Other Things" by Mr. M. C. Setalvad is not exactly an autobiography by the great lawyer, but jottings of his views and observations of personalities he came into contact with during his professional and public activities. In his illustrious career, the author came into contact with great jurists, Judges, politicians and public men. As an Advocate General of Bombay and as an Attorney General of the Government of India, he had occasions to appear in many important constitutional cases. He had also occasions to lead Indian Delegation in International gatherings and Law Conferences. He was also invited to deliver law lectures not only in India but also outside India. Since the Independence, our Constitution had come before the highest Court of Judicature in India, for interpretation on many constitutional problems. There is hardly a case in which the author had not appeared. His keen observations of the personalities of the Judges and his objective appraisal about them, as jotted down by him in this book are sometimes unsparing in denunciation. But out-spokenness is absolutely objective in character and without any tinge of malice or conceit or boastfulness.

His active life began at the age of 66 when people think of retiring. At this age he was appointed Attorney General of India. Earlier he had served the country as delegate to U. N. General Assembly and Security Council. He stayed in the office of Attorney General for twelve years. It was even thought to combine the office of Attorney General and Law Minister in Mr. Setalvad. Mr. Setalvad's capacity for a succinct summing up of complex issues is so often witnessed in his conduct of many celebrated cases including the Chagla Commission of Enquiry into the Mundhra affairs (Chapter Nine). In this Chapter, Mr. Setalvad has some adverse comments against Mr. Chagla whom he described in another context along with Rajamannar of Madras, as the last of the great line of our recent Chief Justices (p. 242). But the strictures against Chagla are nothing compared with those against some of the Chief Justices of India. Even Mr. S. R. Das is not spared for his hand in the matter of some judicial appointments (p. 343).

Mr. Setalvad has all respect for both Mr. Gajendragadkar and Mr. Subba Rao as Judges. But even they have not escaped his keen scrutiny. Mr. Gajendragadkar is blamed for trying to hush up the case of a High Court Chief Justice who had made an incorrect claim about his age. Mr. Setalvad is also critical of Mr. Subba Rao's accepting nomination for election to Presidentship of India. He calls this an act of grave judicial impropriety (p. 594).

About Mr. Mehr Chand Mahajan, Mr. Setalvad says that he was rough and brusque and very assertive at times making things difficult not only for counsel appearing before him but for his colleagues on the Bench (p. 152). About Mahajan's treatment of counsel appearing before him Mr. Setalvad says, that it was often peremptory and at times discourteous, and created great dissatisfaction among the members of the Bar. Even Bakshi Tek Chand in whose chamber Chief Justice Mahajan had read in old days at Lahore was not spared. Mahajan's manner sometimes almost amounted to insulting the members of the Bar appearing before him. Mr. Setalvad recalls one incident. "I remember his asking a senior Punjab lawyer, who was urging an argument after the Chief Justice had repeatedly rejected it, 'How many years have you been at the Bar?' The lawyer replied with natural pride that he had been at the bar for over thirty years. Quick came the Chief Justice's sharp retort: 'you have wasted them all'" (pp. 204, 205). Lawyers were not the only persons against whom his rough ways were directed. Even his brother Judges were many times, made targets of his brusqueness. This behaviour of Mr. Mahajan made him extremely unpopular, so much so that the members of the Bar were opposed to a portrait of the Chief Justice being presented on behalf of the Bar to the Court. But Setalvad is all praise of Mr. Mahajan as a person. Outside the Court he was most affable and pleasant and his hospitality knew no bounds. He had intense feeling and interest in his large family, which consisted of sixteen sons and daughters all living together happily under the beneficent regime of himself and his wife. He ruled his family like a paterfamilias. Mr. Setalvad, has shown a great respect to Chief Justice Mahajan's pronouncements in some notable cases involving constitutional points. But the last public act of Mr. Mahajan as one man—Commission over Maharashtra-Mysore Boundary Dispute was according to Mr. Setalvad, a failure. Neither Maharashtra nor Mysore was pleased. Mr. Setalvad says of this, that Mahajan totally disregarding all settled notions had made allocations of territories which do not seem to have satisfied either party (p. 206).

Of all the Chief Justices Mr. B. P. Sinha comes off the worst. Mr. Setalvad has remarked about him that his knowledge of the Constitution and constitutional law was meagre and that he had earned reputation while in Nagpur of being a "Shirker" because he avoided delivering judgments (p. 428). Mr. Setalvad is also very critical of Mr. Sinha's acceptance of directorship in certain private firms after retirement and his attempt to influence promotions in Bihar subordinate judiciary (p. 500).

In the controversy on the question whether the President can disregard the advice of the Prime Minister, Mr. Setalvad has definite views. According to him the advice tendered is binding on the President. The question of their respective powers had arisen at the time of giving assent to the Hindu Code Bill (pp. 170-172).

Even Mr. Nehru and Mr. Krishna Menon are not spared from denunciation for their conduct in interfering with judicial process in the Nanavati's case (435-441).

The book contains some stringent criticism of the Indian judiciary at the highest level, by a person who had a first hand knowledge of things and matters. It is a reflection on the modern trends. We think that such judicial improprieties are the result of too much executive interference in the administration of law.

In between pages the reader comes across refreshing passages of personal and family reminiscences.

The book is divided into chapters, according to periods. It is written in a lucid language. Our politicians and Judges would greatly profit by going through the pages of this "post mortem dissection" of public men and their activities. Our judiciary and the public at large may be shocked by some revelations made by Mr. Setalvad. But such occasional shock treatment, would do immense good to the morale of the judiciary. After all it is the independence of the Judges, specially of the highest Court of Judicature that is the bulwark of any Constitution.

R.G.D.

LAW OF BIAS AND MALA FIDES (JUDICIAL AND ADMINISTRATIVE). By Anand Swarup Misra, Advocate, and Retd. Dy. Secretary, U. P. Government. With a Foreword by Justice Jagdish Sahai, Allahabad High Court. 1970. Eastern Book Company, 34 Lalbagh, Lucknow. Pp. xxix and 274, Price, Rs. 17.50.

That the creation of a large number of tribunals and authorities performing judicial or quasi-judicial functions by the side of the ordinary courts of law and the larger functions nowadays being performed by the executive authority of the State make it imperative for their adjudications to be completely free from bias and mala fides is the theme of the comprehensive study under review. It deals with the subject in an analytical manner with the aid of Indian, English and foreign rulings.

2. Since the commencement of the Constitution of India, the rule of law and the rules of natural justice have been increasingly applied by the Courts to quasi-judicial as well as administrative decisions. Administrative officers have at times to pass quasi-judicial orders or administrative orders which affect the citizen's fundamental or ordinary civil rights as well as pass disciplinary orders. In the judicial sphere, of course, enactments make specific provision for eliminating bias on the part of the presiding officers.

3. The law of bias and mala fides issues from the principle of natural justice that no man shall be a judge in his own cause. According to these principles, which are analogous to the American "due process of law", every person must have reasonable notice of the case he has to meet; he must be given reasonable opportunity of being heard in defence; the trying authority must act impartially, objectively and without bias, and the trial must be held in good faith, not arbitrarily or unreasonably. By way of 'judicial review', the law courts examine the decisions of Government and its administrative organs, including public bodies and other autonomous institutions, as well as legislative enactments and the rules made by Government or any other authority empowered by statute to frame rules. As in America, so in India the citizen trusts the Courts more than the administration and relies upon the courts for a fair treatment of the individual. On the other hand, the rule of law, adjusted to the 'felt necessities of the times' binds the executive as well as the judiciary.

4. In the present study the author discusses the questions of pecuniary and non-pecuniary interests raising assumptions of bias, the inference of judicial bias, judicial neutrality and civil service anonymity, influencing judges and contempt of court, and judicial intemperance and impropriety. Bias in disciplinary proceedings before domestic tribunals, pro-managerial bias in industrial adjudication, and safeguards against judicial bias, administrative bias, and political bias, are also covered. Among the remedies against biased or malicious orders are mentioned constitutional remedies like the writs, remedies under Specific Relief Act, suit for damages, penal remedies, proceedings for contempt of court, transfer of case, and void and voidable decisions. Three of the chapters consider a standard case on bias and administrative justice (Kraipak v. Union of India) and administrative partiality and abuse of power (unreported cases), and the elimination of bias under the rule of law.

5. Words and phrases like administrative decision, audi alteram partem, Coram Non Judice, Quasi-judicial authority and decision, subordinate legislation, and ultra vires, are explained in an appendix, and there is a discussion of the ethical sources of the law of bias and mala fides in another appendix. The bibliography, table of cases, and subject index, complete the usefulness of the volume.

6. With the large number of leading authorities cited on the subject, the book should be useful to lawyers, members of judicial tribunals, and others interested in this branch of the law.

DISCIPLINARY ACTION AGAINST GOVERNMENT SERVANTS AND ITS REMEDIES. By Kripa Dayal Srivastava, MA., LL.B. and Naresh Kumar Srivastava, Advocates. 3rd Edition. 1970. Eastern Book Company, 34 Lalbagh, Lucknow. Pp. Lix & 857, Price, Rs. 35.

The substantial volume of commentaries under review investigates, in particular, the subject of employment in Government service in relation to punishment. The authors devote separate chapters to recruitment, conditions of service and rules of enquiry, reasonable opportunity, penalties, and remedies, as well as to the topics of the Constitution and Government employment, and the Public Service Commission, each of the chapters being preceded by an exhaustive synopsis. First they deal with the master and servant relationship, wrongful termination of service, and tortious acts of civil servants, covering the rules for recruitment, the appointing authority, period of probation and confirmation, services under contract and their termination, Local authority and Corporation employees, and employees of statutory companies and corporations. They then consider breach of rules, transfer, resignation and retirement, promotion, seniority and Government Servants and fundamental rights.

2. This is followed by an examination of preliminary enquiry and its scope, charge-sheet, explanation, necessity for a departmental enquiry, bias, natural justice, mode of enquiry and burden of proof. The nature of penalties, punishments and their imposition, dismissal, removal and reduction in rank, are discussed, as well as appeal in disciplinary proceedings, suits in pursuit of remedies, and damages.

3. Generally speaking Government servants have to be obedient, faithful, careful, honest, punctual, well-behaved and reasonably competent, and the present work enumerates the matters that come under 'discipline,' every breach of which may amount to misconduct. Are there no remedies or safeguards, it may be asked, available to Government servants? Art. 310 of the Constitution invests the State with absolute control over the tenure of every State servant, subject to Art. 311. Article 311 holds that no one shall be dismissed or removed by an authority subordinate to that by which he was appointed, and no one shall be dismissed, removed or reduced in rank unless he has been given a reasonable opportunity (the observance of the principles of natural justice) of showing cause against the action proposed to be taken. The Supreme Court regards these orders as punishment, so that if the termination of service or reduction in rank is brought about otherwise than by way of punishment, the protection of Art. 311 will not be available. But this would appear to be a distinction without a difference. It is possible that the administrative authorities do not regard a particular impugned order as punitive, but so long as the ultimate effect of the order is of a penal nature, that would seem to attract the protection of Art. 311; else the protection would seem to be illusory. It was the opinion of Justice Bose that the Article cannot be evaded by saying in a set of rules that a particular action is not intended as a penalty. Why, he asked, should we give greater sanctity and more binding force to rules and regulations than to our own Constitution? A more categorical assertion of the control of the judiciary over administrative and quasi-judicial decisions is perhaps indicated. In this connection the authors suggest that all orders affecting the pecuniary interest of Government employees should be subject to scrutiny by an independent judicial machinery, by way of appeal or revision. As it is, the protection of Art. 311 is procedural rather than substantive and it has been whittled down to a mere formality.

4. The arrangement of the latest edition of the present book remains the same as before, and there have been additions of case law and headnotes. It contains a table of cases, index, and several appendices which reproduce the Rules of All India Services, Central Services, Indian Foreign Service, and other Services.

LAW AND PRACTICE OF SALES TAX IN RAJASTHAN. By V. K. Singhal, B.A., LL.B., A.C.A., S.L. Kakkar, I.A.S. (Retd.), & G. G. Mundra, B. Com., A. C. A. 1970. Metro Trading Corporation, Film Colony, S. M. S. Highway, Jaipur 3. Pp. iv; 212; viii & 354; 172 & v. Price, Rs. 30.

Sales Tax is a permanent source of substantial revenue to the States and has therefore been generally adopted to meet the increasing expenditure on social services and development needs. It was first introduced in Tamil Nadu in 1939 to make up for the loss of revenue from Prohibition, and all the other States which followed suit now look up to the Tax as the single largest source of revenue. The present volume is an analytical summary and detailed commentary on the Rajasthan Sales Tax Act 1954, with the amendments and legal interpretations as in force on 15th September, 1970.

2. Although under the Rajasthan Sales Tax Act, 1954 it was a single point tax payable by each successive dealer in the series of sales, provision has now been made for a multiple point of taxation, and the Commercial Tax Officer, who is the Tribunal which makes the assessment, has to act judicially. As an administrative Tribunal his decision should be governed not only by the relevant laws and rules of procedure but also by the principles of natural justice, a doubly important thing because the tribunal may not have the training and experience of a judicial Court.

3. Sections 3.7 of the Act, which contains 29 Sections, deal with the liability of a dealer registered under the Central Sales Tax Act 1956, the rate of tax, burden of proof, registration of dealer, and submission of return. The topics of assessment, payment and recovery of tax, determination of disputed questions, appeals, revisions offences and penalties, and rectification of mistakes and indemnity, are covered in Ss. 10.18, and three other Sections are concerned with the power of inspection of records and seizure of books of account, refunds, and Court-fees on appeals applications, and other proceedings under the Act. The Rajasthan Sales Tax Rules, which form the latter part of the book, specify the assessing and appellate authorities and their jurisdiction, the point at which the tax is payable, registration certificate, return of turnover, mode of assessment and notice of demand, and appeal and revision procedure. Rules 12-16 explain the powers of officers, procedure and penalties, practitioners and persons authorised to appear before Sales Tax authorities, the administration of check posts and barriers, and court-fees.

4. The volume has a table of cases and index, and includes the 45 forms prescribed under the Rules, as well as the rate of tax, list of goods and persons exempted, and the proviso sections.

5. That all changes under fiscal statutes should be defined through clear and unambiguous language is a well settled rule of law; else, it would be difficult for a lawyer or a trader to keep abreast of amendments. In fact there have been so far twenty-six notifications amending the Rajasthan Act, and it is well, therefore, that all cases of importance of the Rajasthan High Court and the Rajasthan Board of Revenue have been given, in addition to the decisions of the Supreme Court and other High Courts. The book should be of value to the legal profession, the members of the mercantile community, and the officers of the Department.

DIGESTED ANALYSIS OF SALES TAX LAW. By Arvind M. Thakkar, B.Sc., LL.B., L.S.G.D., Advocate, High Court, 1970. Meghdoot Tax Publication Bureau; D/77 Chittaranjan Nagar (V-5), Vidya Vihar, Bombay 77. In Three Volumes. Vol. I (A-C), pp. i & 466. Price Rs. 30.

The Law of Sales Tax is Judge-made law to a greater extent than statute law, and the present author has tried a praiseworthy maiden attempt—to examine it through the medium of the substantial body of case law that has grown up around it. The Sales Tax Law and the Central Sales Tax Law as amended by the Amending Act of 1969 have been analysed subjectwise, aided by a ratio of selected cases of the Supreme Court and the State High Courts reported in the Sales Tax cases from 1938 to 1.10.1970 as well as all India Reports, and a digest of all cases decided by the Maharashtra Sales Tax Tribunal between 1965 and 1969 along with selected cases decided by it from 1947 to 1965 and between 1969 and October 1970; selected decisions of the Gujarat Sales Tax Tribunal have also been included. Several judgments under the Income Tax Law applicable to the principles of Sales Tax, selected from the Income Tax Reports from 1933 to 1st October 1970, have also been noticed.

2. The twelve headings in the first volume cover Absconders, Advocate, Affidavit, Agriculturist, Appeals and Revision Applications, Assessment, Benami Transactions, Best Judge Assessment, Burden of Proof, Central Sales Tax, Composition, and Constitutional Validation. They deal with the right of pleading and advocacy, service of notice to an advocate, and default of an advocate in filing an appeal and in appearance before the assessing and appellate authorities. They refer to the award of costs, limitation, maintainability, admissibility of fresh evidence at appellate stage, appealable and non-appealable orders, part-payment, powers and duties of appellate authorities and procedure in and right of appeal. Notice of assessment, limitation period, assessment officers and orders, and procedure and general principles of assessment are described. Other headings focus attention on the nature of benami transactions, sale price under Central Sales Tax Act and registration, penalty, forfeiture and procedure in appeal under it.

3. The Sales Tax laws applied by each State on inter-State sales differ widely, but most States recognise the need for an uniform classification of goods and commodities in order to facilitate such taxation. Though immediate co-ordination of the Sales Tax policies may not be possible, it is at least up to the tax officers to get themselves acquainted with the implications of the various Court decisions on tax issues. A knowledge of important Court decisions, which should be available at one's fingertips, is at least as important as the knowledge of the bare provisions of the law. The arrangement of the decisions topic-wise, therefore, has increased the usefulness of the Digest.

4. The various judicial decisions are arranged in a chronological order for purposes of easy reference, and the Digest should be found quite useful by legal practitioners as well as dealers. It carries an useful table of cases and index. R.S.S.

LAW IN A CHANGING SOCIETY. By W. Friedmann. 1st Indian Reprint of Abridged Edition, 1970. University Book House, 15-U.B., Bungalow Road, Delhi 7. Pp. 475. Price, Rs. 3.25.

In newly developed and developing countries the adjustment of traditional and static social and legal institutions to the needs and demands of societies striving for economic development and social advancement has become a problem of supreme importance. The present work approaches the subject with the conviction that the law must, in contemporary conditions, respond to social change if it is to fulfil its function as a significant instrument of social order.

2. Of the six parts in the book, the introductory one presents some general reflections on the inter-relation of legal and social change in the context of different political systems and different social pressures, followed by an analysis of the role of the courts in the adaptation of the law to social change. The second part deals with the impact of social change on legal institutions like property, contract, tort, criminal law and family law. Social change is shown sometimes to affect the concept itself, for example, of property and contract, and at other times to put it to use for other purposes, eventually representing something entirely different from its earlier meaning. In Part 3 the metamorphosis and legal eclipse of the ideal of freedom of trade is traced in the field of anti-trust and other public controls, and the growth of corporate power is analysed regarding its impact on the State and on the individual. Similarly, the three-fold pressure on the individual through the commercial corporation, the labour union, and the demands of State security, is analysed.

3. Part 4, on public law, is concerned with the growth of the administrative process, Government liability, administrative discretion, and the problem of administrative remedies and procedures. The author makes an extensive comparison with the principles and institutions of the continental systems of administrative law. The part on international law makes a survey of the present international legal institutions and relations which are affected by divergencies of social organisations, and briefly estimates the kind of international society into which we are moving.

4. The last chapter seeks to reassess the current meaning of the rule of law, taking as its theme the triangular tension between the claims of the individual, the group, and the State. In this connection, the deliberations and conclusions of the Fourth Commonwealth Conference on Law which met in New Delhi in January last, are worth noting. The Conference was anxious about the statutory exclusion of State liability in civil law and about the 'shockingly short' periods of limitation for filing cases against public authorities, and it was against the extension of State privileges to public corporations and semi-Government bodies. It considered that, subject to narrow exceptions, there should be no State immunity from a civil suit, either in tort or in contract.

5. In each of the areas surveyed the author has concentrated on the most significant challenges of social change and illustrated them by corresponding responses—or lack of them—in legislation, case law and legal thinking. The treatment is comparative and is based on the different common law and civil law systems, including those of Germany, France and Russia.

6. The Notes, Bibliography, and Index at the end should also be referred to. R.S.S.

CAN THE STATE KILL ITS CITIZEN?

By K. G. Subrahmanyam, Advocate.
With an Introduction by S. Mohan Kumaramangalam, Bar-at-Law, Madras Law Journal Office, Madras. 4. 1969. Pp. 70, Price Rs. 2.

Dedicated to Mahatma Gandhi in the year of his Centenary, the present neat booklet discusses in all its aspects the need for abolishing the penalty of death in judicial decisions. Although it is still being continued in India in spite of its abolition in 26 other countries and the United Kingdom, from which last mentioned country the original framers of the Indian Penal Code drew their inspiration, the opposition to it from the ethical point of view is becoming more and more pronounced. Is the killing of a human being absolutely necessary, it is asked, in the administration of justice and in the protection of society?

2. The author begins with an exposition of Mahatma Gandhi's views on the death penalty, examines its usefulness as a deterrent and highlights the fallibility of human decisions, the errors and malpractices during investigations and trial and the possibilities of errors in passing a sentence of death. He deals also with the manner in which execution is carried out, the condition of the condemned man, the execution scenes, and the psychic aspect of the whole affair.

3. That capital punishment acts as a deterrent is an erroneous theory, says Mr. Kumaramangalam, in his introduction, which by the way, is very well-written, informing and also thought-provoking who quotes evidence to prove that homicide rates are conditioned by factors other than the death penalty, and the abolition of the penalty does not give rise to an increase in the incidence of murder. The chief deterrent to crime is not, it would appear, the barbarity of the punishment as such, but certainty of conviction, which becomes uncertain if the punishment is barbarous. In comparison with the total number of murders in the last 10 years in Madras State, for example, the percentage of convictions has been from 40.55, but the percentage of executions has been less than 3. Do not these figures, ask Mr. Kumaramangalam, demonstrate the unlikelihood of the death penalty being enforced and thereby reduce its value as a deterrent? He gives figures to show that, during the six years, 1945-1950, when the capital sentence was kept in abeyance in Travancore and Cochin, the incidence of murder cases was not higher but lower (956 : 967).

4. On the other hand, the author deplores that while the framers of the I. P. C. wanted the death penalty to be enforced sparingly, the presiding judges impose that penalty normally and award life imprisonment in special cases. However that may be, with modern criminology placing all the emphasis on reformation and rehabilitation rather than on retribution, the death penalty should be fast losing the ground under its feet. The criminal, it is now accepted, is essentially a product of society and the aim of punishment should be to reform him.

5. The present booklet has been written with a passionate belief and purpose behind it, and the author's thesis is sustained by arguments and facts cogently presented, so that it provides good intellectual rabelum to those who want to abolish the death penalty as well as to those who are for its continuance. A CRITIQUE OF MODERN HINDU LAW. By J. Duncan M. Derrett, D. C. L. (Oxon), Ph. D. (London), Professor of Oriental Laws, University of London. 1970. N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., 164 Samaldas Gandhi Marg, Bombay 2. Pp. xlviii & 460, Price Rs. 35.

Professor J. Duncan M. Derrett needs little introduction to the reader. He is the author of Religion, Law and the State in India, and Editor of An Introduction to Legal Systems, both of which have been reviewed in these columns. His present work constitutes a blueprint for the next stage in the development of Hindu Law. The first step in the provision of a common family law for India's citizens was taken in the enactment of the 'Hindu Code', and the next step must be to re-orientate the entire system in such a manner that the majority community may design a uniform civil code worthy of a secular State. The author, who has studied the laws of the Hindus for over twenty years here sets out to test, rule by rule, topic by topic, the quality of the Hindu law, judged by Hindu standards. At the same time he brings up-to-date his account of the system in his Introduction to Modern Hindu Law (1963). Where decisions conflict, he explains which is the right one, and why.

2. The author formulates 14 fundamental principles as our touchstone. They are : Law must be capable of being known; law must be capable of being foreseen; law must enable rather than disenable; law favours the termination of disputes; law must correspond to facts; law should facilitate the moral principles of the nation and aim at the unity of the nation; law must be educative and in keeping with the principles of the Constitution, and the parties should be treated for what they are. Further a variety of regimes or ways of life must be tolerated and the moral values of the Hindus must be upheld. This chapter has an appendix giving the original texts (in Sanskrit) of Hindu ethics with a short commentary.

3. The substantive chapters of this book commence with the joint family because it is believed to be the most characteristic and fundamental institution of the Hindus as known to the law. It is sometimes called an ancient 'welfare state mechanism', a laboratory in which the members are continually subjected to education for living and to an examination of character. The concepts of Stridhanam, bequests, shares at partition and maintenance rights of women are discussed, followed by an examination of the basis of succession and testamentary power, the law of intestate succession, charitable bequests, construction of wills, the manager's position and family arrangements. The topics of marriage ceremonies, quarrels, separation and reconciliation, divorce, and alimony are then dealt with, while the last chapter deals with the acquisition and disposition as well as succession and management of religious endowments. Among the four appendices regarding Anglo-Hindu law and matrimonial causes has been included a summary of recommendations for the amendment of statutes.

4. Believed to be the first systematic critique of its kind, it is based on principles which are carefully set out and justified with full documentation. The rest of the book provides illustrated talking points, one to every paragraph. The index of cases, index of topics and names, and index of statutes, are very useful. The author has made use of recent decisions, as they reflect the state of the law better than the pronouncements of the Privy Council and High Courts of long ago, and the citation of the law reports follows the model normally used in India, although the author has unequivocally expressed his views against the innovation of omitting "A.I.R." before the citation of All India Reporter.

5. It is hoped that the members of the Bar and Bench will find the book highly useful for appeal cases. R.S.S.

THE LAW OF CENTRAL SALES TAX. By Shambu Dayal Singh, M.A., LL.B., Formerly Judge, High Court, Allahabad 1971. Eastern Book Company, 34 Lal Bagh, Lucknow. Pp. xxxix & 666. Price, Rs. 30.

A sale of goods consists of various elements such as goods, agreement to sell, transfer of property in the goods, consideration for sale and delivery of the goods and, in a completed sale, they are often distributed over more than one State. On the ground of territorial nexus with anyone or more of these elements each State began to levy a tax on the transaction of sale, and Article 286 of the Indian Constitution therefore sought to check this evil; but its interpretation met with difficulties. While permitting State legislatures to tax the sale of goods in the States, the Constitution (Article 286) placed restrictions on the levy of the tax on inter-State sales and prohibited it on sales which took place outside the State or in the course of export and import. Several States, however, attempted to bring within the ambit of their laws sales outside their territorial limits if the goods happened to be manufactured or produced within the State. This led to an amendment of the Constitution and the passing of the Central Sales Tax Act 1956, which defines 'inter-State sales or purchases', 'Sales in or outside the State', 'Sales in the course of import or export', and 'goods essential for the life of the community', it also levies a tax on inter-State sales, though for the benefit of the States.

2. The Central Sales Tax Act, 1956 having been enacted against the background of the law which developed under Art. 286 of the Constitution, that law has been discussed in Part I of the present publication under the heads of constitutional provisions, sales inside or outside the State, sales or purchases in the course of export or import, inter-State sales or purchases and essential goods. Part II reproduces the text of the Act, followed by an exhaustive commentary. Section-wise each chapter in Part I and each commentary being preceded by a useful synopsis. Full notice has been taken of all the amendments up-to-date, including the Central Sales Tax Amending Act 1969 and the proposed Central Sales Tax Amending Bill 1970. The commentary analyses and explains the different provisions of the Act in the light of the accepted principles of interpretation, all connected information has been duly incorporated where necessary, and the case law has been brought up-to-date. So far as the Rules are concerned, in order to keep the size of the book within limits, only Central Rules and such State Rules as apply to centrally administered areas are given, but the State Rules are available in commentaries on the State Acts.

3. Section 4 of the Central Sales Tax Act 1956 formulates the principles for determining when a sale or purchase takes place in or outside a State, and Ss. 6, 8 and 9, impose the tax on inter-State sales, prescribe the rate of tax and provide for its levy, collection and distribution. Sections 14 and 15 relate to the imposition of tax on certain goods declared to be of special importance in inter-State trade. The other Sections cover registration, the manner of calculating turnover, offences and penalties, cognizance of offences and indemnity. The III Part of the book contains the Appendices, which give all the amending Acts, Rules, Ordinances and Orders and it includes a table of cases and index.

4. The publication should be highly useful to members of the Bench and the Bar as well as the business community. R.S.S.

STATE AND RIGHTS OF MEN. By R. G. Chaturvedi, M. A., LL.B., Advocate. 1971. Metropolitan Book Co., Pvt. Ltd, 1 Netaji Subhash Marg, Delhi 6. Pp. xi & 247. Price Rs. 20.

"Can the State abridge or take away all the rights of men, including those claimed to be fundamental and inviolable?" is the line of inquiry which the author of the volume under review sets out to pursue. He first traces the growth of political consciousness in man, which gives rise to the institution of the State, and then investigates whether the State is an institution and in what body sovereignty resides ultimately. He examines the basic principles on which a constitution is contrived to work. He takes a juristic view of the rights of men in the phenomenon of the State, whatever its constitution, and restates the contractual theory of the State. The constitution is a contract reduced into writing, and its declarations of the rights of men relate to rights which are anterior to the constitution itself. The contract, says the author, is not a guarantee of the rights but the rights are a guarantee of the contract.

2. The political consciousness of man, the family as a facsimile of polity, analogy between family and polity, and the Hindu undivided family, are first discussed, followed by an examination of the State as a politically administered society, the theories of thinkers from Plato to Lenin regarding the State, the origin of rights, rights that the State can touch, and the declaration of rights in constitutions. The contractual basis of rights, the political contract, the constitution as a contract of the State, social contract theory of natural rights, and the preservation of natural rights, are analysed. Four chapters cover the institution of Government and the rights of men, sovereignty, constitution and legislation, altering the constitution and Parliamentary supremacy. The concepts of fundamental rights and rights to life and liberty, property and equality, are explained, followed by the concluding chapter on rights under the Indian Constitution. The topics covered include the Preamble, the philosophy of justice, judiciary as arbiter of rights, constitutional law and ordinary law, and rights determinable by another constituent body; which cannot be Parliament.

3. The Constitution is the expression of the sovereign will of the people, and the legislature, the executive, and the judiciary are the instruments whose powers and obligations are demarcated by the Constitution, with the judiciary as the sentinel on the qui vive to see that they do not transgress on the bounds of each other and to ensure that the provisions of the Constitution are not violated by them. But the same sovereign will of the people has made a provision in the Constitution whereby it has made a limited delegation of its powers (Art. 368) to the legislature for amending the Constitution. The fundamental rights, however, have been written down in the Constitution by the original makers of the Constitution, the people of India. (See the Preamble to the Constitution), and they can be curtailed, amended or removed only by the people expressing themselves through another constituent body or convention. The legislature being, therefore, incompetent to tamper with these fundamental rights, the Supreme judiciary steps in when it tries to do so (Refer to Golaknath case, Bank Nationalisation case and Princes' Purse case.) It has been observed by the author that it would be "sheer inanity" to suggest a double step amendment first by using the amendatory powers of Art. 368 to remove the obstacle under Art. 13 (2) and then to repeal or remove any of the fundamental rights. It is true that in cases of constistitutional amendment of the Supreme Judiciary has to use its powers of judicial review with restraint and care. In any given case it can be a matter of opinion whether the judiciary has discharged its responsibility properly and well, but it can admit of no two opinions that what has been written down in the Constitution by the sovereign will of the people as fundamental rights can be removed only by the people expressing themselves in a new constituent body, and not by the legislature itself.

The book contains a useful bibliography and index. R.S.S.

ANNUAL SURVEY OF COMMONWEALTH LAW, 1968. Editor; H. W. R. Wade, Q. C., LL. D., D. C. L., Professor of English Law, University of Oxford. Butterworth & Co. (Publishers) Ltd., 88 Kingsway, London W. C. 2. (In India: Eastern Law House Pvt. Ltd., 54 Ganesh Chunder Avenue, Calcutta 13.) Pp. lxxxiv & 857. Price, Rs. 180.

Prepared under the auspices of the British Institute of International and Comparative Law and the Faculty of Law in the University of Oxford, the volume under review, which is the fourth in the series, covers material received at the Bodleian Law Library, Oxford, between 1st July 1967 and 30th June 1968, with occasional additions; Where possible, reference is also made to appeals against judgments noted in it. Mr. B. K. Chandrasekhar B. A., B. L. (Mysore), LL. M. (Leeds), assisted in classifying material from India. Like its predecessors, the present volume aims at presenting a high level of commentary on a wide range of legal decisions and enactments throughout the British Commonwealth, which constitute the most enduring common links between the different member countries. Whatever the vicissitudes of the Commonwealth ties may be in other spheres, collaboration in the professional and academic fields has proceeded uninterrupted. An Indian lawyer is more at home with English, Australian, Canadian and other reports of decided cases than with European, Latin American, or other Asian laws and judicial decisions. And the Fourth Commonwealth Law Conference, which met in New Delhi in January 1971, was only an expression of this common identity of the legal and judicial systems in the countries of the Commonwealth.

2. Of the twenty essays in the present Survey, the first three deal with constitutional law, fundamental rights and civil liberties, and administrative law, and the next six dwell on criminal law, evidence and procedure; torts; contract; real property; trusts, and succession. Industrial property, commercial law, company law and partnership, monopolies and restrictive trade practices, and taxation, are the subjects of the next five essays, the last six contributions covering family law, labour law, civil procedure (including courts and evidence), conflict of laws, international law, and maritime law. Written by a group of outstanding lawyers and academic men, each of the essays has a summary and bibliography accompanying it.

3. The political situation in the different Indian States during the period under reference revealed to what extent the conventions of the British type of Parliamentary Government depend on the good faith and respect for the common good, of the chief actors in Governmental change-overs. In the matter of fundamental rights, the writer reverts to the much-debated decision in the Golaknath case, and that the doctrine of 'prospective overruling' is a more or less logical extension of the doctrine of "Stare Decisis" is highlighted. There have also been a number of judicial decisions which have set aside orders and rules which offend against the constitutional provisions prohibiting discrimination in public employment, in the Universities and in penalties for tax offences. Besides, the power of the President to suspend fundamental rights during emergencies only suspends the right to move the courts to enforce such rights, and does not do away with them altogether. Regarding administrative control of a company, the Government should not appoint an inspector to investigate into the affairs of a company merely on suspicion, and in adjudication, an industrial tribunal should not be fettered by the limitations of an ordinary court-social justice and industrial harmony should be the impelling motives, and contractual obligations should be secondary.

4. In the book before us we have an invaluable library of information on Commonwealth law, providing a comprehensive coverage of useful authorities and comparisons not easily available elsewhere in one volume. It is hard to minimise its value to the lawyer advising on a doubtful or disputed point of law, or arguing or judging appeals.

5. The useful table of cases, table of statutes subject index, and territorial index, should also be mentioned. R.S.S.

APPELLATE JURISDICTION OF THE SUPREME COURT IN REGARD TO CIVIL MATTERS UNDER ARTICLE 133 OF THE CONSTITUTION.

NOTE BY THE LAW COMMISSION OF INDIA.

[NOTE :—The Law Commission which is at present engaged in a consideration of the question whether the right of appeal to the Supreme Court in civil matters under Art. 133 (1) (a) and (b) of the Constitution should be abolished, has prepared a note on the subject for eliciting the views of interested persons and bodies. The note is printed below. Replies to the note may be sent to the Joint Secretary and Legal Adviser, Law Commission, Government of India, 'A' Wing, 7th Floor, Shastri Bhavan, Dr. Rajendra Prasad Road, New Delhi-1, as early as possible—Ed.]

This note deals with a proposal regarding the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in regard to civil matters under Art. 133 of the Constitution. The proposal is to repeal sub-clauses (a) and (b) of clause (1) of the article, and thereby limit this jurisdiction to cases in which the High Court certifies that the case is a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court under sub-clause (c), without reference to the amount or value of the subject matter of the dispute.

2. The Government of India had in 1969 introduced a Bill in the Rajya Sabha, the object of which was to enhance the amount mentioned in sub-clause (a) from Rs. 20,000/- to Rs. 1,00,000/-. This Bill* was passed by the Rajya Sabha on the 3rd August 1970, but owing to the dissolution of the Lok Sabha before it could consider the Bill, the Bill lapsed. A copy of the Bill, as passed by the Rajya Sabha, is attached for reference. (Annexure A).

3. Article 133, as is well known, was based on the provisions of Ss. 109 and 110 of the Civil Procedure Code which formerly regulated appeals to the Privy Council. The important differences between the article and the sections were—

(i) the enhancement of the pecuniary limit from ten thousand rupees to "twenty thousand rupees or such other sum as may be specified in that behalf by Parliament by law";

(ii) the right of appeal, formerly restricted to decrees and final orders passed on appeal by the High Court, now made available against "any judgment, decree or final order in a civil proceeding of a High Court", thus including final orders passed by a High Court in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction;

(iii) the right of appeal on a certificate of fitness, which was formerly available against any order of the High Court, now restricted to final orders of the High Court.

4. The raising of the pecuniary limit to Rs. 20,000 in the Constitution was obviously made in view of the depreciation of the rupee, but it was by no means proportionate to the fall in the purchasing power of the rupee. No appreciable fall in the number of appeals to the Supreme Court could have been expected from the small increase in the pecuniary limit, because the Constitution, for the first time, conferred extensive writ jurisdiction on High Courts under Art. 226. There is a right of appeal under Art. 133 against any judgment or final order passed by a High Court under Art. 226 if this proceeding can be classified as "a civil proceeding"; and it is now well settled that it can be so classified if it deals with civil rights conferred either by civil law or by statute.

5. The present position, therefore, as regards the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in civil matters is as follows :—

(1) There is an unrestricted right of appeal to the Supreme Court where the value of the subject-matter of the dispute is not less than Rs. 20,000 or where the order of the High Court involves directly or indirectly some claim or question respecting property of that amount or value —

(a) if the judgment or the final order of the High Court is passed in exercise of its original jurisdiction (ordinary or extraordinary),

(b) if in exercise of its appellate jurisdiction, the High Court reverses the judgment or order of the Court below.

(2) Where the appellate judgment of the High Court is one of affirmance, there must also be "some substantial question of law" involved.

(3) Where the High Court certifies that the case is fit for appeal to the Supreme Court, the pecuniary limit does not apply.

Judicial decisions have made it clear that the test for grant of a certificate of fitness under sub-clause (c) of clause (1) of Art. 133 (corresponding to clause (c) of old E. 109, Civil Procedure Code) is much more rigorous than the test of a "substantial question of law" required for a certificate to appeal against a judgment of affirmance under clause (2) of Art. 133.[†]

6. In India, the conferment of a right of appeal to the highest tribunal based mainly on the value of the subject matter in dispute has an historical origin. As early as 1726, when Mayors' Courts were functioning in the three presidency towns of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay, an appeal was provided to the King-in-Council in cases where the subject matter of the litigation was worth more than 1000 pagodas. After the establishment of the Supreme Court of Calcutta by the Regulating Act of 1773, the Charter of the Supreme Court provided for an appeal to the King-in-Council where the subject matter of the dispute exceeded the sum of one thousand pagodas. In Bombay, however, the pecuniary limit for appeal to the King-in-Council was fixed at 3000 Bombay rupees. In the mofussil, where the corresponding High Courts for civil litigation were the Sadar Diwani Adalats, a pecuniary limit was fixed for the purpose of appeal to the King-in-Council, but it varied from place to place.

7. By an Order in Council dated 1838, uniformity was introduced, and an appeal to the King-in-Council was permitted only where the subject matter in dispute was at least Rs. 10,000 company rupees in value. This minimum value continued the same after the constitution in 1861 of the High Courts (which replaced the old Supreme Courts and Sadar Diwani Adalats), and it was incorporated in the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 notwithstanding the considerable fall in the purchasing power of the rupee since 1838. The makers of the Constitution maintained the principle of valuation, though they raised the amount to Rs. 20,000 and indicated that Parliament might raise it further to any extent by an ordinary law.

8. The main advantages of an unrestricted right of appeal to the highest Court in the country may be said to be—

(1) It ensures uniformity in interpretation of the laws, thereby avoiding the confusion which would result where the High Courts in the States give conflicting decisions.

(2) Correct determination is more likely to be obtained in the highest Court than in the lower Courts.

(3) There is always a possibility of error, and there should be a superior Court to correct the error.

9. On the other hand, the existence of a right of appeal based on valuation is open to the following criticism:—

(1) It discriminates unfairly between the rich litigant and the poor.

(2) It is well known that important questions of law do not depend on the value of the subject-matter in dispute.

(3) It promotes the leading of perjured evidence as regards valuation, and causes considerable delay in the High Court in determining valuation for the purpose of appeal. It is notorious that litigants under-value the subject-matter for the purpose of court-fee, and then try to over-value the same for the purpose of appeal to the Supreme Court.

(4) It causes avoidable congestion in the Supreme Court, and thereby impairs the prompt discharge of its primary functions, namely, the grant of speedy relief in those cases which involve (a) interpretation of the Constitution (Article 132), and (b) enforcement of fundamental rights (Article 92) in regard to which this Court has (in the words of Chief Justice Patanjali Sastri) "been assigned the role of a sentinel on the qui vive".^{††}

10. Uniformity in the interpretation of civil law, as indeed of all laws, throughout the country is essential. But this uniformity can always be brought about either by the High Court granting a certificate of fitness under sub-clause (c) of Article 133 (1), or by the Supreme Court granting special leave under Article 136. As regards the other two advantages also, the power of the Supreme Court to grant special leave under Article 136 may suffice.

§ Para. 8 above.

11. An English Chief Justice observed long ago that "it is the glory and happiness of our excellent Constitution that, to prevent any injustice, no man is to be concluded by the first judgment; but that, if he apprehends himself to be aggrieved, he has another Court to which he can resort for relief". This principle will not be substantially jeopardised by the repeal of sub-clauses (a) and (b). Ordinary civil litigation reaches a High Court either in the first appellate stage or in the second appellate stage, according to the valuation of the subject matter of litigation. Hence, by the time the High Court disposes of the matter, the parties have had the benefit of at least one appeal on law and facts, and sometimes also a second appeal on questions of law. Even in those High Courts which have ordinary original civil jurisdiction, such as the High Courts of Calcutta, Bombay and Madras, if the original judgment is delivered by a single judge, there is always an unrestricted right of appeal to a Division Bench under the Letters Patent. It is true that if, in those High Courts, the original trial is held before a Division Bench, there will be no unrestricted right of appeal if sub-clauses (a) and (b) are repealed. But such original trials of civil suits before Division Benches are very rare indeed. However, if this aspect is considered important, a suitable provision on the subject could be made in Art. 133.

12. The proposed amendment is not intended to interfere with the appeal to the Supreme Court against orders passed by the High Court, where such a right is conferred by provisions in special laws.*† That right will not be affected in any way by the present proposals.

13. It may be said that by giving a right of appeal based solely on the test of value of the subject-matter—and that too—after an appeal to the High Court—the law gives an opportunity "to put the dice into the box for another throw".*‡ It only leads to heavy expense and delay in litigation, and to some extent, affects the prompt discharge by the Supreme Court of its primary functions.

14. A review of the existing position in England, France, U.S.A. and a few other countries with a federal constitution has been made, and the result briefly indicated in Annexure B. The value of the subject-matter in dispute at the final appellate stage is relevant in three countries, viz., Australia, Canada and Switzerland; in England, France, West Germany, Russia and the U.S.A., it is not.

15. The points for consideration are—

(i) does the existing position under Art. 133 require to be changed; and

(ii) if so, is it sufficient to enhance the valuation limit from the present 20,000 rupees to one lakh rupees, as proposed in the lapsed Bill (Annexure A); or

(iii) is it preferable to repeal sub-clauses (a) and (b) of Art. 133 (1) allowing appeals under that Article only on a certificate of fitness under sub-clause (c) [without prejudicing in any way the power of the Supreme Court to grant special leave under Art. 136], or

(iv) alternatively, in place of sub-clauses (a) and (b), should there be a provision for appeal from a judgment, decree or final order of a Division Bench of the High Court*§ exercising original jurisdiction (ordinary or extra-ordinary, e.g. on a writ petition) irrespective of value, or when above a certain value;

(v) whichever alternative is adopted, what should be the transitional provision as regards—

(a) matters pending in the High Court by way of appeal or revision or in its original jurisdiction, and

(b) matters pending in the High Court for the issue of a certificate on the basis of pecuniary valuation, would a provision on the lines of clause 4 of the lapsed Bill† be satisfactory?

16. It would be useful to know the extent to which each of the above alternative is likely to reduce the number of civil appeals before the Supreme Court. Detailed and upto date figures are not readily available. The following figures pertaining to the years 1966 and 1967 may afford some guidance:—

About one-third of the total number of civil appeals filed on certificates given under Art. 132 (1) or 133 (1) were on the basis of valuation only; and it may also be mentioned that the time taken in hearing and deciding such appeals is ordinarily more than the time taken in deciding an appeal under Art. 132 (1) or Art. 133 (1) (c).

ANNEXURE A

Bill No. XXXI-C of 1969.

THE SUPREME COURT (ENHANCEMENT OF VALUATION FOR CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION) BILL, 1970.

(As passed by the RAJYA SABHA on the 3rd August, 1970).

A Bill to enhance the amount or value of the subject matter of dispute for purposes of civil appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, and further to amend the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908.

Be it enacted by Parliament in the Twenty-first year of the Republic of India as follows:—

1. Short title and commencement.

(1) This Act may be called the Supreme Court (Enhancement of Valuation for Civil Appellate Jurisdiction) Act, 1970.

(2) It shall come into force on such date as the Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, appoint.

2. Enhancement of valuation for civil appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.

(1) On and from the commencement of this Act, for the purposes of an appeal to the Supreme Court under sub-clause (a) or sub-clause (b) of clause (1) of Art. 133 of the Constitution,—

(a) the amount or value of the subject matter of the dispute referred to in the said sub-clause (a) shall be not less than one lakh rupees instead of twenty thousand rupees;

(b) the judgment, decree or final order referred to in the said sub-clause (b) shall involve directly or indirectly some claim or question respecting property of the like amount or value.

(2) Save as aforesaid, the provisions of Art. 133 of the Constitution shall apply in relation to any such appeal as they apply in relation to an appeal under that Article to the Supreme Court before the commencement of this Act.

3. Amendment of Act, 5 of 1908.

In section 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, for the words "twenty thousand rupees", the words "one lakh rupees" shall be substituted,

4. Continuance of certain proceedings.

(1) Nothing in this Act shall affect any appeal under sub-clause (a) or sub-clause (b) of clause (1) of Art. 133 of the Constitution, which, on the commencement of this Act, is pending before the Supreme Court, and every such appeal may be heard and disposed of by the Supreme Court as if this Act had not been passed.

(2) Without prejudice to the provisions of sub-section (1), no appeal from any judgment, decree or final order referred to in sub-clause (a) or sub-clause (b) of clause (1) of Art. 133 of the Constitution arising out of a civil proceeding pending in any court at the commencement of this Act, shall be entertained and disposed of by the Supreme Court, unless such appeal satisfies the provisions of section 2.

ANNEXURE B

RELEVANCY OF VALUATION IN APPEALS TO THE SUPREME COURT OR OTHER HIGHEST COURT OF THE COUNTRY.

1. Australia :

Position as regards appeals to the High Court of Australia :—

(i) Valuation relevant (£1500).

(ii) Appeals also lie irrespective of valuation, where questions of status (marriage, divorce, bankruptcy, aliens, etc.) are involved.

(iii) Leave not required. But, besides the matters mentioned above, leave can be granted by the High Court, in other cases.

2. Canada :

Position as regards appeals to the Supreme Court of Canada :

(i) Valuation relevant—10,000 dollars.

(ii) No limitation as to nature of the question involved.

(iii) Leave not required. But, in cases not covered by (i) above, leave can be granted by the Supreme Court of Canada or the Provincial Court of Appeal.

3. England :

Position as regards appeals to the House of Lords :—

(i) Valuation not relevant.

(ii) No limitation as to nature of the question involved in general, except for 'leap-frog' appeals etc.

(iii) Appeal is only by leave of the Court of Appeal or the House of Lords.

4. France :

Position regarding appeals to the Court of Cassation :—

(i) Valuation not directly provided for. But it may be noted that appeals to the first appellate court from the trial court (court of grand instance) are ordinarily allowed only if valued at a certain amount, roughly, 200 U. S. Dollars.

(ii) Appeal limited to question of law.

(iii) Leave not required.

5. West Germany :

Position regarding appeals to the Supreme Federal Court :—

(i) Valuation not relevant.

(ii) But the scope of appeal is limited indirectly, because the function of the Supreme Federal Court is "to preserve the uniformity of application of federal law," and, apparently, the appellate jurisdiction will be confined to cases involving such questions.

(iii) Leave not required.

6. Russia :

Position regarding appeals to the U. S. S. R. Supreme Court :—

(i) Valuation not relevant. But it should be noted that a private party has no right of appeal to the U. S. S. R. Supreme Court.

(ii) The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is indefinite. Motion for review can be filed on the ground of "a particularly essential violation of the laws in force or a plain violation of the interests of the workers' and peasants' State and the toiling masses."

7. Switzerland : —

Position regarding appeals to the Federal Tribunal :—

(i) Valuation relevant (8,000 Swiss francs).

(ii) No express limitation as to the nature of the question involved could be discovered. But this seems to be implicit in the Tribunal's function of ensuring uniform application of federal law. Apparently, its appellate jurisdiction will be confined to cases involving such application.

(iii) Leave not required.

8. U. S. A. :

Position regarding appeals or certiorari to the Supreme Court of the U. S. A. :—

(i) Valuation not relevant.

(ii) The question involved must be what can be roughly described as a "federal" one.

(iii) Leave not required. But review is discretionary in many cases.

Appellate cases may be taken to the Court by two routes, appeal and certiorari, depending on the nature of the case. The avenue of appeal, (which replaced the older writ of error), is reserved principally for cases from State courts in which the highest court of the State has held a State statute valid under the federal Constitution. Other cases from the highest courts of the States—decisions holding State statutes unconstitutional, construing federal statutes, or involving federal privileges and immunities like full faith and credit to judgments of sister States—must take the avenue of certiorari. Jurisdiction under appeal is obligatory, while jurisdiction under certiorari is discretionary with the Supreme Court.

(b) Position regarding appeal to the highest Court of the State in the U. S. A. : —

There is wide variation in detail in the provisions governing the right to further review, by the higher appellate court, of the determination made by the lower appellate Court. Seldom is such further review a matter of right in all cases. Illustrative is a provision in one State giving such right of further review where the lower appellate court has reversed the judgment of the trial court, or where the affirmance of the judgment has been by a divided court; in all other cases review may be had only by permission, granted either by the lower or the higher appellate court.

BANGLA DESH IN THE EYE OF INTERNATIONAL LAW

(By DR. DEBIPROSAD PAL, LL.D., D.LITT, Advocate, Calcutta High Court and Supreme Court)

The recent political upsurge among the people of Bangla Desh and the proclamation of a Sovereign Democratic Republic of Bangla Desh by Sheikh Mujibur Rahman have posed a problem in the field of International Law which does not appear to have received the proper attention and consideration of the United Nations and that of the Security Council, its chief executive organ.

2. The circumstances in which this political upheaval occurred are well known. President Yahya Khan of Pakistan who had no mandate from the people was functioning with the aid of his military power as a Junta Government. Sheikh Mujibur Rahman and the followers of his Awami League had swept the recent elections held in Bangla Desh and it is Sheikh and his party who represent the will of the people of Bangla Desh. The Sheikh tried his best for a political settlement without compromising the fundamental principles on which he got mandate from the people of Bangla Desh in the recent election. Subsequent events show that President Yahya Khan had no intention of accepting the legitimate demand of the people of Bangla Desh but under the cover of a vague negotiation to increase and consolidate his military strength. But President Yahya Khan has failed to feel the throbbing pulse of a new Bangla Desh imbued with a high sense of patriotism, determined to rule out the exploitation and oppression under which the people were groaning. The subsequent events which have followed the resurgence are too well known. The way in which the military Junta Government is recklessly and deliberately killing the unarmed civilian population by use of the latest weapons of destruction, by the use of tanks, aeroplanes, machine guns, heavy artillery and mortar fires should have shocked the conscience of the civilised world and particularly of the big powers who proclaim themselves to be the champions of liberty and of democracy and who consider themselves to be the custodian of the peace and democracy in the world. Surprisingly enough excepting some feeble voice for "insistent appeal for the adoption of the most urgent measures to stop the bloodshed and repression against the people of East Pakistan," coming out from Soviet Russia, the other big powers are significantly reticent over the situation and although the mass destruction of humanity in this part of the world is going on since 25th March 1971, even the Security Council and its Secretary General Mr. U. Thant did not consider it proper to take appropriate measures under the United Nations Charter. It is in this light that the international obligations of the member States of the United Nations and of the United Nations itself need to be considered.

3. It is true that in the course of developments of International Law, there has grown up a practice which yields to the individual State, if it be an independent one, freedom to deal as it seems fit with many matters pertaining peculiarly to itself and they are roughly described as lying within the "domestic jurisdiction" of such State. Article 2 (7) of the U. N. Charter recognises this right and provides that nothing contained in U. N. Charter shall authorise the U. N. to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of such State. But the same Article equally provides that this principle shall not prejudice the application of enforcement measures under Chap. VII of the U. N. Charter. The question whether a certain matter is or is not essentially within the jurisdiction of a State is a relative question; it depends upon the development of international relations(1).

4. Judge Lauterpacht(2) thinks that the matter is essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the State only if it is not regulated by International Law or if it is not capable of regulation by International Law. A matter is essentially one of domestic concern if it is incapable by its nature of assuming an international complexion, i.e., if it cannot have any international repercussions. In the modern age of economic and political interdependence, most questions which, on the face of it, appear to be essentially domestic are, in fact, essentially international. Prof. Kelsen(3) is also of the view that if a matter is not regulated by a rule of customary or contractual International Law i.e. if international law does not impose any obligation upon a State with respect to a matter, then and only then the matter is solely, but never essentially, within the domestic jurisdiction of the State.

5. Can it be said that the ruthless massacre of unarmed civilian population falls exclusively within the domestic jurisdiction of the Pakistan Government so that the United Nations have no moral or legal obligation under the Charter to make intervention and take appropriate measures provided under the Charter?

6. Although by virtue of the personal and territorial supremacy, a State can treat its own nationals according to discretion, a large number of Jurists take the view that when a State renders itself guilty of cruelties against and persecution of its nationals in such a way as to deny their fundamental human rights and to shock the conscience of mankind, intervention in the interest of humanity is legally permissible(4). In fact, numerous interventions took place during the nineteenth century upon what were called in a broad way "grounds of humanity". The Ottoman Empire, seeking to retain its hold over its rebellious vassal States and subjects, resorted to methods of suppression which shocked the conscience of Europe. In 1827 the Great Powers jointly intervened to secure the independence of Greece and the battle of Navarino may fairly be looked upon as the use of force by the community of nations, acting through the intervening powers, in the interest of law and justice. In spite of the admission of the Ottoman Empire to participate in the public law and concert of Europe in 1856, interventions again took place in 1860 to protect the Christians of Mount Lebanon, in 1878 to secure the deliverance of the Balkan States and in 1891 to 1896 following massacres in Armenia and in Crete(5).

7. The Charter of the United Nations in recognising the promotion of respect for fundamental human rights and freedoms as one of the principal objects of the U. N. Organisation marks a further step in the direction of elevating the principle of humanitarian intervention to a basic rule of organised international society. The promotion of "universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms" is declared to be one of the objects of the United Nations in the sphere of international economic and social co-operation. Article 55 of the Charter lays down that the United Nations shall promote... universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all. In Art. 56 "all members pledge themselves to take joint and separate action in co-operation with the organisation for the achievement of the purposes set forth in Art. 55". Judge Jessup thinks that at least for the Members of the United Nations the respect for human dignity and fundamental human rights is obligatory. The duty is imposed by the Charter, a treaty to which all the Member-States are parties(6). However imperfect from the point of view of enforcement, the relevant provisions of the Charter constitute legal obligations of the Members of the United Nations and of the Organisation as a whole. The fundamental rights and freedoms acknowledged by the Charter are now regarded as legal rights recognised by International Law and observance of these rights has ceased to be one of exclusive domestic jurisdiction of States and has become a matter of legitimate concern for the United Nations and its members(7). The degree to which this task can be fulfilled by the United Nations, however, will depend to a large extent upon the moral and the political authority the United Nations can exercise in a given situation.

8. The acts of calculated massacre of the millions of civilian population, the brutal suppression of the unarmed and defenceless people by the use of tanks, aeroplanes, machine guns, heavy artillery and mortar fires with a sinister design to the racial annihilation of the people of Bangla Desh committed by the Yahya Government amount to a genocide. The extermination by Germany, under the National Socialist regime, of 8 millions of her own nationals and persons of foreign nationality, as well as the practices of some other States both in time of war and peace led to the adoption by the General Assembly, in 1948, of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide. The Convention defines, genocide inter alia, as acts committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnic, racial or religious group such as killing or causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group; deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its total or partial destruction. The Convention declares punishable, as a crime under International Law, genocide itself as well as acts of conspiracy, incitement, attempt and complicity. The Convention lays down that not only private persons are punished for the crime of genocide but also rulers and public officials. This is an implied recognition of the protection by International Law, of the fundamental rights of the individual in so far as it prohibits and penalises crimes against humanity which are conceived as offences of gravest character against the life and liberty of the individual, irrespective of whether such acts have been committed in obedience to the law of the State. The acts of commission or omission in respect of genocide on any interpretation of the Charter, are no longer considered by international jurists to be a matter exclusively within the domestic jurisdiction of the States concerned. The parties expressly concede to the U. N. the right of intervention in this sphere(8). Thus the acts of genocide committed by the Yahya Government of Pakistan cannot be a matter exclusively within the domestic jurisdiction of the Government of Pakistan because of its international implications. If the Government of Pakistan has any international obligation, towards the respect and the observance of human rights in respect of its own citizens, breach of such international obligation cannot be a matter essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of that Government. Its repercussions are such that it constitutes a menace to international peace and security. The United Nations under Art. 39, Chap. VII have a direct obligation to determine the existence of any such threat of breach of peace and has equally an obligation to make recommendation and decide what measure it should take in accordance with Arts. 41 and 42 to maintain or restore international peace and security.

9. The next question that arises is whether the recognition of the newly formed Democratic Republic of Bangla Desh is justified by the events which have given birth to its origin. Recognition of a new State may be defined as an unilateral act by which one or more States declare, or tacitly admit that they consider a political unit, which exists in fact and considers itself to be a State, as a State having the rights and duties which flow from such Statehood.

10. In International Law recognition is of special matters in those cases where a new State tries to establish itself by breaking up from an existing State in the course of a revolution. Foreign States must then decide whether the new State has already safely and permanently established itself or only makes over to this end without having already succeeded. Thus, in the case of a civil war a Foreign State can recognise the insurgents as a belligerent power, if they succeed in keeping a part of the country in their own, set up a Government of their own, and conduct military operations according to laws of war.

11. If revolutionaries contemplate secession, their limited recognition may well be but the first step on the road to recognition of one or more new independent States. This was what happened in the revolutionary wars fought by the Latin-American colonies against Spain during the first half of the nineteenth century. Conversely, limited recognition of rebels whose object is the seizure of power in a State may be but the forerunner of their de facto or de jure recognition as the Government of the State concerned.

12. Until a revolution or civil war has reached serious proportions, any form of intervention by a State in favour of insurgents constitutes illegal interference in the domestic affairs of another sovereign State. If, however, revolutionaries effectively control large areas of a country, other States may find it unavoidable to establish contact with them, if only for the protection of their own nationals and their property.

13. On the insistence of Great Britain and, subsequently, the United States of America, this exception to the rule of non-intervention has been accepted in State practice since the last century. If revolutionaries have shown a certain staying power in more than a purely local area, other States may grant them recognition as insurgents or belligerents. The difference between these two forms of limited recognition is one of degree(9).

14. The question is, precisely, at what time recognition of a new State may be given as distinguished from the recognition as a belligerent power? No hard and fast rule can be laid down as regards the time when it can be said that a State created by revolution has established itself safely and permanently.

15. Indications of such safe and permanent establishment may be found either in the fact that the revolutionary State has utterly defeated the mother State or that the mother State in spite of its efforts is apparently incapable of bringing the revolutionary State back under its sway. A Government which enjoys the habitual obedience of the bulk of the population with a reasonable expectancy to permanence can be said to represent the State in question and as such to be entitled to recognition. As a rule, this principle has been interpreted in the sense that the new Government must be supported by the will of the nation, substantially declared and that there must be evidence of popular approval, adequately expressed, of the revolutionary change. Exercise of the power, with the acquiescence of the population, is considered to be sufficient proof of such effectiveness(10).

16. Sometimes de facto recognition is granted to a State when in the opinion of the recognis-

10. Oppenheim : International Law, Vol. I (8th Edn.) Pages 130-131.

ing State a new regime or authority meets some but not all requirements which are deemed essential before recognition should be granted. Thus, when in the view of the recognising State the new authority, although actually independent and wielding effective power in the territory under its control, has not acquired sufficient stability or does not as well offer prospects of complying with other requirements of recognition such as willingness or ability to fulfil international obligations. The essential feature of a de facto recognition is that it is provisional and liable to be withdrawn in cases where the recognised regime or authority succumbed or is superseded by another. The true purpose of de facto recognition is a declaration that the body claiming to be the Government established or a new State actually wields effective authority, without, however, specifying the other conditions of full de jure recognition. Should thus remaining conditions be forthcoming, full recognition de jure will become a matter of course; should they remain permanently absent, recognition will lapse automatically or will be finally or expressly withdrawn(11)

17. After the first World war, the Governments of various new States such as Finland, Latvia and Esthonia which formerly constituted part of the Russian Empire, were recognised in the first instance as de facto governments pending the final territorial settlement in that part of the world.

18. From the prevailing practice of the States, there is ample evidence to show that Governments consider the granting or withholding of recognition primarily as an exercise of political discretion, although according to Prof. Oppenheim in thus acting the existing States perform in the full exercise of their discretion a quasi-judicial duty.

19. When in 1903 Panama seceded from Columbia, the United States immediately recognised the new Republic as an independent State and prevented Columbia from asserting her authority over the rebellious Province(12). In 1930 with regard to Peru, Bolivia and Argentina, recognition was granted on the basis of evidence that the new Governments in those countries "are de facto in control of their respective countries" and that there was no active resistance. The recognition by the United States on 3.9.1918 of the Czecho-Slovak National Council as being "a de facto belligerent government" clothed with proper authority to direct the Military and political affairs of the Czecho-Slovaks was made while the territory of the new State was still under the actual control of Austria-Hungary. In the case of Poland, Germany, Austria-Hungary anticipated the movement for liberation by proclaiming the independence of the country in 1918 while the Russian Cadet Government had likewise recognised in 1917 that the creation of an independent Poland must be one of the conditions of a just peace. When on 27.1.1919 the United States gave full recognition to the Polish Provincial Government, the communication described the new State as entering "upon a new cycle of independent life." As a result of the revolution in Russia, Finland proclaimed its independence on 4.12.1917. Denmark promptly recognised the new State and the United States and Great Britain also decided to recognise the independence of Finland and the de facto Government. Again in 1948 U. S. A. recognised Israel within a few hours of proclamation of independence(13).

20. It is not recognised as a rule of International Law that the strict observance of constitutional procedures should be a condition of recognition. The transition of France from Empire to Republic in 1870 during the course of Franco-Russian War was recognised promptly by the leading powers in spite of the exceptional circumstances. President Grant of the United States promptly telegraphed his congratulations as soon as he had "learnt that a Republican body had been proclaimed at Paris and that the people of France had acquiesced in the change"(14).

21. The overthrow of the Empire in Brazil in 1889 by a "bloodless revolution" was followed by immediate recognition by the United States of the Provincial Government and by formal recognition of it when it was clear that a majority of the people supported the new Government. In 1930 the Revolutionary Government of President Vargas of Brazil was given recognition by the United States within three weeks of his accession to his office after President Washington Luiz was deposed. In 1959, the Revolutionary Government of Fidel Castro in Cuba was recognised by the United States within six days of his coming into power(15).

22. According to the Soviet theory, if a new State has emerged as a result of revolution or the exercising of its right to self-determination, it has every reason to expect recognition by other States. Non-recognition is one form of indicating hostility to it and contradicts the generally recognised principles of International Law.

23. Under the Atlantic Charter the United States and Great Britain declared that it was their desire to see that no territorial changes which do not accord with the freely expressed wishes of the people concerned were made and that they respect the right "of all people to choose the form of Government under which they will live." Under the U. N. Charter, among its purposes are the development of friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of people.

25. Judged by the tests set out above, the Democratic Republic of Bangla Desh should be given a recognition immediately by the United Nations and its member nations. The new Democratic Government undoubtedly has the overwhelming support if not the universal one of the entire people of Bangla Desh. This Government has been proclaimed by Sheikh Mujibur Rahman, the leader of the Awami League which has come out with overwhelming success in the recent democratic election. It has already a de facto control over the administrative agencies of the State. It appears, therefore, that the new Government has been established over the entire territory of Bangla Desh and all the conditions of Statehood have been fulfilled by this new Government. Moreover, this new Government from the very beginning is willing to honour its obligations under International Law. It is significant to note in this connection that out of the total 10 crores of population in the entire State of Pakistan, the people of Bangla Desh constitute more than $7\frac{1}{2}$ crores. In other words, people of Bangla Desh constitute more than $\frac{3}{4}$ th of the entire population of Pakistan. In such a case the State of Pakistan has neither any legal nor any moral support to set up its own Junta Government which does not represent the will of the people. The newly constituted Sovereign Republic of Bangla Desh presents challenge to the people of the world and to the civilised nations who still cherish any principle of democracy and freedom. At this critical stage, all the freedom loving nations of the world should come forward and hail the new democratic government of Bangla Desh without any reservation or hesitation.

COMPANY MEETINGS AND RESOLUTIONS. By C. R. Datta, M. A., LL. B., A. T. I. I. (Eng.), D. I. A. (Lond.). Bar-at-Law. Eastern Law House Private Ltd., 54 Ganesh Chunder Avenue, Calcutta 13. 1971, Pp. (16) & 373. Price, Rs. 30.

Company meetings are of various kinds. There is the Board meeting, in other words, the meeting of the Board of Directors, the statutory meeting, and the annual general meeting. Further, we have extra-ordinary general meetings and requisitioned meetings, not to speak of what is known as class meetings and meetings of debenture holders, as well as meetings of creditors and contributors called by the liquidator or the Court in the event of winding up, and the volume under review deals comprehensively with all of them. Its aim is to present a concise but definitive account of law and practice relating to company meetings together with some forms of notices, agenda, poll papers, report of scrutineers, resolutions, report of chairman, and minutes of proceedings.

2. The powers and functions of the company are exercised by the directors, and the Board must meet at least once in three months, but not less than four times a year. The statutory meeting of shareholders is held after one month but within six months from the date of commencing business; it affords the shareholders an early opportunity of obtaining information as to the circumstances of the company's promotion and its immediate future prospects. Further, a company must every year hold a general (shareholders') meeting, and not more than fifteen months should lapse between one annual general meeting and another.

3. A meeting of the members of a company other than the annual general meeting is called extra-ordinary general meeting, which is convened generally to consider matters which, due to their urgency, cannot wait till the next annual general meeting, and it is convened either by the directors or at the instance of shareholders, in which latter case it is called a requisitioned meeting. The requisition must state the objects of the meeting, but the requisitionists cannot dictate the date and time of the meeting. Besides, class meetings are held to vary the rights of particular classes of shareholders, and meetings of debenture and debenture stock-holders are held under the provisions of the trust deed which secures them, as well as for effecting compromises and arrangements. Mention should be made also of meetings of members and creditors for voluntary winding up, the meeting convened by the liquidator, of creditors and contributories in an official winding up, and the meeting convened by the Court to ascertain the wishes of creditors and contributories in all matters of winding up.

4. Normally, the secretary is present at all meetings of the company and of the directors and makes proper minutes of their proceedings. He issues under the direction of the Board all notices to members and others, conducts correspondence with shareholders in regard to calls, transfers, forfeitures, etc. He is in charge of the books of the company, like the register of members, share-ledger, transfer book and register of debenture holders. He submits the necessary returns to the Registrar of Companies, and makes preparations for holding and conducting meetings. The book under notice provides separate lists of the documents, resolutions and notices to be produced or registered with the Registrar of Companies, matters for which Central Government sanction is necessary, and the ordinary resolutions as required by the Companies Act, 1956.

5. The book gives model forms and resolutions on each subject in the text itself, the relevant sections of the Companies Act are set out, and annotations given supported by the decisions of Indian and English Courts. Furnished with a table of cases and index, it should be of great value to company promoters and directors, secretaries, executives and lawyers, as well as to company shareholders who take a particularly keen interest in company management.

CRACKNELL'S LAW STUDENTS' COMPANION, No. 11: CONFLICT OF LAWS. By M. R. Chesterman, B.A., LL.B., LL. M., Lecturer in Laws, King's College, London. Butterworths. London, 1969. Pp. vii & 150. Price Rs. 22.50.

'Conflict of Laws' deals with international law as it affects individuals; it is public international law from the viewpoint of individuals. The law of conflict of laws is connected with the resolutions which result from the fact that there is a multiplicity of different sets of courts and different systems of private law in the world. Each nation has its own set of courts and its own set of laws. In some instances a single system of law obtains for the whole country. But diversity prevails not only in countries with a federal pattern but even in countries with a unitary political structure, and between a country and its colonies, when a country is divided (e.g., Korea, Viet Nam and Germany), and also in the same country on a religious or ethical basis, e.g., Hindus and Muslims.

2. As a general principle most countries or States agree that a case may be tried in their courts if both parties have consented to their jurisdiction. The plaintiff's consent may be taken for granted from his commencing the action in the state in question; that of the defendant is presumed when he confesses judgment or begins to litigate on the merits of the controversy, rather than object to the jurisdiction.

3. English Conflict of Laws, which is the subject of the present book, largely depends on case law. But it is of comparatively recent growth and its volume is within manageable limits. A book like the present one sets out most of the rules on the subject while preserving the framework within which they were developed, i.e., the cases themselves. In the case summaries, the aspect emphasised is the reasoning on which the ultimate decision rests, because it is most important and often complex. The cross-references between cases is somewhat elaborate because of the tendency of many leading cases to contain significant rulings on two or more distinct issues; in contrast, the facts of the case are stated fairly shortly.

4. The following cases are typical of those arising in this sphere: Two Muslims domiciled in India were married there according to Muslim law, which permitted polygamy. In 1961 the husband acquired English domicile. He later instituted divorce proceedings based on the wife's desertion in 1959, whereupon she filed a cross-petition alleging adultery in and since 1964. It was held that the husband's acquisition of English domicile converted the marriage from a potentially polygamous one into a monogamous one, because it precluded him from taking another wife. The Court had thus jurisdiction, but only as regards the adultery, this being the only matrimonial offence since 1961.

5. A domiciled English woman was married in England to a Hindu of Indian domicile. The husband subsequently brought nullity proceedings on the ground that Hindu law prohibited him from marrying outside his caste. It was held that, even assuming that the Indian Courts would give effect to this prohibition, the marriage was still valid.

6. Furnished with an index and a glossary of Latin and other words, abbreviations and phrases, the book before us gives the relevant portions of the several statutes, including the Administration of Justice Act, 1920, Adoption Act, Arbitration Act, Bankruptcy Act, Diplomatic Privileges Act, Foreign Marriage Act, Matrimonial Causes Act, and Uniform Law on International Sales Act. It is designed as a source book for those who cannot see as much as they would like of the law reports and as an aide-memoire for the others. R.S.S.

THE RENT ACTS BY SIR ROBERT MEGARRY, LL. D., VOL. 3. PERMANENT SUPPLEMENT. By Anna Cowan, B. A., LL. M., 10th Edition. 1970. Stevens & Sons, Limited., London. (In India : N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Bombay). Pp. xiv & 1009 to 1290. Price, Not stated.

Rent Control in England, which began in 1915 at the time of the First World War, has been more or less maintained by successive pieces of legislation. With a number of variations the Acts were adopted by many countries. The basic idea was that the rent of every dwelling house within the Acts, "should be restricted to the rent being paid at a particular date (standard rent), with certain permitted increases, and that no landlord of such a house should be able to obtain an order for the possession of the house except on certain limited grounds."

2. The first edition of the present work was published in 1939, but the tenth edition, published for the first time in two volumes, appeared in 1967. The arrangement in two volumes made it possible to put the words of the statute and text side by side and so obtain much of the advantage of annotated statutes without losing the coherence of a cursive text. That arrangement has now been retained, and present volume is intended to be supplementary to the two volumes of the 1967 edition.

3. The publication is designed to bring both parts of the last edition up to date. New cases, and important changes in the law which affect the text of volume 1 have been noted in the first section of this supplement. Each note is linked to the body of the main work by means of marginal page references; the correlation of new material and the relevant text has been simplified by the insertion, above each note, of the heading and sub-heading under which the text concerned appears in volume 1. A comparative table showing what has happened to each section of the repealed Acts is also set out.

4. Volume 2 of the 1967 edition is a collection of statutes and statutory instruments relating to rent, which are often needed to discover what the law was at a given point of time, and to understand some of the decisions. All previous rent legislation was consolidated in the Rent Act, 1968, which does not change the law but makes it more ascertainable. It deals with all provisions concerning the control of rent, security of tenure, and the control of premiums and mortgages. It repeals, inter alia, the Rent Act 1957 (except S. 16) and the Rent Act 1965 (except Part III). All the 118 sections and 17 schedules are set out in this Supplement. Each section is linked to Volume I by a text reference, which shows where a discussion of the contents of the section may be found.

5. The Act of 1968, however, does not contain the law in its entirety. The Supplement therefore includes the relevant sections of the Housing Act 1969, dealing with the conversion of controlled tenancies; the certification and registration of fair rents, and alterations to the Act of 1968 as well as the relevant parts of the Leasehold Reform Act 1967, the Matrimonial Homes Act 1967; the Caravan Sites Act 1968, the Prices and Incomes Act 1968, and the Rent (Control of Increases) Act 1969.

6. The Supplement to Volume I is divided into five parts, viz., General, Application of the Acts, Benefits conferred upon tenants by the Acts, Mortgages and Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act 1946 and the Supplement to Volume 2 includes several statutory rules and orders and statutory instruments.

7. The law has been stated as at 1st July 1970. R.S.S.

RUSSELL ON THE LAW OF ARBITRATION. By Anthony Walton, Q. C., Bar-at-Law. Stevens & Sons Limited., London (In India : N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Bombay). 18th Edition, 1970. Pp. lvi & 542. Price, Not stated.

Published originally in 1849, the publication relating to the law of arbitration in England before us is now 120 years old. Since the appearance of the last edition in 1963, arbitration has had a new Chapter of Rules of the Supreme Court (England) (Order 73) all to itself in the domestic field, and a new statutory arbitration regarding international investment disputes, while the case-law also has been growing in volume. While the book was in preparation, proposals were in the air for a new Commercial Court with power to sit in private in order to encourage firms to bring their disputes to court rather than resort to arbitration (usually in private), it being alleged that few firms come to Court for fear of trade secrets being disclosed. However, as pointed out by the Editor, the courts already have adequate safeguards against the disclosure of trade secrets, and when there is need for immediate relief against improper use or disclosure, an arbitration is quite ineffective, and may even be a hindrance. It is true that no court can disguise the fact that a dispute between particular parties is in progress (as an arbitration can), but if a particular person is always involved in disputes it may not be the best public policy to conceal the fact. The fact is that both the courts and arbitrations have their distinctive roles to play, and each in their sphere is irreplaceable.

2. The essence of an arbitration is that a dispute is referred by the parties for settlement by a tribunal of their own choosing, instead of to a court. To be effective, the method should receive some assistance from the ordinary machinery of law; recourse to it may be necessary for enforcing the arbitrator's decision. Some degree of control by the courts accompanies the official status thus lent to duly constituted arbitrations; the law governing all these matters is contained in the Arbitration Act, 1950. Because arbitrations differ from legal proceedings proper only in the choice of the tribunal, all ordinary legal defences are available. The parties to an arbitration may themselves determine the procedure to be followed and the constitution of the arbitral tribunal. The 1950 Act lays down a code governing these matters, but many of its provisions may be excluded by agreement between the parties. These rules governing arbitration are more or less applicable also to many statutory arbitration tribunals. The matter relating to statutory arbitration is largely confined to a discussion of the extent to which the Arbitration Act does apply to it, and not further.

3. Of the twenty-one chapters in the book, the early chapters describe the nature of arbitration, statutory arbitration, matters which may be referred to arbitration and by whom, submissions and arbitration agreements, and staying arbitration proceedings. Next, who may be an arbitrator, his personal rights and obligations and duties, and his appointment and removal are discussed. The proceedings in the reference, evidence, control of reference by the Court, and stay of concurrent proceedings in court, are then examined, and the last few chapters cover directions in the award, its effect and enforcement, challenging the award, and costs.

4. The Appendices include the Arbitration Act 1950, additional statutes, Rules of the Supreme Court, and Notes on arbitration in Supreme Court Practice. There is every reason to believe that the Forms and Precedents given are quite perfect in all respects. A table of statutes, table of cases, table of rules and orders, index and bibliography, are also provided. The law is stated as at 1st January 1970.

5. The law as regards arbitration in India was long contained in the Second Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code and the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899. The Arbitration Act, 1940, which made various improvements in the old laws and incorporated new sections in it, standardised the law throughout this country, and the Second Schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure has now been repealed, as also the Arbitration Act of 1899. THE LAW OF CONTRACT. By G. H. Treitel, B.C.L., M.A., Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford. Stevens & Sons Ltd., 11 New Fetter Lane, London (In India: N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Bombay). 3rd Edition, 1970, Pp. lxxiv & 379. Price, Not stated.

Many important changes have taken place in the law of contract since the appearance of the last edition in 1966. Although many pages of the former text have been cut, the present edition is still considerably larger than the earlier one and over a quarter of the text is new. In Chapter 7 the discussion of Fundamental Breach and related concepts has been re-written in the light of the Suisse Atlantique case, and the Misrepresentation Act, 1967 has made it necessary to re-arrange and largely re-write Chapter 9. As a result of the Esso case, the discussion of Restraint of Trade has been re-arranged and much new material added. Beswick v. Beswick has led to important changes in Chapter 15, on Privity, and Chapter 22, on Specific Performance and Third Parties. Recent developments are responsible for a new section on Effects of Failure to Perform, in Chapter 19, and, in the last chapter, on Remedies, the discussion of Remoteness has been revised in the light of the Heron case, and the Esso case has led to a number of changes in the discussion of injunctions. Other and less drastic changes have been made in Chapter 8 and Chapter 12, the discussion of Anticipatory Breach in Chapter 20 has been expanded, and in the last chapter the discussion of Object of Damages and Contributory Negligence has been revised, and there is a new discussion of Duplication. Many new changes have also been made in the early chapters on Agreement and Consideration.

2. Allowing for several qualifications, broadly speaking, the law of contract deals mainly with the two questions of agreement and legal enforceability. The rules relating to offer and acceptance deal with the process of reaching agreement, and those relating to consideration and contractual obligation concern the requirements which must be satisfied before an agreement will be legally enforced, while the rules relating to misrepresentation and illegality deal with effect of special circumstances in which the law may refuse to enforce agreements. The rules regarding capacity are based partly on the view that certain classes of persons (such as mental patients and very young children) cannot agree, and partly on the view that it is not desirable to enforce agreements with certain persons. The rules regarding mistake are based on the view that there is no agreement when the parties are at cross purposes on a fundamental point and can have no legal effect if it is made under a fundamental mistake as to the subject-matter. The rules about the contents of a contract, performance, breach and frustration are based on the agreement between the parties and on rules of law which determine its legal effect.

3. A number of other questions, like plurality, privity, assignment, transfer of liability, and agency, have also been discussed in the present book, which provides a table of cases, a table of statutes, and index. The law is stated in the book as it stood at the end of November 1969.

4. The Indian Contract Act, 1872* is itself the work of English lawyers and embodies the main principles borrowed from English law. A full exposition of these principles is possible only by reference to authorities like Cheshire and Fifoot and the present book, which is primarily intended for the student is a good introduction to the law of contract.

THE LAW OF INSURANCE. By Raoul Colinvaux, Bar-at-Law. Sweet and Maxwell Ltd., 11 New Fetter Lane, London (In India: N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Bombay). 3rd Edition, 1970. Pp. lxxiv & 379. Price, Not stated.

This practical text-book on the English law of Insurance policies appeared for the first time in 1950 and, when it reached the second edition in 1961, it had the rare distinction of being recorded on tape for the benefit of the blind; as many as 300 copies are said to have been so recorded. The present revised edition became necessary with the passing of the Companies Act, 1967 (Part II of the Act relates to insurance companies). On matters of principle there have been only minor alterations, and much out-of-date and obsolete matter has been cut out; the book is confined to the law of England as it stands, and foreign decisions, are cited only when they indicate what an English Court might well hold. Practical matters are given special attention and a full table of cases has been added. The provisions of the relevant insurance statutes are set out in the Appendix and particular care has been given to the index.

2. The author has added references to modern forms of insurance in constant use such as, transit risks, house-holders' comprehensive policies, livestock insurance, contractor's liability policies, and professional liability policies (including barristers' and solicitors'). The basic principles of marine insurance are covered, although special fields like freight insurance and statutory provisions on industrial insurance are outside the author's purview; he has also omitted rules of law governing insurance companies for which the reader is referred to other authorities.

3. In contracts of insurance the insurer agrees to pay or otherwise benefit the assured on the happening of a specified event or contingency, for financial or other consideration. The determination of risk is very important, for the insurer can adjust his premium profitably only if he knows the nature of the risk, and the assured also must know the precise extent of his cover. As the insurer knows nothing and the man who wants to insure knows everything, it is the duty of the assured to make a full disclosure to the insurance company without being asked of all the material circumstances. Although the general principle of the common law is that anyone with normal contractual capacity may enter into a contract of insurance, the Insurance Companies Act, 1958, which repealed earlier Acts (now amended by Part II of the Companies Act, 1967) restricted the classes of persons who may engage in insurance business. As to contractual capacity, anyone may enter into a contract of insurance, subject to the limitations on the contractual capacity of certain classes of persons that apply throughout the law of contract. A person may insure himself against not only the risk of death and personal injury, or damage to property, but also against the risk of incurring liability to third parties.

4. The author describes the general principles of insurable interest, the nature of insurable interest, illegal contracts of insurance and loss caused by criminal act, and discusses the legal effects of conditions, and how warranties and representations are made.

*A. C. Dutt on Indian Contract Act (Eastern Law House Calcutta: 1969). For a briefer account see Prof. Krishnan Nair's Handbook on General Principles (1970).

The settlement of claims, arbitration, and fraudulent claims, are then dealt with, and the principles of indemnity and subrogation, policies as a form of property, and assignment of policies, are explained at length. There are also separate chapters on the construction of the policy, re-instatement, and re-insurance.

5. The present volume, which is provided with a table of cases and table of statutes, sets out the principles and practice of English insurance law in a form easily accessible for the guidance of the man of business, the lawyer and the student alike. R.S.S.

SOCIETY AND THE CRIMINAL. By M. J. Sethna, Ph. D., Professor of Law, University of Bombay, 3rd Edition, 1970. By Jehangir M. J. Sethna, LL.M. (Harvard), Advocate, Bombay High Court. N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Bombay 2. Pp. xxv and 508. Price Rs. 24.00.

The work under review deals with the problems of crime and its prevention, the personality and treatment of the criminal, prison reform, punishments, probation, reformation, and juvenile delinquency. It is divided into three Parts, the first dealing with society, the State, the Law, the individual and personality of the criminal, and the second with the problems of crime, its causes and prevention, and the problems of punishment and prison reform. The third Part deals with juvenile delinquency.

2. The introduction shows how criminology involves a study of the relevant principles of all the social services in so far as they have a bearing on the problems of crime, the personality of the criminal, and the methods of treatment and prevention. There are twelve other chapters the text matter of each of which is neatly summed up in a concluding paragraph. The necessity of adjusting the individual to the community is emphasised, as well as the fact that the State is not a mere police force but it should be concerned with the creation of an environment unfavourable to crime. Bad laws create conflict and crime, and the criminal, who is in a sense a defective, requires individualised treatment. Discussing the causes of crime, the author shows how education, the practice of the rules of genetics, and social security, are good preventives. His new remedy of indeterminate compulsory education is fully explained and in dealing with the theories of punishment, the theory of compensation is emphasised. The development of the prison system is traced, and it is explained how important it is to handle criminality in its early stages. Legislation for the prevention of juvenile delinquency and Children's Homes and schools are the subject of the last few chapters.

3. In the second edition of this work the author included the latest changes in methods of penal reform and treatment of offenders. The latest theories of abnormal psychology were studied and the relevant passages amended as a result. The salient features of the various Children Acts were explained with constructive suggestions for the improvement of legislation relating to juveniles. The present edition has also been thoroughly revised in the light of the latest developments in the field of criminology, and a new chapter has been added on War Crimes and their prevention. Infra-red and ultra-violet methods of photography in the detection and investigation of crime have also been explained.

4. The author shows that the Criminal is an antisocial and maladjusted being who needs cure, help, and rehabilitation. The psychology of the criminal is as important as the sociological and legal problems attached to the reduction of crime. There has to be good co-operation between judges and lawyers, police officers and probation officers, and psychiatrists and case students.

5. In the Appendix is a statement of the study of actual cases tracing the factors in the causation of crime. From an examination of over 507 cases of homicide it was found that 73.72 per cent. of the cases showed unprompted attacks while only 26.28 per cent. showed deliberate assaults. The select bibliography should help the research scholar in choosing materials for his thesis, and the index to this comparative study of the entire field of criminology is quite exhaustive.

SWEET & MAXWELL'S FAMILY LAW STATUTES. 1970. Edited by Sweet and Maxwell's legal Editorial staff. Advisory Editor: Olive M. Stone (In India: N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Bombay 2). Pp. viii & 564. Price, £2.10s. net.

The present volume of seventyfive English statutes is a collection of the leading Acts relevant to the subject of family law, giving the texts of the statutes, showing amendments or repeals, upto 1st July 1970. The contents range from the Wills Act, 1837 to the Matrimonial Proceedings and Property Act, 1970, the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1970, and the Administration of Justice Act, 1970, the first two Acts of 1970 dealing with divorce law. Also included are various statutes starting with the Custody of Infants Act, 1873 covering guardianship and maintenance of infants, and other statutes which cover wills and succession, education of children, their criminal liability, legitimacy and adoption, and many of these Acts came into operation on 1st January 1971.

2. The Matrimonial Proceedings and Property Act 1970 makes fresh provision for empowering the court in matrimonial proceedings to order either spouse to make financial provision for, or transfer property to, the other spouse or child of a family, to make orders for the variation of ante-nuptial and pre-nuptial settlements and for the custody and education of children. It abolishes the right to claim restitution of conjugal rights and declares what interest in property is acquired by a spouse who contributes to its improvement, and makes provision as to a spouse's right to occupation in certain cases. And it amends the law about the property of a person whose marriage is the subject of a decree of judicial separation dying intestate.

3. The Law Reforms (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1970, on the other hand, abolishes actions for breach of promise of marriage and makes provision with respect to the property of, or gifts between, persons who have been engaged to marry. It abolishes the right of a husband to claim damages for adultery with his wife, and all actions for the enticement or harbouring of a spouse, and it makes provision for the maintenance of survivors of void marriages. By the Administration of Justice Act 1970, the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division of the High Court is renamed the Family Division, and the Principal probate registry is renamed the principal registry of the Family Division. All causes and matters involving the exercise of the High Court's jurisdiction in proceedings specified in the Act are to be assigned to the Family Division.

4. The publishers have omitted, as not being of sufficiently general interest, the Royal Marriages Act, 1772 and all Acts dealing with foreigners' marriages or marriages abroad, as well as procedural Acts and those covering nationality and citizenship. Here we have all the basic statutory material which would be needed by a student for professional or university examinations on divorce and family law. It is also a valuable reference book for practitioners, magistrates, and probation officers. The index at the end is useful. R.S.S.

LAND LAW, (Concise College Texts).

By E. Swinfen Green, Bar-at-Law. & N. Henderson, B.A., Sr. Lecturer of the College of Law, 2nd Edition, 1970, Sweet & Maxwell, London (In India: N.M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Bombay 2), Pp. xiv & 208, Price, £1.4s. net.

The law of land, or real property, is concerned with the rights, interests and obligations which can exist over land and buildings, and how they are created, enforced, assigned and extinguished. It is highly complex because land lends itself to the creation of a diversity of concurrent and consecutive interests. Land has virtually been the sole form of wealth since the Norman conquest, and land laws in England acquired a rigidity and formalism unsuitable to a changing social and economic structure and, although the deficiencies of the common law have to some extent been made good, the result was more often to complicate it than to simplify it. Sweeping changes were finally introduced by the 1925 property legislation. The publication before us considers the effects of this legislation as well as of the Law of Property Acts, 1922 and 1925, the Settled Land Act, 1925, and the Land Charges Act, 1925.

2. In the second edition of this practical, introductory outline of the land law in England, including the law of wills and intestacy, many small changes have been made to bring the text up to date, the Rent Acts of 1965 and 1968 having necessitated the substantial re-writing of the section on Security of Tenure; some topics have been more fully discussed and a new chapter on contracts has been added. As in the first edition, care has been taken to give examples where the meaning might not be clear and technical terms are explained as they are used.

3. The publication deals with the classification of property, words of limitation, the contribution of equity, reduction in the number of legal estates, the fee simple, the fee tail, the life estate, and the leasehold. It covers contracts for the disposition of land, settlements, co-ownership, the perpetuities and accumulations rules, easements, rent charges, covenants and mortgages. It concludes with chapters on limitation, registration, devolution on death, wills and intestacy.

4. The book should meet the needs of students who are studying law as part of a wider syllabus. It will be useful as an introductory book to those who require a more detailed knowledge of the subject; studying a short work before proceeding to a more comprehensive account is always an advantage. It should also be useful to others in revising the subject, e.g. in preparation for the study of conveyancing.

5. A table of cases, a table of statutes, and index, are useful adjuncts. R.S.S.

DIVORCE UNDER THE HINDU MARRIAGE ACT — A CONFLICT OF PRINCIPLES

(By JUSTICE V. S. DESHPANDE, M.A., LL.M. (Nagpur), LL.M. (Stanford); Judge, Delhi High Court.)

The Hindu conception of marriage was and has been one of sacrament even though customary divorce has been ubiquitous except in the higher castes. In England, however, the doctrine of marriage being a sacrament was disclaimed at the Reformation though the idea of marriage being a divine institution in its general origin was still retained. Divorce in English law came to be granted on the ground of a matrimonial offence committed by one party to the marriage which gave a right to the innocent party to apply for a divorce. The basis of divorce, therefore, was the wrong committed by the guilty party and the right to apply for divorce was, therefore, available only to the innocent party. The grounds of divorce in the various Matrimonial Causes Acts were, therefore, based on the wrong or fault or a matrimonial offence committed by the guilty party. At the same time, the conduct of the petitioner or a wrong committed by the petitioner constituted a bar to the grant of relief at the instance of the petitioner. The provisions of Part III of the Indian Divorce Act, 1869, giving the right to apply for divorce to the aggrieved party also gave the discretion to the Court to dismiss the petition for the conduct or fault of the petitioner. When divorce was first introduced in Hindu law by the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, the right to divorce was, in consonance with the background of the English law and the Indian Divorce Act, 1869, based on the fault or wrong committed by one party giving the right to apply for divorce only to the innocent party. This was the scheme of S. 13 of the Act prior to its amendment in 1964. The discretion to refuse the relief of divorce on the ground of any wrong committed by the petitioner or in view of the conduct of the petitioner was given to the Court by S. 23. The scheme of Ss. 13 and 23 was thus clear. It was for the petitioner to make out a case for the relief of divorce under S. 13 by proving that the respondent has been guilty of one of the grounds stipulated therein. Section 23 had an overriding effect. For, the discretion was exercised by the Court "if the Court is satisfied that (a) any of the grounds for granting relief exists," etc. It is, therefore, only after the petitioner succeeds in making out a case for the grant of relief of divorce that the question of the Court refusing the relief on the ground of the conduct or fault of the petitioner under S. 23 could arise. There was, therefore, a difference between (a) the dismissal of a petition for divorce on the ground that the petitioner has not proved the existence of any of the grounds enumerated in S. 13, and (b) the dismissal of such a petition under S. 23 on the ground of the conduct or fault of the petitioner even though in the absence of such conduct or fault, the petitioner would have been entitled to a decree for divorce under S. 13.

2. From this principle of divorce based on the theory of fault or wrong or a matrimonial offence of the guilty party, two departures were later made in India, namely, (a) divorce by mutual consent was for the first time made available by the Special Marriage Act, 1954, to persons whose marriages were registered under that Act: No question, therefore, arose of either party being guilty or innocent at all; and (b) divorce was made available simply on the ground of the breakdown of the marriage to either party by the amendment of S. 13 of the Act made by the Hindu Marriage (Amendment) Act, 1964 (Act 44 of 1964). These changes in law were the result of a considerable ferment of opinion about the reform of the divorce law which took place particularly in England. That the ground of divorce cannot be confined only to the fault of the guilty party but must recognize the breakdown of marriage even if such breakdown was due to the fault of a party was an idea underlying the various Bills introduced in Parliament by Mrs. Eirene White (1951), Mr. Abse (1963), Mr. Parker (1965) and ultimately the Divorce Reform Bill which became an Act in 1969. The Royal Commission on Marriage and Divorce who reported in March 1956 were of the unanimous view that the mere option of either spouse should not be made a ground for divorce. But the Commission were divided on the more important issue of the principle underlying the Bill introduced by Mrs. White, namely, the doctrine of breakdown of marriage. The Chairman Lord Morton followed by eight members of the Commission was opposed to this doctrine. They admitted that marriage failures were not always due to the fault of a party and that there was "an element of artificiality . . . in the doctrine of the matrimonial offence and the consequential emphasis on legal guilt or innocence." But they were not prepared to hold that the frustration of a marriage may be a misfortune for which neither party is to blame. They opposed the "belief that there was a wholly blameless way of terminating a marriage" and insisted that "it is not the function of the law to provide such a means of release; its proper function is to give relief where a wrong has been done."

3. Nine other members of the Commission while agreeing that "the present law based on the doctrine of the matrimonial offence should be retained" were in favour of introducing "to a limited extent the doctrine of the breakdown of marriage." No member of the Commission favoured the idea that a party against whom a separation decree or order has been made (as distinguished) from the one who had obtained a decree or order should be able, after three years, to have it converted into a divorce. But the nine members favouring the introduction of the doctrine of breakdown of marriage to a limited extent did not want the existence of a separation decree or order to be a bar to its application.

4. The nineteenth member of the Commission, Lord Walker proposed to abolish the doctrine of matrimonial offence altogether. He also rejected the divorce by consent. He recommended that "dissolution on breakdown" should be "the sole mode of ending the marriage tie" and this "at the option of either party." Lord Walker drew a sharp distinction between a divorce by consent and a divorce by breakdown in the following words:

"A marriage cannot fairly be said to have broken down beyond hope of reconciliation merely because the parties had consented to lead separate lives in the past and intended to do so in future; for consent "may be withdrawn and intention may change. What does preclude hope of reconciliation is rather the character of the acts done by the parties respectively and of the events affecting their lives."

A Committee appointed by the Archbishop of Canterbury adopted the proposal of Lord Walker and his reasoning. The report of this Committee is published under the title "Putting Asunder". Sir Jocelyn Simon, President of the Court of Probate, went further and recommended grant of divorce by consent where there are no dependent children. The last proposal in 1966 was the report of the Law Commissioners under the name of the "Reform of the Grounds of Divorce." They proposed three alternatives for divorce, namely:—

(1) breakdown without inquest, that is, breakdown of marriage evidenced by period six months' separation;

(2) divorce by consent; and

(3) divorce on the ground of separation which should apply with a difference both to divorce by consent and divorce without consent. The difference would be in the length of the prescribed period of separation. This would be two years where the parties consented and five or seven years where they did not.

In view of the above discussion it was inevitable that the breakdown of marriage, though to a limited extent, should have motivated the amendment of section 13 in 1964.

5. Prior to the amendment in 1964, clauses (viii) and (ix) of section 13 (1) of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 read:

"13 (1) Any marriage solemnised, whether before or after the commencement of this Act, may, on a petition presented by either the husband or the wife, be dissolved by a decree of divorce on the ground that the other party

* * * * *

(viii) has not resumed co-habitation for a space of two years or upwards after the passing of a decree for judicial separation against that party; or

(ix) has failed to comply with a decree for restitution of conjugal rights for a period of two years or upwards after the passing of the decree."

After the amendment in 1964, the new subsection (1A) which was substituted by the amendment in place of the old clauses (viii) and (ix) reads:—

"(1A) Either party to a marriage whether solemnized before or after the commencement of this Act, may also present a petition for the dissolution of the marriage by a decree of divorce on the ground

(i) that there has been no resumption of co-habitation as between the parties to the marriage for a period of two years or upwards after the passing of a decree for judicial separation in a proceeding to which they were parties; or

(ii) that there has been no restitution of conjugal rights as between the parties to the marriage for a period of two years or upwards after the passing of a decree for restitution of conjugal rights in a proceeding to which they were parties."

6. The scheme of section 13 prior to the amendment was that the right to apply for divorce was given only to the innocent party who had to prove the commission of a wrong by the respondent to obtain the divorce. In keeping with this scheme the pre-amendment clauses (viii) and (ix) of sub-section (1) of section 13 provided that it is only the party in whose favour a decree for judicial separation or restitution of conjugal rights had been passed who could apply for divorce on the grounds that the other party had not resumed co-habitation for a period of two years or upwards after the passing of a decree for judicial separation or had failed to comply with a decree for restitution of conjugal rights for a period of two years or upwards after passing of a decree. The Amending Act of 1964 made a sharp distinction between this original scheme which was confined to the first seven clauses of sub-section (1) of section 13 as they existed prior to the amendment and the new sub-section (1A) which was substituted by the amendment in place of the old clauses (viii) and (ix). After the amendment, therefore, only sub-section (1) of section 13 continued to be based on the fault theory. Sub-section (1A) of section 13 was based on the new breakdown theory. For, it gave the right to apply for divorce to either party to a marriage on the ground that there has been no resumption of co-habitation between the parties for two years or more after the passing of a decree for judicial separation or there has been no restitution of conjugal rights between the parties for a period of two years or upwards after the passing of a decree for restitution of conjugal rights. The changes made by the amendment were as follows:

(1) Prior to the amendment, the right to apply for divorce was given only to the innocent party. After the amendment the right has been given to either party.

(2) Prior to the amendment, the party against whom a decree for judicial separation or for restitution of conjugal rights had been passed was held to be in the wrong if such a party did not resume co-habitation or did not comply with a decree for restitution of conjugal rights for two years or more after the passing of these decrees. It is this wrong which gave the cause of action to the party in whose favour these decrees were passed. But after the amendment, the difference between the parties in whose favour the decrees were passed and against whom the decrees were passed has been eliminated. The mere fact that after the passing of these decrees, co-habitation has not been resumed or the restitution of conjugal rights has not come about is regarded as sufficient to give either of the parties a right to apply for divorce. This is the new way of looking at the phenomenon of the judicial separation between the parties and the non-restitution of conjugal rights between them. This phenomenon by itself is regarded as a breakdown of the marriage necessitating the grant of divorce irrespective of the question by whose fault the breakdown of the marriage has resulted.

7. The question whether a marriage has broken down may be considered in two ways:—

(1) as in section 2 of the Divorce Reform Act, 1969 by the proof of facts, some of which consisted of the matrimonial offences committed by one of the parties but all of which showed that both co-habitation and reconciliation were not possible;

and (2) substituting decrees of judicial separation and restitution of conjugal rights to dispense with proof of facts, as in S. 13 (1A) of the Hindu Marriage Act.

The former method was adopted by the Divorce Reform Act, 1969 and the latter method by Act 44 of 1964 amending section 13 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955. It is to be noted, however that the very fact that decrees for judicial separation and restitution of conjugal rights had been passed presupposes that the various facts some of them showing that one of the parties was at fault and all of them showing that neither co-habitation nor reconciliation was possible had already been proved in the proceedings leading to these decrees. The principle of the breakdown of marriage has thus been introduced by both these enactments only in one particular manner, or putting it differently, to a limited extent. The cohabitation and reconciliation have become impossible not because the parties had consented to lead separate lives but because of the character of the acts done by the parties and the events which affected the lives of the parties. The distinction drawn by Lord Walker between divorce by consent and divorce for breakdown is relevant to understand precisely the principle underlying these enactments. The inquiry into the conduct of the parties is eliminated only in the sense that the decrees for judicial separation and restitution of conjugal rights have been accepted as the results of those inquiries in the amended sub-s. (1A) of S. 13. But it is not the theory of the amendment that the conduct of the parties leading to the breakdown of marriage was not relevant at all. On the contrary, such conduct was very much relevant. In section 2 of the Divorce Reform Act, 1969 such conduct has to be proved while in sub-section (1-A) of section 13 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 such conduct is regarded as proved by the decrees.

8. It is in this background that the amended section 13 (1A) of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 has to be construed.

9. On a plain reading it is clear that the very object of the amendment was to enable either of the parties to the decrees to apply for divorce. This was a deliberate departure from the law prior to the amendment which barred the parties against whom the decrees were passed from making such an application. It is only in this sense that the guilt or the wrong of the party against whom the decrees had been passed was not allowed to act as a bar to the making of the application. But this did not mean that the judgment debtors against whom the decrees were passed were in fact regarded as blameless as the decree-holders in whose favour the decrees were passed. Sub-section (1A) does not differ from sub-section (1) of section 13 in one fundamental respect. Both these provisions merely enable applications for divorce to be made. They do not say that Courts shall grant divorce on such applications. They only enable the applications to be made on the grounds stated in these provisions. Neither sub-section (1) nor sub-section (1A) of section 13 is, therefore, a complete code in itself for the grant of divorce. The other provisions of the Act have to be read along with them. The provision with which we are concerned is section 23. There can be no controversy that section 23 had to be read with section 13 as the latter stood prior to the amendment of 1964. For, the Act has to be read as a whole. Can it be said that sub-section (1A) of section 13 overrides section 23? It is true that sub-section (1A) of section 13 was enacted in 1964 while section 23 was enacted in 1955. If, therefore, sub-section (1A) of section 13 is inconsistent with section 23, one argument can be that the subsequently enacted part of the Act would prevail against the previously enacted part of it. But this rule is subject to context to the contrary. While section 13 is concerned with enumerating the grounds for divorce, section 23 is of a general nature. It opens with the words "in any proceeding under this Act." It, therefore, applies to every proceeding under the Act. It could not, therefore, be overridden by sub-section (1A) of section 13 which applies to the divorce proceeding. Section 23 (1) (a) further says that "if the Court is satisfied that any of the grounds for granting relief exists." This means that section 23 (1) (a) applies only after the Court is satisfied that the petitioner is entitled to relief on one of the grounds enumerated in section 13. This applies not only to the grounds enumerated in sub-section (1) but also to the grounds enumerated in sub-section (1A) of section 13. Section 23 has, therefore, to be read with sub-section (1A) of section 13. What is the result of reading these provisions of law together?

10. On this question there has been a conflict of judicial decisions. On the one hand is the view impliedly based on the fault theory that persons against whom decrees for judicial separation or restitution of conjugal rights have been passed are precluded from taking advantage of sub-section (1A) of section 13 unless some other factors or altered circumstances have intervened and placed the whole affair in quite a different light from that in which the original proceedings were viewed. Similar changes can happen between parties who are separated by a decree for judicial separation. Even a judgment-debtor subject to such a decree may later become interested to regularize unions to give illegitimate children some future and otherwise to achieve certain ends quite different from those which were in contemplation when the decree was passed against him. Under section 23, the Court would have to use its discretion and to see whether a judgment-debtor is able to make as good a case for divorce as would have been made by the decree-holder if instead of the latter the former applies under sub-section (1A) of section 13 for divorce. Laxmibai Laxmichand Shah v. Laxmichand Ravji Shah A I R 1968 Bom 332, Chaman Lal Chuni Lal v. Smt. Mohinder Devi AIR 1968 Punj and Har 287, M. Someshwara v. Leellavathi AIR 1968 Mys 274, and B. B. Syal v. Smt. Ram Syal AIR 1968 Punj and Har 489.

11. The other view implicitly based on the breakdown of marriage theory is that no inquiry into the conduct of a judgment-debtor who applies for divorce under sub-section (1) of section 13 can be made because the very purpose of the amendment was to enable such a judgment-debtor to apply despite the fact that he was the guilty party and the decree had been passed against him expressly on the ground of his fault. If his conduct were to disentitle him to make such an application, then the purpose of the amendment would be defeated. Smt. Ram Kali v. Gopal Dass, 1968 Delhi L T 503 and Ram Kali v. Gopal Dass L. P. A. No. 101 of 1967, D/- 13-1-1971 (Delhi) (FB).

12. It appears to me that the apparent conflict in these two sets of judicial decisions is capable of reconciliation in the following manner: Firstly, it must be understood that the theory underlying sub-section (1A) of section 13 is the breakdown of marriage but only to a limited extent. Therefore, on the one hand, an inquiry into the conduct of the judgment-debtor petitioner is dispensed with in so far as such conduct relates to a period prior to the passing of the decree. It is well-known that the proceedings in a suit or a petition terminate in the decree and the effect of these proceedings is to be seen only as reflected in the decree. The decree was either for judicial separation or for restitution of conjugal rights. It was executable only at the instance of the decree-holder but not at the instance of the judgment-debtor. To that extent, the merits of the contentions of the parties are reflected in the decree. But the effect of the amendment was that an application for divorce could be made by either the judgment-debtor or the decree-holder. These two parties are, therefore, placed on the same footing as far as the making of the application is concerned. If the Legislature had intended that the conduct of the judgment-debtor should again be considered in granting or refusing his application under sub-section (1A) of section 13, then the Legislature would not have placed the judgment-debtor on the same footing as it placed the decree-holder in making such an application. If the Court were to take into consideration the conduct of the judgment-debtor prior to the passing of the decree, then to that extent, the Court would be holding that the right of the judgment-debtor to make the application is not equal to the right of the decree-holder to make such an application. Such a holding would be contrary to the plain wording of section 13 (1A) which does not make any distinction between these two parties as to the making of the application.

13. Of course only such conduct of the decree-holder or the judgment-debtor petitioner would become irrelevant in considering his application under sub-section (1A) of section 13 as had been already considered in the making of the decree against him. But other conduct which had not been so considered in the proceedings leading to the decree would not be precluded from consideration. For, the argument that the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder are placed on the same footing under sub-section (1A) would not be available to rule out the consideration of such conduct as it was never the subject-matter of consideration in the proceeding leading to the decree.

14. For the same reason, the conduct of the decree-holder after the passing of the decree would also have to be taken into consideration. For, the equation of the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder for making the application has no bearing on the conduct of either party whether the judgment-debtor or the decree-holder after the decree is passed. By reading section 23 with sub-section (1A) of section 13, therefore, the following propositions emerge —

(1) Under section 23 all conduct of both the husband and the wife has to be considered by the Court as would have a bearing on the exercise of the discretion by the Court in granting the relief of divorce. For, the nature of the jurisdiction of a divorce Court is not merely to decide a dispute between the parties but also to investigate not only the "facts in Court" but also the "facts of life" between the parties. This is why under sub-section (1) of section 23 the Court has to satisfy itself that the petitioner is not in any way taking advantage of his or her own wrong or disability for the purpose of such relief and that the petitioner is not guilty of various other things which may also operate as a bar to the relief. This is also the reason why under sub-section (2) of section 23, the Court has to try to bring about reconciliation between the parties.

(2) The specific and limited effect of sub-s. (1A) of S. 13 is to preclude the Court from taking into account that portion of the conduct of the parties which has already been considered by the Court in the proceedings leading to the decrees for judicial separation and restitution of conjugal rights. The intention of the Legislature in giving both the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder the right to make an application for divorce was to eliminate the consideration of such conduct.

(3) All other conduct of the parties not considered in the proceedings leading to the decrees and in particular the conduct of the parties subsequent to the decrees has very much to be considered by the Court under section 23 of the Act. Instances of such subsequent conduct or of conduct not considered in the proceedings leading to the decrees would be :—

(i) failure of the husband to provide for the maintenance of the wife;

(ii) when one of the spouses attempted to come and live with the other spouse and the latter spouse defeated such an attempt after the passing of the decree, the Court would have to consider under section 23 whether in such circumstances it could be said that there has been no resumption of co-habitation or no restitution of conjugal rights as between the parties. The Court may come to the conclusion that the spouse who prevented the other spouse from co-habitation and restitution of conjugal rights was taking advantage of his or her own wrong in pleading that there has been no resumption of co-habitation or no restitution of conjugal rights for over two years. He or she could not be allowed to take such a stand in view of his or her conduct.

15. This conclusion accords with the reconciliation of the conflicting principles of fault and the breakdown of marriage as an alternative basis for divorce. In the Divorce Reform Act, 1969 as also in sub section (1A) of section 13 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, while the breakdown of marriage has been made the principal ground for divorce, the inquiry into the conduct of the parties leading to such breakdown has not been made altogether irrelevant. Further, the inquiry into such conduct of the petitioners as would have a direct bearing on the grant of the relief of divorce has always been made by the Courts. Such inquiry has not been made irrelevant by sections 1 and 2 of the Divorce Reform Act, 1969 and by sub-section (1A) of section 13 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955. On the other hand, section 4 of the former Act and section 23 of the latter Act have expressly enjoined on the Courts to make inquiry into the relevant conduct of the parties before exercising the discretion to grant the relief of divorce. Even in Australia, the same reconciliation between the breakdown of a marriage forming the main basis of divorce and the conduct of parties being taken into account in exercising the discretion to grant relief is found to have been made in the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1959. Sections 28 (m) and 36 provide for dissolution of marriage by divorce on proof of circumstances showing the irreparable breakdown of a marriage. But section 37 gives the power to the Court to exercise its discretion to refuse divorce if it is satisfied that by reason of the conduct of the petitioner "whether before or after the separation commenced or for any other reason, it would, in the particular circumstances of the case, be harsh and repressive to the respondent or contrary to public interest, to grant a decree on that ground on the petition of the petitioner".

REVIEWS

THE LAW OF INTERNATIONAL TRADE (Nutshell Series). By Gloria Hooper, B.A., 1970. Sweet & Maxwell, London (In India: N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Bombay-2). Pp. ix & 68. Price 12s.60p.

The present 'Nutshell' provides readers with a brief outline of the considerations involved in international trade transactions. In compressing a large mass of detail certain subjects have had to be omitted and others treated by cross reference only, mostly to other 'Nutshells', and perhaps inevitably only the English side of transactions is dealt with.

2. Every international trade transaction invariably involves the manufacturer, the export and import merchant, the banker, the insurer and the carrier, and embraces several legal and political systems and languages, so that some form of simplification and standardisation has been found desirable. International agreement has attempted to create uniform rules to be incorporated into national legislation, and institutions like UNECE (United Nations Economic Commission for Europe) issue standard contract forms for use in international sales.

3. The establishment of UNICTRAL (United Nations Commission on International Trade Law), which is an important stage in the evolution of international law and codification and unification in the field of international trade, is a development of particular interest to lawyers. The Commission is considering the international sale of goods, international payments, and commercial arbitration, and has compiled a register of organisations in the field together with details of their activities, and a register of texts showing relevant international instruments and related documents, both of them being under constant revision by the legal division of the Secretariat of the United Nations.

4. Besides, the International Chamber of Commerce (ICC) has published Incoterms for the interpretation of terms to be incorporated into contracts, the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits for use by bankers throughout the world, and the Rules of Conciliation and Arbitration, being the rules of the ICC's Court of International Arbitration.

5. An export contract is a contract for the sale of goods as defined by the English Sale of Goods Act, 1893, as extended by the First Schedule to the Uniform Laws on International Sales Act, 1967 (not yet operative), and the 'Nutshell' deals mainly with those parts of a transaction which are peculiarly affected by the customs and practices of international trade. The clause incorporating the payment provisions will normally specify the time, mode, place, and currency of payment, always subject to current exchange control restrictions. The settlement of disputes is by arbitration or legal action. Commercial travellers, branch offices abroad, subsidiary companies abroad, and joint export organisations are forms of representation abroad.

6. The 'Nutshell' deals with trade terms, rights of unpaid seller against goods, frustration and force majeure, and the law applicable. It considers exclusive sale agreements, export via agents, investment abroad, documentation and invoices, carriage of goods, and Government controls. It contains a table of cases, table of statutes, and index.

7. Although the 'Nutshell' is useful as an aide memoire for last-minute revision before Bar examinations, major textbooks, like 'The Export Trade' by Clive Schmitthoff, are indispensable. As adviser to the United Nations, Schmitthoff helped to prepare the report which led to the creation of UNICTRAL.

PUBLIC INTERNATIONAL LAW. By D. J. Latham Brown, M.A., LL.B. (Cantab), Sr. Lecturer, in Law, Leeds University. 1970. Sweet & Maxwell, London (In India: N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Bombay). Pp. XXX & 295. Price, Not stated.

What is public international law and how has it come about? How does it work and what are its limitations? What may or may not be expected of it? The work before us attempts to give us the answers. In a general way, public international law, or the law of nations, is a body of rules and principles which States consider legally binding on them. According to the author, international law is a body of principles and rules embodying general and particular commitments, binding in honour, which are formulated by States and their agents to deal with certain aspects of their external relationships..... "International commitments are a species of quasi-law, on the verge of true law, properly treated as a branch of jurisprudence."

2. After a brief historical introduction, the author discusses types of States, incidence of international commitments, evolving institutions and controls, transactions and responsibility, the problems of nationality and the rights of peoples and persons. He considers the dignity and equality of States, intervention in war and peace, force and obligation, disputed titles, dependent rights, and misuse of territory. The topics of relationships of States and people, asylum, treatment of aliens, the governing principles of recognition, the concept of non-intervention, and membership of organisations, are covered.

3. International law is less efficient than internal law in that there are many areas of State activity, e. g., nationality, armaments, immigration, and fiscal and trade policies, where the law does not reach. An international court can exercise jurisdiction only where the State has consented to that jurisdiction. Although taking precedence over municipal law, it is closely related to the internal law of the States, for it is in the municipal courts that a large part of international law is enforced.

4. The main sources of international law are treaties, custom, and the general principles of law recognised by civilised Governments. Institutions such as the League of Nations, the United Nations, the Court of Justice of the European Communities like the European Coal and Steel Community and the European Economic Community, the European Court of Justice of the Council of Europe, and the World Court or the Hague International Court of Justice are implements by which the law of nations can be made more effective. The International Court of Justice applies international conventions establishing rules expressly recognised by the consenting parties, international custom as evidence of a general practice, judicial decisions, and teachings of highly qualified publicists. Where the "general principles of law recognised by civilised nations" is applied there could really be no lacuna to make a dispute non-justiciable. The reference to judicial decisions 'as subsidiary means for determining rules of law' enables the Court to utilise the advantage of its own permanence by looking to previous decisions.

5. The aim of the present author has been to get hold of principles and to seek out working doctrine from the practice of States revealed by the conduct of their agents. The work is provided with a table of cases and incidents, table of drafts, resolutions, declarations, and conventions, and British legislation, and should well repay the serious student's efforts to understand the subject. EUROPEAN BUSINESS LAW. By G. A. Zaphiriou, LL. M. (Lond.) Visiting Lecturer in European Law, City of London Polytechnic, 1970. Sweet and Maxwell, London (In India: N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Bombay 2). Pp. xxiii and 264. Price, £3.15s. net.

The European market is expanding fast with the rapid process of integration and, whether or not the United Kingdom eventually joins the European Economic Community, European business law, to which the publication before us is an expert introduction, must become a subject of great practical relevance to those in commerce and industry. There are still many differences in the various European national legal systems, whose business laws are compared and contrasted, care being taken to cover the French and West German law in detail, and all aspects of trading under the European Economic Community are explained. A variety of rules, including those that relate to contract and tort, private and administrative rules, and rules which fall within the spheres of internal, Community and international law, are dealt with.

2. Of the six Parts in the book, the first three deal with trading under the European Community treaties, general features of commercial laws in Europe, and commercial companies, including partnerships and subsidiaries. Taxation of enterprises, corporation tax, double taxation relief, value added tax, industrial property and anti-trust law, are the subjects of the next three parts.

3. After some introductory paragraphs on the common origin and influences of Continental European law and the international unification of commercial law, the author proceeds to describe the impact of the treaties of the European communities on business enterprises and the extent of their means of redress before the European Court of Justice. He then deals with companies and amalgamations, and with the status, residence, establishment and recognition of companies within the European Community. American and United Kingdom interests at present carry on business in a large scale within these territories. In view of the recent company law reforms in Germany and France and the first directive of the Council of the European Communities on the approximation of Company law, the analysis is limited mainly to these two countries. After discussing the tendencies of approximation and alignment of tax laws within the Community the domestic provisions of the member States affecting business enterprises are briefly outlined. Further, the international and especially European, background of the law relating to patents, trade marks and unfair competition is discussed. The last Part, on the restrictive practices and exclusive dealing agreements within the European Community, contains brief references to domestic rules on restrictive practices and monopolies.

4. The publication contains general concepts and terminology and detailed information on the law upto December 1969. Further important developments will appear in the European Business Law Section of Journal of Business Law, of which the present author is Co-Editor. As it is, the publication traces the pattern of current tendencies in modern European business law and provides the basic information and its sources to enable businessmen and their legal advisers to reach solutions to concrete legal problems. It includes a table of cases, table of legislation, table of treaties and conventions, and index. R.S.S.

LIFE ASSURANCE & TAX PLANNING. By Peter Harris & Derek Heuson, LL.B. (Lond.) Directors of Life Assurance and Tax Planning Services Ltd. 1970. Sweet & Maxwell, London. (In India: N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Bombay 2.) Pp. xix and 256. Price, £3.15s net.

The ramifications of life assurance and the tax laws which affect it are highly complex, and the technical book under notice explains fully the modern policies available and their use in tax planning by bringing together all the schemes available for the mitigation, if not the solution, of many income and estate duty problems in England; a full survey of the range of policies available in the market is provided, with clarification, from examples, of their practical effects.

2. In its practical approach, the book deals, for instance, with problems facing professional partnerships, provision for school fees, the difficulties of the private company director and the alternative estate duty claims that different trust arrangements attract; it makes comparisons of the varying investment returns available by tackling these problems with life assurance based solutions. The basic law and practice is fully discussed and advice is given on how to maximise return through an optimum investment and minimum taxation.

3. The earlier part of the book deals with the Finance Act, 1968 and the ways of mitigating estate duty and the use of life assurance, the combined effects of the Finance Acts of 1968 and 1969 and estate duty funding. Partnerships, private companies, annuities, surtax mitigation, settlements; and types of policy, are covered in the rest of the book.

4. Life assurance business is regarded as a single class of business, whether the company exclusively transacts life and annuity business or is a composite company, and the different kinds of life assurance and annuity contracts are commented upon. The effect of the Finance Act, 1968 in restricting the use of life assurance contracts in tax planning is examined. How premiums paid out of income, so as to keep a life policy drawn up under trust, can provide an estate duty free policy from the moment of inception, and how this approach can be adapted to the position of a private company shareholding, is explained. After considering the estate duty implications of the Finance Act 1969, the position of a life policy as an alternative to a settlement is discussed, as well as the different aspects of solving partnership problems through life assurance. A separate chapter describes 'Back to Back Arrangements', an expression used to describe what is a combination of two separate contracts, and the main categories of life annuity from the tax planning angle are considered.

5. Provided with a table of cases, table of statutes, and index, the book includes appendices on estate duty rates and surtax rates. In another appendix all the relevant legislation is reproduced for the busy practitioner to instantly refer to the wording of a statute and for the numerous outsiders who may have neither the time nor the facilities to consult the Acts elsewhere. Similarly, Appendix 2 gives the definition of many life assurance terms for the benefit as much of those in life assurance business as of those outside it. But there are no drafting precedents, which can be of use only to the lawyer.

6. This comprehensive handbook on assurance techniques should be of particular assistance to solicitors, accountants, bank managers, and investment advisers generally. The presentation of the material being in non-technical terms, the reader should be easily able to assimilate the very considerable specialist tax information provided in the book.

REVENUE LAW. By Barry Pinson, LL.D., Fellow of the Institute of Taxation. 4th Edition. 1970. Sweet & Maxwell, London (In India: N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Bombay 2). pp. lxxvii & 702. Price £2.18s. net.

The volume under review is an introduction to the study of Revenue Law in England for the reader who already has some knowledge of the basic legal principles. Since it last appeared, in 1968, the law of income taxation has been consolidated in the Income and Corporation Taxes Act, 1970 and the Taxes Management Act, 1970. The Finance Act, 1969, amended by the Finance Act, 1970, altered the law of estate duty to such an extent as to necessitate the re-arrangement and re-writing of a good part of the text. New anti-avoidance provisions, introduced in 1969, have made it necessary to re-write the final chapter, now entitled "Tax Avoidance".

2. There are five parts in the book. Part I deals with taxes on income and on capital gains, and is in four Divisions dealing, respectively, with the taxation of the income of non-corporate bodies (under the heads of profits of a trade, profession or vocation; the taxation of emoluments, of income from land, of foreign and of trust incomes; covenants and settlements; partnership taxation; losses, and capital allowances) the taxation of companies, the taxation of short term and long-term capital gains, and administration and assessment.

3. This part leads on to the second part on the Estate duty (under the heads of rates of duty; exemptions and reliefs; gifts, settled property; partnership interests and joint property, life companies; controlled companies; valuation; and foreign elements), and to the third part, on betterment levy. The interaction of betterment levy with other taxes and estate duty is discussed, and the next part states the principles of stamp duties briefly, while Part 5, entitled "Tax and Estate Planning" gives the reader a glimpse of the kinds of problem which commonly arise in practice in connection with gifts, settlements, arrangements on divorce and separation, Wills and Pension schemes.

4. Believed to be the only text book dealing with the whole of British Revenue law in a single volume, it states the law as on 1st July 1970, and carries a list of the works cited, a table of cases, a table of statutes, and index. The subject-matter of the book is presented in such a form as to make it useful as a text book for examinations as well as to the practising lawyer and accountant. The main object has been to state the principles of Revenue law in a readable and intelligible form. No attempt has been made to be exhaustive, but, in a number of cases, the reader is referred to the standard works on the various branches of Revenue law where a more detailed discussion or citation of authorities may be found.

CRIMINAL PROCEDURE IN UGANDA AND KENYA (Law in Africa No. 13) By Douglas Brown, LL.B., M.A. Sr. Lecturer in Law, University of West Australia. 2nd Edition. 1970. Sweet & Maxwell, London. (In India N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Bombay 2). Pp. lxxvii & 185. Price, £1-10s. net.

The principal source of the law governing criminal procedure in Uganda and Kenya is the Criminal Procedure Code Act, which is the main enactment governing criminal trials. It is a comprehensive, detailed statute which lays down how a trial should be conducted, the rights of the parties, and the role of magistrates, police officers and witnesses. The Code follows the principles of English law closely and has been amended several times. That the accused should be tried in a just and fair manner remains however the basic principle. The present text-book sets out to explain the rules and practice governing these criminal trials, and supplements the provisions of the Codes. A substantive body of case-law has evolved in East Africa laying down how the statutory provisions of the Codes should be applied in the Courts, and this book seeks to merge the statutory provisions and the case law in a manageable form. A basic knowledge of substantive criminal law is presumed throughout and no attempt is made to examine the merits or deficiencies of the law. It just explains what the law is and how it operates in the magistrates' courts.

2. Since the 1st edition appeared in 1965, both Uganda and Kenya have successfully integrated the two systems of law represented by the courts administering English law and local statutes on the one hand and customary law on the other. The Criminal Procedure Code having been made applicable to all Courts, magistrates, who formerly relied on simple rules of procedure, had now to administer a more complex set of rules. And the various amendments to the Code have now necessitated this new edition.

3. When the British established a protectorate in Uganda in 1894, they introduced English law and a system of Courts to administer it. There had already been in existence a system of customary law Courts administered by Chiefs and others in different tribes. The abolition of existing customary law was attended with difficulty as the British knew from experience and so it was permitted to continue alongside the administration of English law in courts where the procedure was similar to that obtaining in England. For nearly seventy years, therefore, the structure of the courts was based on the division of Uganda Law into that which was based upon English law and that which was based on customary law. The former were generally known as the 'protectorate' courts, and the latter as the 'native' or 'African Courts'. It soon became clear, however, that this artificial division would have to disappear and that a single system of law and courts would have to evolve, and the merger of the two systems became possible under the Magistrates' Courts Act 1964. A similar situation existed in Kenya where the courts were merged under the Magistrates' Courts Act 1967.

4. The present book discusses the topics of jurisdiction, summonses and warrants, and arrests and searches, and proceeds to deal with prevention of offences, prosecutions, charges, bail, pleas, hearings, witnesses and defence. The other chapters cover judgment, sentence, orders, appeals, magistrates, assessors, and statutory interpretation, and the book carries a table of cases, a table of statutes and index.

5. The material in the book is presented as simply as possible and it should be of great assistance to lawyers; magistrates, police officers, students, and others who have occasion to be involved in a criminal trial. R.S.S.

THE PROPOSED INDIAN OMBUDSMEN. (A comparative study of the Lokpal and Lokayuktas Bill 1968). By S. K. Agrawala, M. A., LL.M., LL.D., Professor and Head of the Department of Law, University of Poona. 1971. N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Bombay 2. Pp. xvii & 81. Price, Rs. 12.50.

Swedish in origin, the post of Ombudsman was created more than 150 years ago, and several countries subsequently followed suit. But it is the Danish Institution, created in 1954, which has aroused the greatest international interest in political and academic circles. In India the President of the Republic appointed in 1968 the Administrative Reforms Commission, one of its terms of reference being to consider the problems of citizen's grievances. The Commission, in its interim report, unanimously recommended the setting up of "an institution analogous to that of Ombudsman," viz., the Lokpal and the Lokayukta, to cover the vast area of cases arising out of the exercise of the executive power which may involve injustice to individuals and for which no remedy is available. The Report gives a full justification for the setting up of the institution, considers the conditions for its creation, and makes comprehensive recommendations regarding appointment, powers, and procedure.

2. In order to set up an institution analogous to that of 'Ombudsman,' the Lokpal and Lokayuktas Bill 1968 was introduced in the Indian Parliament in May 1968. The Bill was said to have been passed by the Lok Sabha and was pending consideration by the Rajya Sabha when the latest mid-term elections intervened. The present monograph, which was originally prepared as a paper for the Fourth Commonwealth Law Conference held in New Delhi in January 1971, is a first critical and comprehensive study of the Bill. In the first three chapters the author deals with appointment, qualifications, and tenure, the principle of ministerial responsibility and the Ombudsman, and his powers and functions. He discusses the matters not within the jurisdiction of the Ombudsman, administrative and quasi-judicial functions of the administration, matters of policy and matters of administration, secrecy of information, the procedure of investigation, and the Ombudsman's powers of action. In the appendices are given the Government of India Resolution on the establishment of the Central Vigilance Commission, and the text of the Lokpal and Lokpyak as Bill 1968 as reported by the Joint Committee of Parliament.

3. The scope of the study is in no sense exhaustive. It attempts to cover only certain controversial aspects of the bill and considers some of the theoretical objections to the introduction of an Ombudsman-like institution in a parliamentary democracy. It extensively refers to the experience of New Zealand and U. K., the two Commonwealth countries where the institution has been most successfully functioning, parallel Scandinavian law and practice have also been mentioned where necessary.

4. The institution of Ombudsman has three basic characteristics: He is an independent and non-partisan officer of the legislature who supervises the administration, he deals with specific complaints from the public against administrative injustice or maladministration (or he may proceed on his own information); he has the power to investigate, criticise and report back to the legislature, but not to revise administrative actions. Although the present Indian Bill satisfies these conditions, it can by no means be a panacea for all bureaucratic ills. Administrative procedures must be improved, parliamentary control must be strengthened, and review by the Courts must be simplified. It may be necessary also to adopt the tribunals and enquiries as a general pattern for settling disputes between the individual and the authority. R.S.E.

EVIDENCE (Nutshell Series). By R. J. Clayton, B. A., B. C. L. 1970. Sweet & Maxwell, London (In India: N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Bombay 2). Pp. ix & 68. Price, 12s. 60p.

The law of Evidence determines the relevancy of facts, or what sort of facts may be proved in judicial proceedings; and the production of proof of relevant facts, or who is to give it and how, and the effect of improper admission or rejection of evidence. The real, little 'Nutshell' before us deals with definitions, the classification of evidence, the functions of judge and jury, and relevancy, and the burden and standard of proof, in the early chapters. Four of the chapters are concerned with facts which need not be proved, like presumptions, judicial notice, and formal admissions, the competence and compel-lability of witnesses, privilege, the method of securing witness's attendance, and oaths and affirmations; they consider the topics of corroboration required by law and by practice, the nature of corroboration, the examination-in-chief, cross examination and re-examination of witnesses.

2. The rule that 'hearsay evidence' is not admissible was formerly true of civil cases as well as criminal cases. The old rule still exists in criminal cases but has been modified by the Civil Evidence Act 1968 in civil cases. But there are certain exceptions to the rule even in criminal cases, as for example, the declarations of deceased persons, evidence given in former trials, admissions, confessions, and statements contained in public documents. In civil cases, according to the Civil Evidence Act 1968, hearsay evidence is admissible only by virtue of this Act, although certain common law rules about admissions are preserved in S. 9 of the Act.

3. The other chapters consider further rules of admissibility, opinion evidence, State interest, illegally obtained evidence, and convictions as evidence in legal proceedings. Character, previous convictions of the accused, or similar facts, are covered in the chapter on evidence of disposition, followed by the topics of documentary evidence, its proof, admissibility of extrinsic evidence, and procedure to ensure production of the original.

4. The book, which carries a table of cases, table of statutes, and index, states the law as on 6th June 1970.

5. 'Archbold: Pleading, Evidence and Practice in Criminal cases' (1969) and 'Phipson on Evidence' (1970) are among the major authoritative works on Evidence*. The former deals with the subject generally and in its application to particular categories of offence. The latter has incorporated most of the recent legislative developments in the field and, in consequence, the chapters on burden of proof, facts relevant to show identity, similar facts, hearsay evidence, confessions, written statements in criminal proceedings, judgments and rules of evidence, have had to be extensively revised or re-written. So far as India is concerned, the English law on the subject has been reduced to the form of express propositions, arranged in their natural order, and with modifications to suit the peculiar Indian circumstances, in the Indian Evidence Act 1872.† R.S.S.

THE LAW OF INCOME-TAX, SUR-TAX & CAPITAL GAINS TAX (In a nutshell). By Michael P. Barber, LL.B., (Lond.), Lecturer in Law, Brighton Polytechnic. 1970. Sweet & Maxwell Ltd., 11 New Fetter Lane, London (In India: N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., 164 Samaldas Gandhi Marg, Bombay 2.) Pp. xi & 114. Price, 12S.60P.

The law of income-tax in England is based upon the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1970, a consolidating Act replacing the Income-tax Act 1952 and subsequent Finance Acts. The Act of 1970 will itself be amended by annual Finance Acts until the relevant legislation is codified. The administration of the Acts is dealt with in accordance with the provisions of the Taxes Management Act 1970. Corporation tax was introduced by the Finance Act 1965 Part IV and the relevant legislation is called the Corporation Tax Acts. The tax on capital gains, on the other hand, was introduced by the Finance Act 1962 in respect of short term gains, and the tax on gains realised outside the short-term period was introduced by the Finance Act 1965.

2. The income-tax, corporation tax and capital gains tax are administered by the Commissioners of the Board of Inland Revenue, the detailed provisions being laid down by Taxes Management Act 1970. It is worthy of note that the law as to capital allowances has been consolidated into the Capital Allowances Act of 1968, and provides for the aggregation with the income of the parent of the investment income of unmarried infant children, not regularly working. The Finance Act 1969 disallows, subject to exceptions, interest as a deduction for tax purposes. Capital allowances are available for expenditure on industrial buildings, machinery and plant, agricultural land and buildings, mines, oil wells, and scientific research expenditure.

3. The neat little guide-book before us, deals, inter alia, with the profits of a trade, profession or vocation, partnership income, losses, taxation of emoluments, personal reliefs, and occupational pension schemes. It covers the taxation of income from land, foreign income, life assurance policies, total income, surtax, charities, and covenants and settlements. It is provided with a table of cases, a table of statutes, and an index, and states the law as at the time of the Finance Act 1970.

4. The United Kingdom tax legislation is so voluminous and complex that it has been next to impossible to produce a student's book in reasonable compass which will give a general view of the subject. The present publication is a concise guide to this extensive and complicated law with special reference to the needs of students studying for the final LL.B., or other professional examinations. It is not a substitute for bigger text books like C. N. Beattie's "Elements of the Law of Income and Capital Gains Taxation" and Barry Pinson's "Revenue Law" (1970 N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Bombay 2), both of which have already been noticed in these columns. In order to keep the Nutshell to manageable size the law relating to Corporation Tax has been omitted. It should be of great assistance as an aid to comprehension and revision. R.S.S.

INTERNATIONAL LAW THROUGH THE CASES. By L. C. Green, University Professor of International Law. University of Alberta. 3rd Edition. 1970. Stevens & Sons Ltd, 11 New Fetter Lane, London. (In India: N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Bombay. 2.) Pp. xxii & 855. Price, Not stated.

Since the appearance of the first edition of the Case-book before us in 1959, the International Court of Justice has delivered several important judgments and advisory opinions while the European Court of Justice and the European Court of Human Rights have also begun to make a substantial contribution to European jurisprudence. Further, municipal tribunals have given a number of decisions which are of significance beyond their own national limits. It is no longer possible to consider international law simply from the standpoint of international judicial tribunals and of the judicial practice of countries like the United Kingdom and the United States.

2. In the present edition some of the earlier judgments, like those on internationalised territories, have been omitted as being of primarily historical interest. Judgments on the law of armed conflict being of importance, the decisions on war and neutrality have been retained, although in reduced size. Of the seven parts in the book, two deal with the foundations of international law and international personality. They describe international law and society, the law-creating processes, international and municipal law, the domain of international law, and are concerned with the typical subjects of international law, the sovereignty and equality of States, recognition, international representation, and the continuity of international personality. The next two Parts, on State jurisdiction and objects of international law, focus attention on immunities and limitations under customary law and under conventional law, e. g., the freedoms of fisheries, communications and water use, international economic law, criminal law, and protection of minorities. Territory, land frontiers, maritime frontiers and the high seas, individuals, corporations and ships, from the objects of international law. Parts V and VII, on international transactions and the law of international institutions. Consider the meaning, conclusion and legal effects of international treaties, their interpretation, breach, reparation, and termination, as well as international torts, judicial and quasi-judicial international institutions, supra-national institutions, and international civil service. Part VI, on the law of armed conflict, discusses the legal and illegal uses of force, State and effects of war, land warfare, military occupation, war crimes, neutrality, and Civil war.

3. Referring to the emergence of the new conception of international law, Judge Alvarez, of the International Court of Justice, emphasised that the new law is not only juridical but also political, economic, social and psychological and is a law of social interdependence concerned with the harmonising of the rights of States and emphasising their duties as well, and condemning the abuse of right. He spoke of the Convention adopted by the United Nations General Assembly in 1948 on the Prevention and Punishment of the crime of Genocide. The new international law, reflecting the new orientation of the legal conscience of the nations, condemns genocide as a crime against civilisation.

4. The system used in the present book for the classification of topics is broadly speaking that of the earlier editions although some chapter headings have had to be altered. The reference books cited at the beginning of each chapter to enable students to use the case-book in conjunction with leading text-books have also been amended. Each judgment has been printed as a single document so that the Court's process of reasoning may be pursued. Where cases refer to more than one aspect of law, cross references are used, and separate and dissenting judgments are included where they are significant.

5. The volume is furnished with an index and a list of cases.

Public law is concerned with the constitution and functions of all kinds of governmental bodies, including local authorities, and their legal relationship with one another and with the individual. It embraces constitutional law and administrative law, and also covers criminal law, which is only one aspect of the State's relationship with the individual. The second edition of this broad outline of public law (1st edition, 1967) has become necessary owing to continuing developments in this field. Changes were expected to occur in 1970 as the result of the Beeching Commission Report on the Courts and the Radcliffe Maud commission Report on local government.

2. The Beeching Commission recommended a complete separation of the criminal and civil business of the higher courts and the reconstitution of the Supreme Court, and a revised split of jurisdiction between the High Court and the County Court by increasing the latter's jurisdiction to £1000 in tort and contract actions. According to the Administration of Justice Bill 1970, there will be a redistribution of business among the Divisions of the High Court, and the re-naming of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division as the Family Division.

3. The first three chapters of the present outline give the stranger to English law a general introduction to the English legal system. The hierarchy of Courts exercising civil and criminal jurisdiction is shown in diagram form and explained in detail. Although criminal law really forms part of public law it is considered here only in so far as it is relevant to the discussion of the Liberties of the Subject and Police Powers in the last two chapters. In the main, the book is concerned with certain aspects of constitutional law, such as the common law powers of the Crown that are discussed under the head of 'Royal Prerogative' and the workings of Parliament. The prerogative powers are conveniently subdivided into those that are exercised in the legislative, the executive, and the judicial spheres of Government. More especially, the book dwells on administrative law and such matters as delegated legislation, administrative tribunals and enquiries, and the jurisdiction of the Courts over administrative action taken by Government departments and local authorities.

4. Among the topics considered are Parliamentary supremacy in legislation, delegated legislation, Parliamentary scrutiny and judicial control. The discussion then centres on the Council on Tribunals, the constitution of tribunals, procedure, review by the High Court, the Inspector's report in administrative enquiries, and costs. Attention is focussed on the judicial control of administrative action and the rules of natural justice, and the ultra vires doctrine and the judicial review of administrative action. The topics of substantive ultra vires, procedural ultra vires, use of powers for an improper purpose, irrelevant consideration, unreasonableness, want of evidence, and bad faith, are considered. Among the methods of challenging administrative action are mentioned the prerogative orders of prohibition and certiorari, mandamus, injunction the declaratory judgment, and action for damages.

5. The book should be useful to students and others who want a background knowledge of public law on which to build a study of more detailed works. The selected bibliography lists a number of books, both introductory & comprehensive, and the volume is furnished with a table of cases, table of statutes, and index.

R.S.S.

A FIRST BOOK OF ENGLISH LAW.

By O. Hood Phillips, Q. C., B. C. L., M. A. (Oxon.), J. P., of the University of Birmingham. 6th Edition. 1970. Sweet & Maxwell, London (In India: N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Bombay 2.) Pp. xxix & 346. Price, £ 1. 2 s. net.

This elementary introduction to the study of English law briefly surveys its characteristics and the principles on which justice is administered in England, and gives, in Part I, an account of the various systems of courts and their composition and jurisdiction, with just enough history to indicate their origins. Dealing relatively fully with the sources of English law, the author explains the principles underlying the interpretation of statutes, the application of judicial precedent and the use of legal text books, and describes the literary materials in which legislation, judicial decisions, and juristic opinion, are embodied. In the third and last Part the main branches of English private law are sketched and the general principles stated, with the object of introducing the reader to legal conceptions and terminology.

2. In the latest edition, Part I takes account of the extended jurisdiction of county courts; the reorganisation of the Court of Appeal into a Civil Division and a Criminal Division, the latter displacing the Court of Criminal Appeal; new rules regarding committal proceedings; the introduction of majority verdicts in criminal cases; the proposal to set up a new Family Division of the High Court, and a new Admiralty and Commercial Court in the Queen's Bench Division; the establishment of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration or 'Ombudsman'; the setting up of the Senate of the Inns of Court to exercise the disciplinary jurisdiction of the Benchers; and the Beeching Report on Assizes and Quarter Sessions.

3. In Part II sections of chapter 10 have been re-written to incorporate discussion on the report of the Law Commission on the interpretation of statutes, its proposals for reform, and the draft clauses of a Bill for giving effect to them. The chapter on judicial precedent has been re-written in the light of the House of Lords Practice Statement of 1966. The effect of the House of Lords decision in Conway v. Rimmer is discussed as well as the dicta of the Civil Division of the Court of Appeal in Gallie v. Lee concerning the binding force of its own precedents, the corresponding dicta of the Criminal Division of the Court of Appeal in R. v. Gould, and the treatment of the House of Lords precedents by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. The discussion of ratio decidendi has also been expanded.

4. In Part III the chapter on Criminal Law has been largely re-written to take account of the many changes introduced by the Criminal Law Act 1967, the Theft Act 1968, the Criminal Justice Act 1967 and the Children and Young Persons Act 1969. The chapter on the law of tort has been revised while in the chapter on the law of contract new topics, such as mistake, frustration and misrepresentation, have been included. Paragraphs on the legal position of children, young persons and minors have been inserted in appropriate places in the book.

5. Apart from these topics, notice has been taken of the Criminal Appeal Acts 1966 and 1968, the Administration of Justice Acts 1968 and 1969, the Justices of the Peace Act 1968, the Race Relations Act 1968, the Hire Purchase Act 1965, the Family Law Provision Act 1966, the Land Commission Act and the Leasehold Reform Act 1967. Some of the new cases referred to are concerned with mens rea and strict liability in Criminal Law, use of books of authority, exemplary or punitive damages, remoteness of damage in nuisance, fundamental breach, and specific performance.

6. Mention should be made of the table giving the dates of accession of English sovereigns from the Norman conquest, the table of cases, the table of statutes, and index.

SENTENCING OFFENDERS IN MAGISTRATES' COURTS. By Keith Devlin, J. P., LL.B., M. Phil., Lecturer in Law, School of Social Sciences, Brunel University, 1970. Sweet and Maxwell, London (in India: N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Bombay-2). Pages xxii and 223. Price, Not stated.

Imprisonment, fines and monetary penalties, probation, attendance centres, remand homes, approved schools, detention centres, and Borstal training, are the common sentences given in criminal trials in Magistrates' Courts. But discrepancies between sentences passed by different Courts (or even by the same Court) for apparently similar offences are such as to call for serious notice. The application of the principles of sentencing is therefore of particular interest to the vast majority of people who come into contact with the criminal Courts as complainants, defendants, or witnesses. The present work deals authoritatively with every important aspect of the problem and covers all the ground from a discussion of first principles to a detailed examination of the law and procedure relevant to every kind of sentence, supported by abundant references to decided cases.

2. The book describes in broad outline the sentencing process itself in terms of the legal factors affecting the decisions, and deals individually with the main methods of disposal, custodial and non-custodial. Each of the measures is considered in terms of its effects upon the offender, its effectiveness, and the factors taken into account in dealing with the quantitative aspects of sentencing, like calculating the amount of the fine or the length of the period of imprisonment or probation. The author, who touches on some of the procedural aspects also, is concerned with such subjects as costs, compensation and disqualification, and he considers briefly the treatment of mentally disordered offenders, female offenders, and offences involving strict liability.

3. The five commonly identified aims of sentencing are retribution, individual deterrence, general deterrence, protection of the public, and rehabilitation. The different stages in the sentencing process are the obtaining of information regarding the circumstances of the offence, about the background of the defendant, and from the defendant himself in mitigation of the offence, the making of the sentencing decision, and the communication of it to the defendant. The non-custodial measures include fines, absolute and conditional discharge, probation orders, attendance centre orders and binding over orders, and custodial measures include committals for sentence, imprisonment, committal for Borstal training, and detention centre orders. Orders on conviction include orders on costs, reparation and retribution, disqualifying from driving and endorsement of driving licence, and recommendation for deportation. The book, which contains a table of cases, a table of statutes and a table of regulations, states the law as at 1st February 1970.

4. Eminently fitted for working on this subject, the author, a practising barrister, has been deputy Chief Clerk in a busy London Court and Magistrate in the Inner London Juvenile Courts, and as University lecturer has engaged in research projects in this field; the book should help to encourage further discussion on the wider issues and encourage further research. A general complaint in India is that the Courts devote much time and labour to the trial of cases, but the question of determination of punishment is disposed of in minutes, and Mr. K. S. Chhabra has prepared certain broad guidelines for the Courts to avoid, or reduce the chances of, disparity in punishments under similar circumstances (Quantum of Punishment in Criminal Law in India, 1970). Everybody, whether Magistrate or student, is bound to benefit more or less from a perusal of the present volume.

THE BOMBAY SALES TAX ACT, 1959. By C. C. Anajwala, B. A. (Hons.), LL.B., 1971. C. Jamnadas & Co., 146-C Princess Street, Bombay-2. Pp. xvi & 320. Price, Rs. 15.

In consolidating and amending the law regarding the levy of sales-tax on the sale or purchase of certain goods in the State of Maharashtra, the Bombay Sales Tax Act 1959 repeals the pre-existing laws on the subject. The charging section (Section 3) renders every dealer having a turnover of all sales or purchases during the year in excess of a specified limit liable to pay tax. The limit of turnover is fixed at Rs. 10,000/- for importers and manufacturers and at Rs. 30,000 for other dealers, provided in each case that the dealer has sold or purchased taxable goods of at least Rs. 2500/- during the period.

2. For the purposes of the Act, all goods are divided into five schedules, viz., exempted goods (A) declared goods (B), luxury goods (C), raw materials (D), and remaining goods (E). The main features of the Act are; exemption of Schedule A goods from the tax; introduction of a composite system of sales tax, i.e., a single point levy of sales tax at the first stage and a general sales tax at the last stage on Schedule B goods; a single point levy of sales tax at the first stage on Schedule C goods; a single point levy of general sales tax on Schedule D goods, and a two-point levy of tax (sales tax at the first stage and general sales tax at the last stage and retail sales tax) on the rest of the goods in Schedule E.

3. Sales tax is leviable on the sale of taxable goods after establishing a proper territorial nexus between the taxing authority and the transaction sought to be taxed. The sale must be in the course of business and not a mere casual sale. The Act provides for the determination of disputed questions by the Commissioner, but a question once determined cannot be entertained for determination once again, but only in appeal or by way of revision. The determination by the Commissioner is binding on all subordinate courts, but not on superior courts, and even the Commissioner, acting as appellate authority, is not bound by his own determination. The jurisdiction of civil courts is expressly barred, but this would not preclude the exercise of the writ jurisdiction if the administrative tribunal acts in violation of the declared law or acts against the principles of natural justice, or refuses to exercise its powers, or acts in excess of its powers.

4. The Act has separate chapters on the incidence and levy of tax (Ss. 3-19), sales-tax authorities and tribunal (Ss. 20 & 21), Returns, assessment, payment, penalty, recovery and refund of tax (Ss. 22-47), liability to produce accounts and supply information (Ss. 48-51), and proceedings, offences and penalties (Ss. 52-69). Similarly, the Bombay Sales Tax Rules 1959 has chapters on sales tax authorities and tribunal (Rules 5-6B), registration, licences, authorisation, recognition and permits (Rules 7-21), returns, payment of tax, penalty, amount forfeited or composition money, assessment of tax and penalty (Rules 22-39), grant of drawback, set-off and refund (Rules 40-52-A), bills and memoranda, inspection of accounts, appeals and revision (Rules 54-65), and sales tax practitioners, service of orders, copies of documents, offences and penalty (Rules 66-71), followed by as many as fortyfour different forms, all amending Acts and Notifications upto 26th January 1971.

5. The present publication, which contains a table of cases and index, gives detailed commentaries on the various provisions of the Act, as supported by the latest case law and includes several illustrations in clarification of complicated questions. When the book was practically ready, there were two new developments; the legislature passed the Amending and Validating Act 1 of 1971 and the State Government amended Rule 22 of the Bombay Sales Tax Rules.

6. The book should be eminently useful to students of law, tax-payers and tax consultants.

THE LAW OF ACCOUNTS, By N. Krishnama Charlu, B.A., B.L. Advocate, Dhone, Kurnool Dt. (A. P.), 1971. Pp. 141 & ix. Price, Rs. 10.

An 'Account' connotes a statement showing credits and debits grouped under classified headings for every separate business or undertaking and balance showing to what extent one is liable to another. For instance, a cash account shows a summary of transactions affecting cash. Similarly, accounts are maintained for different kinds of assets a person may possess, different kinds of income and expenditure he may receive or incur, and different persons with whom he may have to deal. Whatever the consideration for each item, every item must be entered in terms of money, and every specific sum whether actually paid out or due to be received, must find a place. The 'account' therefore naturally implies that one person is responsible to another either by contract or by other fiduciary relations created by law or otherwise and an 'account book' is a compilation of day-to-day dealings carried on by a person, the entries in it, provided they are regularly kept in the routine of business, being relevant under Section 34 of the Evidence Act.

2. In recent years the law relating to accounts has become increasingly important owing to the remarkable expansion of trade and commerce in the country, and books of account are the traditional evidence of the justice of one's claims. The legal principles governing accounts lie scattered in various enactments, and the busy lawyer, uncertain and doubtful about a point, finds little time to delve deeply into the statute laws and the stream of judicial decisions for clarification. The compact handbook under reference is designed to be of assistance to him.

3. The meaning of accounts, accounting and books of account, their various kinds and the different types of errors in them are described, as well as open, current, running and mutual accounts. Stated or settled accounts and the distinction between real account and account stated are discussed. The meaning of acknowledgments, their scope and essentials are explained, and then consideration is given to acknowledgments during Court vacations, and acknowledgments by the member of a joint family, by an advocate, or by an heir. The book is next concerned with payments and the law of appropriation, and payments made by an advocate, by the Court, or by the husband or wife. Another chapter covers suits, accounting periods, order for production by Court, non-production and consequences and adverse inference. Other topics canvassed are what is cause of action, pleading, limitation, burden of proof, considerations before and after obtaining decrees and their forms.

4. Furnished with an useful index, the present handbook gives an up-to-date and comprehensive account of the law, covering the entire gamut of the problems concerning the use and value of traders' books of accounts in Courts of law. Set out in simple language, with illustrations and examples, the book analyses and brings out the basic principles involved in the judicial decisions. It is arranged in such a way that the desired point on topic can be traced readily. The headings and sub-headings are boldly printed and a detailed synopsis is given at the head of each chapter.

R.S.S.

INTRODUCTION TO LEGAL THEORY. By John D. Finch, B.C.L., B.A., Lecturer in Law, University of Liverpool. 1970. Sweet & Maxwell, London (In India: N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Bombay), pp. viii and 145. Price, £1.2s net.

Because too many factors are common, to both jurisprudence as a whole and legal theory, it is difficult to draw a fine distinction between a study of the general nature of law itself and of particular concepts in it. Jurisprudence is the study of fundamental legal principles, including their philosophical, historical and sociological bases, and an analysis of the legal concepts. Jurisprudential thought has in recent times undergone considerable change, particularly in the realm of social philosophy underlying law. Broadly speaking, legal theory, which is the subject of the present publication, involves a study of the characteristic features essential to law and common to legal systems, an analysis of the basic elements of law which distinguish it from other forms of rules and standards and from other systems and social phenomena.

2. A legal theory course should induce genuine understanding of the issues involved and discourage the habit of merely memorizing disconnected detail, and the book before us keeps this in mind. It presents a short guide to some of the most significant aspects of that part of jurisprudence which has to do with legal theory, and provides an understanding of some major developments in the theory of law. The views of a number of jurists are examined and compared in order to highlight their essential characteristics.

3. The aim of the book is to give an insight into analyses of the nature of law. More a self-contained course than a reference book, it provides a basis for wider studies in the field of legal theory. There is a special introductory chapter calculated to dispel unnecessary doubts and remove complications, and to provide guidelines with reference to specific issues. Substantial reference is made throughout the book to original sources.

4. The eight chapters in the book are concerned with natural law and positivism, Bentham and Austin, Law as a system of rules, Kelsen and the great mystery, law, force, and authority, and the central position of the courts. The nature of law and the law of nature, law and sovereignty, law and sanctions, and sovereignty in action are considered; and the reader's attention is focussed on law and legal concepts, law and fact, the basic norm and the legal system, and law and lawyers. One of the chapters (Ch. 7) deals with three principal relationships, viz., the connections between law and force, i. e., physical force and physical powers; the notion of power considered from the angle of the element of authority in law; and a brief review of some notable interpretations of the nature of international law. The character of law in its relation to factual situations and physical events can largely influence the manner of accounting for the place and function of legal institutions, especially the Courts, within a system of law.

5. The book does not attempt to cover the whole field of jurisprudence. It is concerned primarily with legal theory and with the principal methods which have been used to describe and analyse the essential constituent elements of the phenomenon 'law'. It should be of immense value not only to the law student but also to any person or institution interested in the nature of law and the analysis of legal concepts.

6. Mention should also be made of the index of contents and the index of proper names.

VETERINARIAN & THE LAW. By Dr. H. K. Lall, Director, Animal Husbandry, U. P., Lucknow. 1st Edition. 1971. Metropolitan Book Co. (Pvt.) Ltd., Delhi 6. pp. xii & 488. price Rs. 35.

It is necessary for a veterinarian to be familiar with common law like a member of any other profession, as well as with the various Acts and statutes pertaining to his special sphere of work regarding the improvement of livestock, control of diseases, and protection of animals, in order to perform his duties effectively and efficiently. The volume under review describes the various Acts which will be useful to a veterinarian or an animal-husbandry man in the performance of his duties connected with meat inspection and protection of animals, including prevention of cow slaughter. There is also mention of common law duties which will be helpful to him in dealing with the ordinary cases of criminal assault or poisoning of livestock.

2. A veterinarian may have to appear as an ordinary witness or complainant in the Court, when his only duty is to state accurately as to what he observes without exaggeration or suppression of any detail. In his capacity as a witness to facts it is improper to express any opinion on them; it is for the Court to form an opinion or draw a conclusion from the proved facts. Generally, he appears as an expert witness on account of his special knowledge of the subject, as the Court itself does not generally have the benefit of special study or acquired skill. The present volume gives a brief description of the Courts, their powers, and some of the common legal procedures followed in them.

3. For veterinarians who are working as managers of factories, sales organisations, or institutions preparing biological products like anti-sera and vaccines for veterinary use, it is necessary to know the broad objectives and some of the relevant sections of the Act dealing with factories and with labour. Some familiarity with these Acts will also be useful to veterinarians and others working as managers of agricultural or livestock farms. As a result of actual experience, it was thought proper to include some of the broad essentials of these Acts for the general guidance and information of veterinarians. For those in charge of these institutions it may be desirable to consult the texts of the Acts and the relevant rules.

4. The extent to which animals have been involved or incriminated in legal cases in foreign countries like the U. K. and Canada is very considerable. Review of several important cases, besides various enactments concerning animals, have been published in the Veterinary Annual, and they provide useful information about the claims upheld in law Courts for damages on account of injury or loss sustained through acts done by animals. The legal decisions reported in the Veterinary Annual have now been compiled for the information of veterinarians in India. Other chapters in the book are devoted to service conditions and professional conduct, regulation of slaughter houses and food inspection, powers and functions of local bodies, purchase of drugs, including spirituous preparations and poisonous drugs, co-operative societies, grants-in-aid, and contracts, and export of livestock and livestock products. There are as many as fortysix useful appendices, a glossary of vernacular terms, and index.

5. The volume should prove useful for day-to-day reference by field workers as well as by veterinary students for the study of veterinary jurisprudence. To avoid repetition, the various Acts in the States have not been described; only the Central Acts and some selected Acts, mostly pertaining to U. P., have been dealt with in detail, the rest being given in the Appendices. For the benefit of the young and aspiring veterinarian, a chapter on post-graduate courses and fellowships has also been included.

JAMMU AND KASHMIR LAW REPORTER. December 1970. Vol I, Part I. Published by the High Court of Jammu and Kashmir, Srinagar. Chairman of the Editorial Board: Mr. Justice Jaswant Singh. Annual subscription, Rs. 30/- Monthly subscription Rs. 3/-.

In view of the substantial rôle of case law as a principal source of law, the importance of the practice of accurate law reporting cannot be over-emphasised. Law Reports, which are intended for practical use, contain the essential matters which practitioners need to know, i. e., a statement of the facts in issue, the general nature of the pleadings on either side, a brief statement of the arguments of counsel, and the judgment of the Court. The High Court of Jammu and Kashmir has now resolved to bring out its own Law Reporter. A few years after the establishment of the State High Court in 1928, its judgments began to be published in a special section of the Punjab Law Reporter, but in 1942 the Law Department of the Government embarked upon the publication of the Jammu and Kashmir Law Reporter, which was however discontinued in 1953. Subsequently several judgments found a place in the All India Reporter, and in 1962 the Kashmir Law Journal was started, but it was said to be unable to meet the growing needs of the High Court, the subordinate judiciary and the litigant public, with the result that the High Court itself has now decided to bring out its own official journal.

2. The judgments of the High Courts of Jammu and Kashmir are of course published in a number of journals like the All India Reporter and other journals covering particular specialised branches of the law, but it is thought they cannot provide adequate space for all the important judgments of the Jammu and Kashmir High Court. As it is considered that the judgments of this Court are binding on the lower Courts as against the judgments of the other High Courts in the country which have only a persuasive force, it is believed essential that the subordinate Courts should be apprised of the latest pronouncements of the High Court with all reasonable expedition. The Law Reporter should also enable the Court to publish all the Rules and circulars issued by it from time to time. That there is some difference between the provisions of the laws in force in the State and the corresponding laws obtaining in other parts of India is another reason why this Reporter was thought necessary.

3. The Jammu and Kashmir Law Reporter will be a monthly publication covering all the important decisions of that High Court, and it will cover also important decisions of the Supreme Court relating to that State. The initial volumes will contain all the important decisions of the High Court given in 1969 and 1970 as well as Supreme Court judgments of this period. An attempt, we are informed, will also be made to publish such of the old judgments of the High Court as have not so far been published and have not been overruled or reversed.

4. The Supreme Court case reported in the present issue is the well-known case of A. K. Kraipak & others v. The Union of India, where the distinction between administrative and quasi-judicial powers is dilated upon as well as the matters to be considered in determining the nature of these powers. The scope and object of the rules of natural justice are examined and the changes in the concept of natural justice discussed, as well as their applicability to quasi-judicial and administrative inquiries. The issue carries both a nominal and a subject index of cases.

THE CHOICE OF LAW IN EX-BRITISH AFRICA. By Kwamena Bentsi-Enchill, M. A. (Oxon), LL.M. (Harvard), J.S.D. (Chicago), Formerly Dean and Professor of Law, University of Zambia, 1970. Sweet & Maxwell, London (In India: N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Bombay 2.) Pp. 30. Price, 10s. 50p.

Reprinted from Zambia Law Journal (1969 Vol. I No. 2), the article under notice is in four parts. The first part deals with the formal sources of legal pluralism and considers that in territories like India and Africa, where there was no pre-established system of European law, a uniform legal dispensation has been accorded, under which the doctrines relating to settled colonies are placed side by side or partially intermixed with the doctrines relating to conquered or ceded colonies. The pre-existing legal systems are regarded as "adapted to the requirements of the local population" though "insufficient for and unsuitable to the requirements of European settlers". The treatment was that of a newly discovered country, like a settled colony for the administration and British and Christian settlers using the laws of the mother country, leaving the Muslim and Hindu inhabitants to their own laws and customs with exceptions that were called for by commercial policy.

2. The second part is concerned with the standard formula for the reception of English Law and its problems. For the British West African colonies during the colonial period, one common statutory formula provided the frame-work within which the different systems of law were recognised and rules laid down for regulating the relations between them. Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland, though retaining important features of this West African formulation, differ in some respects; so do the British East Africa territories, while those of South Africa differ further by largely substituting Roman Dutch Law for English Law. The primary concern of the present article is with the broad range of problems which the different formulations throw up, and to delineate them in the context of a detailed discussion of the West African formulation, and more particularly in connection with Ghana where that formulation was fully applied until changes were introduced with the introduction of a republican constitution on 1st July 1960. It is concerned with how far the law of England is in force, the application of Native law and customs, problems of interpretation, and suitability to local circumstances.

3. The formula for the recognition of Native Law and Custom, which is considered in the third part, deals with the conditions of validity, and the problem of ascertainment, while the last part, on the problems concerning the choice of law rules, treats of the exceptions where English law is the party's choice and where the transactions are unknown to Native Law and Custom, and then proceeds to discuss the residual rule.

Lecturer in Law, The City of London College. 5th Edition, 1969. Stevens & Sons Ltd., 11, New Fetter Lane, London (In India: N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Bombay). Pp. xxxii & 451. Price £5-10s net.

The thirtyone chapters of the standard work before us are divided into four separate parts, viz., the International sale of goods, representatives abroad, matters incidental to exporting, and Government regulation of exports. It deals in detail with the frustration of contracts, the incidence of foreign law (conflict of laws), agency arrangements, branch offices and subsidiaries, joint export transactions and restrictive practice legislation. It covers also banking and financial practices, export credit guarantees, insurance, transport by sea and air, protection of patents and trade marks abroad, arbitration and litigation, export documentation, export licences and exchange control, as well as customs regulations, relief from purchase tax, and other topics of practical importance.

2. In the present edition, a new chapter deals with the two Uniform laws on International Sales and the Uniform Rules for the collection of Commercial Paper 1967 and international hire-purchase. The effect of containerisation is fully considered and the section on carriage by air re-cast. The treatment of the protection of Patents and Trade Marks Abroad has been expanded, while other topics discussed for the first time in this edition include the international settlement of investment disputes, the Czechoslovak International Trade Code of 1964, the proposed Visby amendment of the Hague Rules on Bills of Lading, new trade terms, export marketing partnerships and other forms of joint export marketing. For the first time the provisions of the American Uniform Commercial Code are referred to regularly.

3. United Kingdom legislation referred to for the first time in this edition includes the Companies Act, 1967, the Resale Prices Act, 1964, and the Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1968. More than 100 Court decisions are noted, the Board of Trade suggestions for the simplification of export documentation are discussed, and as many as five chapters consider the Government regulation of exports. The provisions of the Convention of Stockholm, which constituted EFTA, and the Anglo-Irish Free Trade Area Agreement have been noticed, as well as the provisions of the Treaty of Rome. The book, which has several appendices and an index, includes a table of cases, a table of statutes, and a list of international conventions and other formulations of international trade law. Since this book is widely used abroad

THE EXPORT TRADE (THE LAW & PRACTICE OF INTERNATIONAL TRADE). By Clive M. Schmitthoff, LL.D. (Lond.), LL.D. (Berl.), Principal

—it was translated into Russian in 1958 and into Japanese in 1968—a list of the major works on export trade law in English, French, German and Spanish has been added.

4. For more than twenty years this concise account of the law and practice of international trade has been a reliable guide to exporters and students. An internationally recognised authority in this field, the author who deals comprehensively with all aspects of the subject, helped to prepare the report which led to the creation of the UNCTAD (United Nations Commission on International Trade Law). Businessmen and students who study the subject as part of their syllabuses in business studies and law should find the volume extremely useful. The newcomer as well as the expert receives proper guidance through the description of the elements of legal institutions and their special functions in international trade. The book states the law as it stood on last July 1969.

5. A briefer outline of the considerations involved in international trade transactions is to be had in The Law of International Trade (Nuttall Series, 1970. N. M. Tripathi Ltd. Bombay 2). R.S.B.

FAMILY LAW (Concise College Texts).

By Judge H. B. Grant, 1970. (Sweet & Maxwell Ltd., London. (In India N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Bombay-2.) pp. xix & 172. Price £. 1.2s.

The aim of the Concise College Texts Series is to cover in detail, with lucid and helpful explanation but in manageable length all current law and practice. The emphasis is on clarifying and placing in context recent legislation and case law. The essentials of the subject are clearly explained and presented in such a way as to enable the student to acquire and retain a thorough understanding of the law and its practical background, and the present publication provides a readable introduction to family law in England in its widest sense.

2. The author covers the full range of family law. Part I, which is headed Engagement and Marriage, deals with the law relating to the matrimonial relationship, including the duty to cohabit, the duty to maintain, matrimonial property law, and the legal consequences of the death of either husband or wife. The subject matter of Part II is the breakdown of marriage, which is described in chapters on separation by agreement, matrimonial orders, divorce and judicial separation, nullity, and the recognition of foreign decrees. Part III, which outlines the laws relating to children, consists of chapters on custody and guardianship, legitimacy, wardship, and children in need.

3. The Matrimonial Proceedings and Property Act, 1970 makes fresh provision for empowering the court to order either spouse to make financial provision for, or to transfer property to, the other spouse or child of a family, to make orders for the variation of ante-nuptial and post-nuptial settlements, and, for the custody and education of children. It abolishes the right to claim restitution of conjugal right, and declares what interest in property is acquired by a spouse who contributes to its improvement, and makes provision as to a spouse's right to occupation in certain cases. And it amends the law about the property of a person whose marriage is the subject of a decree of judicial separation dying intestate.

4. The publication gives sufficient details and is complete enough to satisfy the needs of students for passing their examinations, of practitioners for solving everyday problems, and of social workers for appreciating the legal implications of family problems. By incorporating the recent changes in English family law—in particular the provisions of the Divorce Reform Act, 1969 and of the Matrimonial Proceedings and Property Act, 1970—it also becomes a useful guide to the new divorce laws which became effective in January 1971. The main provisions of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1970 and of the Marriage (Registrar General's Licence) Act, 1970 have also been included in the text in anticipation of their full implementation.

5. Seventy-five leading English statutes relevant to the subject of English family law have been brought together in Sweet and Maxwell's Family Law Statutes 1970 (N. M. Tripathi, Bombay), where we have all the basic statutory material which would be needed by a student for professional or university examinations on divorce and family law.

6. The volume is provided with a table of cases a table of statutes, and index.

ADMINISTRATIVE LAW FOR SURVEYING STUDENTS. (Concise College Text). By H. W. Clarke, LL.M., D. P. A. 1970. Sweet & Maxwell Ltd., London (In India: N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Bombay-2). Pp. xvi & 159. Price £. 1.5s net.

Hitherto, students in England have been obliged to work from books dealing specifically with local government law; town and country planning law; compulsory purchase and compensation; and the Land Commission and betterment levy. The volume under review obviates that need, because it provides an outline of those aspects of administrative law which are important from the viewpoint of surveying students. Its contents differ substantially from books on administrative law written for lawyers, who are mainly concerned with the general nature of the legal powers of the executive branch of government and the methods by which such powers may be limited and controlled by the courts. Surveyors may be interested in these aspects also, but their main concern is with the substance of executive powers particularly as they affect the property rights of individuals in land.

2. The volume covers the structure and organisation of local government; the powers of local authorities with regard to housing, public health, and highways; town and country planning law; compulsory purchase of land and compensation; the powers of the Land Commission and the assessment of betterment levy. In the last two centuries, powers were frequently sought from Parliament by private companies to enable them to provide public utility services like canals and railways, and these powers included that of acquiring land compulsorily, subject to the payment of compensation. Subsequently urgent problems of sanitation arose in urban areas and similar powers of compulsory acquisition had to be given to the public health authorities. Owing to the expansion of local authority social services in the fields of housing, health and welfare, and other developments since then, the granting of such powers increased enormously. There are four separate elements in the process of compulsory acquisition and compensation. The first is the source of the power, Act of Parliament or otherwise, to acquire land compulsorily. Secondly there are the procedures for authorising the acquisition (Acquisition of Land Act, 1946), and there is the procedure for actually taking the land (Compulsory Purchase Act, 1965); finally, there is the process of assessment, settlement and payment of compensation mainly under the Land Compensation Act 1961. It is still possible for land to be taken by the Crown for defence purposes in an emergency without payment of compensation, but the prerogative powers of the Crown are superseded wherever an Act is passed regulating the exercise of a particular power.

3. The Land Commission Act, 1967 had two main objectives: To ensure that enough land is available for houses and other buildings needed and, secondly, to ensure that part of the increased value due to development should be returned to the community. To achieve these objectives the Act sets up a Land Commission with power to acquire, manage and dispose of land which is suitable for development; and to collect a betterment levy on the development value arising out of certain transactions in or operations on land. It is clear from the second annual report of the Commission, published in October 1969, that the realisation of neither of the objectives has come upto expectations.

4. The aspects of administrative law dealt with are required by the revised syllabus for the examinations of the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors. They cover a very wide field dealt with in a number of standard works referred to in the further reading list given in the Appendix. A detailed study of these works may take much longer than the time usually available to a surveying student, who should, therefore find this one volume extremely useful.

5. Mention should be made also of the table of cases, the table of statutes and index.

R.S.S.

THE NEW FRONTIERS OF COMPANY LAW. By S. C. Sen, Bar-at-law, 1971. Eastern Law House, Calcutta 13. Pp. xl & 423. Price, Rs. 40.

The twentieth century changes in legal thinking on company jurisprudence have been fundamental and many established concepts have given way to newer ideas and developments. English company law is no longer the only source for Indian lawyers and courts. The impact of modern corporations in the United States, Germany and several other countries and the new accounting methods in the U. S. S. R. have set into motion far-reaching changes in the conventional approach to company jurisprudence. The main object of the book under review is to focus the attention of corporation lawyers to the modern developments. While trying to analyse the effects of the new ideas on conventional corporation law, the author has summarised the studies of various reputed writers on the changing nature of a corporation, and has drawn special inspiration from Dr. Friedmann's Law in a Changing Society, which approaches the subject with the conviction that the law must, in contemporary conditions, respond to social changes if it is to fulfil its function as a significant instrument of social order.

2. Dealing with the newer concept of the corporation the author describes how it has grown in size, resulting in the dilution of the powers and control of the shareholders and increase in the powers of the manager. Despite literal compliance with the statutory requirements, there may be other facts inducing courts to withhold from the members of an association one or more of the attributes of a corporation, or 'to pierce the corporate veil'. The doctrine of ultra vires, which has been presenting a confusing spectacle, is dealt with and the inner conflict of the doctrine of Royal British Bank v. Turquand analysed. The author then proceeds to cover the modern position of company directors, and the changing pattern of their functions, liabilities, and duties. He is then concerned with the great debate as to whether profit motives or social responsibilities are the dominant objects of a company and also as regards the parties to whom the corporate directors are responsible. He considers the powers of the court to convene company meetings and the question of forfeiture and lien, and suits and proceedings by and against companies. Government companies, the new reliefs and remedies available against mismanagement and oppression under Sections 397 and 398 of the Companies Act, 1956, and some aspects of winding up by courts are covered. The important question of the worker's position in a company is discussed as well as that of worker participation in management and the legal effects of modern thinking on the subject. A chapter has also been included on the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act. The book, which includes the text of the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Rules, 1970 and a table of cases and index, states the law as in June 1970.

3. The present book should furnish considerable guidance to company executives and lawyers. Included in it are the results of some of the author's own researches, viz., the legal structure of the modern corporations and the position of the different organs, the doctrine of ultra vires, lien and forfeiture of shares, winding up by court suits and proceedings against companies, and reliefs against oppression and mismanagement. Some of his views have been accepted by the courts and the others are yet to be canvassed.

THE SECRETARIAL PRIMER, 1971.
1st Indian Edition. Eastern Law House Private Ltd., Calcutta 13. Pp. xii & 390. Rs. 18.

The publication of the work under review is an important development of the Chartered Institute of Secretaries in India, because it is the first book sponsored by the Institute, dealing with secretarial practice, that has been specially written in accordance with Indian law and practice. The Institute has secured the services of a team of writers who are well qualified in Indian Company Law and who have had many years' practical experience in the company field.

2. The company secretary arranges for and attends meetings of the board of directors and of the shareholders and creditors, and the business done at the meetings should be validly transacted and not be capable afterwards of being impugned owing to irregularities, so that it becomes incumbent on the secretary to carefully study the law on the subject. The manager or secretary of a company on the requisition of a director shall at any time summon a meeting of the board. A balance sheet and profit and loss account having been prepared and audited, the secretary will draft a director's report for submission to the board, based on the results of the company's working for the year, his knowledge of the position of the particular trade concerned and the intention of the directors with regard to the payment of a dividend and of amounts to be placed to reserve. The report should be confined strictly to facts although some directors like to insert a paragraph with regard to the prospects for the next year. The preparation of the agenda for meetings is an important duty of the secretary, as the quick transaction of business depends largely on the ability of a secretary to draft the agenda in a manner calculated to facilitate quick decisions.

3. Divided into twenty-five chapters, the present work covers joint stock companies, incorporation, memorandum and articles of association, capital and its division into shares, commencement of business, and prospectus. It considers offers for sale and underwriting, stock exchange requirements, issues of shares, share certificates and register of members. It is also concerned with annual return, calls and forfeiture, debentures and deposits from the public, transfer of shares and registration of documents. The topics are then discussed of directors and secretaries, inter-corporate loans and investments, alterations of capital, ac. counts and audit, dividends and reserves, and winding up. Illustrative model resolutions and specimen forms are interspersed throughout the book.

4. The Secretarial Primer has been acknowledged to be a useful text-book on secretarial practice for students taking the examinations of the Chartered Institute of Secretaries, London, and as a valuable work of reference for members of the company Secretarial Profession. It is also useful to students appearing for the examinations of the Institute of Company Secretaries of India as well as to others taking secretarial practice as a part of the commerce courses in the different Indian Universities. By sponsoring publication of this Indian edition the Indian Association of the Institute has done real service towards the progress of professional education in India.

THE NEW JURISPRUDENCE (The Grammar of Modern Law.) By the Hon. Mr. Justice P. B. Mukharji, Chief Justice, High Court of Calcutta, 1970. Eastern Law House Private Ltd., 54, Ganesh Chunder Avenue, Calcutta 13. pp. (42) & 490. Price Rs. 35.

Jurisprudence is the study of fundamental legal principles, including their philosophical, historical and sociological bases, and an analysis of legal concepts. Jurisprudential thought has lately undergone considerable change, particularly in the realm of social philosophy underlying law. Although an abstract and theoretical subject, researches into it have repercussions on a wide range of other subjects; for example, the law of crimes calls for a good knowledge of criminology and psychiatry. As taught today much of the jurisprudence has become out-of-date and the teaching of jurisprudence in universities and law schools requires radical reorientation, both in basic ideas and presentation. No wonder, therefore, that this subject should have been chosen as the theme of the Tagore Law Lectures of the Calcutta University which are embodied in the volume before us.

2. The first four chapters deal with the New Jurisprudence, the Schools of Jurisprudence and Theories of Law in the world context, the Law and its definitions indicating its many concepts, and the New Thesis which the distinguished author suggests. These are followed by successive chapters on Legislative jurisprudence, Constitutional jurisprudence, Common Law Jurisprudence, Equity Jurisprudence, Company Jurisprudence, Industrial Jurisprudence, Taxing Jurisprudence, Administrative Jurisprudence, International Jurisprudence, Matrimonial Jurisprudence, Economic Jurisprudence, and Justice in theory and practice. The chapter on Economic Jurisprudence indicates the growing emphasis on economics as a part of modern jurisprudence, while the final chapter covers theories of justice, courts, tribunals, and precedents, including Procedural Jurisprudence, Jurisprudence of developing countries and patterns of decisions and judgments. The volume, which carries a useful index, cites and discusses cases (a table of cases being included) which are not exhaustive but only illustrate the points made in these Lectures.

3. "No Court or other authority in the State under the Constitution", says the author, "can determine the primordial question whether the Constitution has been lawfully framed—Even if framed under violence, . . . it stands outside the whole area of law, jurisprudence, and justiciability . . . the Constitution is the supreme law of the land, even supreme above the law, and itself Governing all other laws. The supremacy of the Constitution is beyond the reach of the legislative, the executive, and the judicial power created by the Constitution itself . . . But the Constitution consents to a vulnerability when it provides for its own amendment, and such amendment is within the field of justiciability, jurisprudence, and law for the purpose of examining whether the constitutional amendment has been made strictly according to the constitutional provision itself."

4. Jurisprudence, says the present author, includes whatever law sees and does in every field of human activity. It includes not only the concept of ideas, described as New Jurisprudence but also the critical analysis of the different schools of jurisprudence, and the theories and definitions of law, as well as applied jurisprudence covering a very wide variety of subjects. The method of treatment followed in each chapter does not discuss the entire law on the subject but dwells only on the juristic trends operating in the particular field. It pinpoints new ideas and makes a new presentation. These Lectures, which should stimulate new ideas and new thinking, should help to re-adjust many of our notions about jurisprudence, its functions, its ideals, and its techniques of operations. Making a complete departure from the orthodox approach to jurisprudence, the learned author presents, perhaps for the first time, the whole panorama of law and justice in theory and practice illuminated by penetrating and far-reaching observations.

ANNUAL SURVEY OF COMMONWEALTH LAW 1969. Editor: H. W. R. Wade, Q. C., LL.D., D.C.L., 1970. Butterworth & Co. (Publishers) Ltd., 88 Kingsway, London W. C. 2 (In India: Eastern Law House, Calcutta) Pp. lxxxiv & 792. Price, Rs. 180.

Prepared under the auspices of the British Institute of International and Comparative Law and the Faculty of Law in the University of Oxford the Fifth Volume of the Annual Survey of Commonwealth Law, which is just to hand, covers the period from July 1968 to June 1969. Its twenty-one chapters provide a high level of critical commentary on statutes, cases and legal literature throughout the Commonwealth.

2. Seven of the twenty-one chapters cover constitutional law, fundamental rights and civil liberties, administrative law, social services and controls, maritime law, international law, and conflict of laws while five deal with taxation, monopolies and restrictive trade practice, company law and partnership, industrial property and labour law. Real property, trusts, succession, and family law are the topics of four chapters, and the others consider criminal law, evidence and procedure, civil procedure including Courts and evidence, commercial law, torts and contract.

3. Parliamentary Government in the States in India, legislation, and judicial decisions concerning acquisition of property excessive delegation, equal protection to everybody, free trade, and Government contracts, are among the Indian topics dealt with in the section on Constitutional law. The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the Punjab High Court in invalidating the Appropriation Acts passed after the Speaker's purported adjournment of the Assembly. It held that the ruling of the Speaker can be questioned in a Court of law; the Speaker was wrong in ruling on March 18 that his order of adjournment of March 18 still stood; the Governor has an absolute and unfettered power to prorogue the house; the Governor is entitled to promulgate an ordinance in circumstances such as those of mid-March 1968, and the Deputy Speaker's certification of a Money Bill will suffice in such circumstances.

4. In Bihar, on coming to power, the united Front Government had appointed a Commission of Inquiry into alleged malpractices, abuse of power, favouritism and corruption by members of the preceding Ministry. The Supreme Court was clear that, when a Ministry goes out of office, its successor may consider any 'glaring changes' and may, if justified, order an inquiry "Otherwise each Ministry will become a law unto itself and the corrupt conduct of its Ministers will remain beyond scrutiny."

5. In respect of judicial decisions, three cases in the period under consideration provide a conspectus of constitutional doctrine as to the discrimination permitted under Article 15 (4) of the Constitution in favour of the 'Backward classes'. In view of the judicial decision invalidating State laws imposing sales tax on inter-State sales the Union Parliament devised a scheme which allowed the States to receive the proceeds of the Sales tax levied on inter-State sales and this scheme was upheld by the Supreme Court (State of Madras v. Nataraja Mudaliar, A I R 1969 S C 147).

The Supreme Court also held that attempts by Ministers to whip up party and public support for a Presidential candidate do not per se amount to undue influence.

6. Several other Indian references relate to labour law. Indian Courts have continued to discuss the purposes of industrial law and industrial tribunals more openly than is the case in many other countries. A worker is a person employed in industry but what is 'industry'? In Fraser & Ross v. Sambasiva Iyer (A I R 1969 Mad 134) the Madras High Court held that accountancy was a learned or liberal profession and therefore not an industry and the Supreme Court held that the catering employees in the Cricket Club of India could not be parties to an industrial dispute as the Club was non-profit making and could not be called an industry (A I R 1969 S C 276). In various statutory contexts the Courts have had to interpret the terms 'dismissal' and 'discharge.' Further a new form of industrial action has become very popular on the Indian sub-continent, viz., Gherao, which is held to be always likely to involve a violation of the criminal law. A stay-in-strike is legal in India, although workers who stay in their employer's premises after normal working hours are liable for a trespass, but their conduct per se is not a criminal offence.

7. The Survey which contains a table of statutes, table of cases, and subject-index and territorial index, maintains the high standards of scholarship, analysis and presentation which we have come to associate with it. Lawyers seeking concise well-documented information on Commonwealth decisions cannot do better than turn to it.

THE METRICS OF LEGAL PHILOSOPHY. By A. R. Biswas, M.A., LL.M., 1970. Firma K. L. Mukhopadhyay, 6/1A Dhiren Dhar Sarani, Calcutta 12. Pp. ii and 59. Price, Rs. 10.

"Legal science", observed K. G. Wurzel, "would succeed in stopping the principal breach in its ramparts through which uncertainty may enter, if the social forces and value judgments could be transformed into clearly conceived logical formulae of definitely limited legal effectiveness." This can come about with the utilisation in legal science of the concepts of other sciences, according to the author of the book before us. Science has so far remained outside law and its philosophy, and it is high time it was also pressed into service, as has been attempted in the present book.

2. The book contains thirteen sections, with an epilogue. Twentythree main equations of social mathematics have been derived on the basis of analogy and induction to get at the legal truth. Juridical truth often eludes one's grasp since it does not coincide with historical, psychological or empirical truth, notwithstanding the positive tendency dominant in jurisprudence. It however admits of quantum-mechanical treatment, which is attempted here. The logical formulae are transformed into those of analogy and induction and become related to life and experience, and this has formed the foundation of the present work.

3. Among the topics dealt with in the work are; the calculus of probability; analogy, social mathematics; the law of the libido; a mass man in a mass society; the pyramid of power politics; society and revolution in a pictograph; Government as a triple point; three powers in a circuit; jurimetrics; judicial power in a 'tunnel effect'; and legal philosophy in a new key.

4. As remarked by the author, science has two kinds of impact on law, ideal and material. The first relates to ideas and the second consists in the influence of science and technology upon law as an instrument of social control. Thus in the U. S. A. Virginia's cedar-dust statute is a collaboration of science, technology and law, for the public good. It declared all red cedar trees within two miles of any apple orchard to be nuisances if the State entomologist certified that they were the hosts of the cedar rust, in which case he was authorised to order their destruction, and the Supreme Court upheld the validity of this statute. The scientific statement of the effects of cedar rust spores on apple orchards holds good for all time, but in 1960 there was a change in the technology of fungicides, for it was found that they could now prevent fungus. But the statute was not changed, because at any time cedar dust might develop a strain which would be immune to all known fungicides. This is law in the shadow of science. The scientific method has been applied in legal research in recent years on the analogy of the natural sciences and the term 'jurimetrics' is suggested for it; it means the scientific investigation of legal problems such as the quantitative analysis of the judicial process. G. Schubert's "Quantitative Analysis of Judicial Behaviour" (1959) has done good work on this in respect of U. S. Supreme Court decisions.

5. A versatile scholar, the present author has also written legal studies such as "the evolution of judicial power in India" and "Indian jurisprudence of property rights." He is reputed to have studied Politics, Economics, History, Sociology and Law on the one hand, and Mathematics, Physics, Chemistry, Botany, and Statistics on the other. He has also exercised the powers of a Magistrate and Collector. The claim, therefore, is perhaps justified that the present attempt is somewhat unique to measure the concepts of legal philosophy in terms of Social Mathematics. R.S.S.

THE LAW COLLEGE MAGAZINE, ERNAKULAM, 1971. Managing Editor: M. P. Padmanabha Pillai. Pp. English-Section 136, Malayalam 28.

Replete with as many as twenty-eight instructive articles on current legal problems, ten of them from student contributors, the latest issue of this College magazine has the distinction of carrying contributions not only from the judges of the Kerala High Court and the members of the Kerala University staff but also from practising lawyers and academic men from outside Kerala. The student contributions deal, inter alia, with property right as a fundamental right, Kashmir as an international dispute, the executive, the Legislature and the judiciary, and the place of the judiciary in a democracy.

2. The article on the utilisation of river waters in international law should be of topical interest in view of the disputes frequently plaguing the relations between Tamil Nadu, Mysore and Kerala. The Inter-State Water Disputes Act, 1956, authorises the Government of India to constitute ad hoc tribunals for deciding inter-State water disputes, and the Government of Tamil Nadu, it is well known, has been pressing the Government of India for the appointment of such a tribunal.

3. Discussing the constitutional position of the Governor, the writer of another article specifies the following four areas as requiring clarification: appointment and dismissal of Council of Ministers: summoning, proroguing, and dissolution of legislative assembly; frequent legislation by ordinance; report to the President on the failure of the constitutional machinery in the State. In a review of the functioning of the International Court of Justice, the writer considers some of the urgently felt defects in the existing procedure and law and indicates possible reforms.

4. Writing on the subject of equality under the constitution and the Supreme Court, Dr. A. T. Markose deplors that there has been a complete misconception concerning the doctrine of classification and that there have been no intelligible differentia on which the classification should be based and no rational nexus which that differentia should have to the object of legislation. The question to be asked in this connection, points out another contributor, is whether the injunction of Article 14 of the Constitution is merely a ban on the creation of inequalities by the State or a command to eliminate inequalities existing without any contribution thereto by state action. The fundamental question, according to him, is, to what other areas should the new approach to equality be extended? What role should the Courts play in defining both the areas and the relevant norms? The incidence of the charges for State operated services falls more heavily on the poor than on the rich, and should the new approach be applied to them?

5. Mistakes in the formation of a contract and the disputed problem concerning the identity or existence of the parties are covered in three of the contributions. The first article throws light on certain inequities and defects in the existing law on this topic and suggests desirable amendments. The problem of common mistake in contract law and the varying juristic opinions on the subject are covered in the second, and the question of the liability of joint promisors under Indian Contract law in the third of the articles.

6. The Magazine includes an account of the activities of the College Association, and the several illustrations it carries add to its attractiveness.

THE LAW OF PARLIAMENTARY PRIVILEGES IN U. K. AND IN INDIA. By P. S. Pachauri, M. A., LL.M, 1971. N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., 164 Samaldas Gandhi Marg, Bombay 2. Pp. xx & 506. Price, Rs. 45.

The expression 'Parliamentary privileges' in constitutional statutes generally connotes three different legal terms, viz., privileges, powers, and immunities. Parliamentary privilege is an integral part of parliamentary democracy as it exists in U. K. and as it has been adopted by many democratic countries, as for example in India, where it has in its entirety been made a part of the Constitution (Arts. 105 and 194). On the whole thirty-one countries of the Commonwealth with parliamentary types of democracy have, between 1950 and 1967, made laws conferring privileges on their legislatures. Three other broad features in India are the conferment of fundamental rights on the people, of special powers to issue prerogative writs on the High Courts, and of the right to move the Supreme Court for the enforcement of these fundamental rights, which has itself been made a fundamental right. These constitutional provisions have given rise to several anomalies in law and to the problem of their interpretation, as well as to the problem of codification for which the constitution gives the necessary powers to the legislature. It is, however, noteworthy that opinion is sharply divided on the desirability of codification, as can be seen from the views of ex-Chief Justices K. Subba Rao and M. Hidayatullah.

2. Issued under the auspices of the Institute of Constitutional and Parliamentary studies, New Delhi, the book before us, which represents the result of many years of research for the degree of LL.D., contains a critical analysis of the operation of the law of Parliamentary Privilege in the U. K., from whom it has been imported into India wholesale, how it has operated in India so far, and how the intention of the makers of the constitution in importing this law can be fulfilled. The Introduction explains clearly what privilege is about and why the House of Commons and the Lok Sabha need it for the proper discharge of their responsibilities to the electorate.

3. The author is concerned with privilege as a judicial concept, proceedings in Parliament, privacy in deliberations, and proceedings as evidence. Freedom from arrest, powers, the constitutional provisions in India, and the application of the privilege are next considered. The term "breach of privilege" is described in Chapter IX as well as the narrow distinction between it and the term 'contempt.' In another chapter (Chapter V) the author quotes from a House of Commons Report of 1945-46 which stated: "The border line between legitimate political activity and illegitimate pressure upon members of the House of Commons must be sometimes difficult to determine" and the proper declaration of interests by legislators threatens to be a continuing problem. The volume is furnished with several appendices, a table of cases, bibliography and index.

4. The law of Parliamentary Privileges in England has evolved from precedent to precedent, but very few precedents have gone up to the courts of law, unlike other branches of law which have been built up by them. In these cases, moreover, the courts had to deal, not with the different ingredients of the law but with the general powers of the legislature to punish for breach of privilege or contempt. The real operation of the law is to be found in the proceedings of the House of Commons and reports of its Committee of Privileges.

Few attempts have, therefore, been made to analyse these precedents and formulate the principles underlying them. May's Parliamentary Practice is believed to be the only available treatise on the subject, which contains its main feature without detailing the precedents out of which the law has been developed. The present comparative and well-documented analysis of the Parliamentary process should be a valuable aid to the understanding of our Parliamentary institutions and furnish practical guidance to the legislator as well as the citizen. SECRETARIAL PRACTICE IN INDIA.

By J. C. Bahl, B.A., M.Com., 9th Edition, 1971. (N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Bombay 2), Pp. vii & 676, Price Rs. 16.

What is a company secretary? What is he required to do? What is he not required to do? What should be his qualifications? And what is his position and influence in the actual working of a company? The present publication, which is now in the 9th edition, answers these questions. Thoroughly revised and brought up-to-date, several specimen documents and reports in it have been replaced by more recent ones. The chapter on Management of Companies has been revised to drop portions dealing with managing agents, and secretaries and treasurers, as these have been abolished since April 1970. The chapter on correspondence and reports has been made to include some original specimen, circulars issued by companies and a chapter has been included, dealing with foreign companies in India and the secretarial practices relating to them.

2. The author describes the various kinds of joint stock companies, the formation of public and private limited companies, classes of capital and shares, membership and register of members, share certificates, share warrants, and stock certificates, calls on shares and forfeitures, transfers and transmission of shares, and borrowing powers and methods. He is concerned with various kinds of company meetings, specimen resolutions, board meetings, the statutory meeting, the annual general meeting, extraordinary general meetings and minutes. He then considers dividend and interest, the management of companies, books, annual return, accounts and profits, conversion of companies and alteration of share capital, arrangement, reconstruction and amalgamation, foreign companies in India, correspondence and reports, and winding up, and these are the topics covered in the last four chapters.

3. The duties of a secretary can be classified into those in relation to the directors, those in relation to the share-holders and the public, those relating to the administration of the office, and statutory duties. A sound general education, knowledge of office organisation and business methods, knowledge of book-keeping, of mercantile law, of the law of meetings and of foreign languages, and a good personality, are among the qualification required of a secretary. The secretary of a company is the officer through whom its administrative work is carried on. He is a servant of the company and, as such, must carry out the orders of the directors and must put into effect the resolutions passed at the directors' meetings.

4. Normally the Secretary is present at all meetings of the company and of the directors and makes proper minutes of their proceedings. The minutes of each board meeting, to be entered into the Minute Book, must contain a correct and fair summary of the proceedings, appointments of officers made at the meeting, the names of the directors present and, in the case of each resolution, the names of directors dissenting from the resolution. The Minutes are the written records of the business transacted and the decisions arrived at by a meeting of the directors of share-holders. It preserves in a concise and clear manner a correct record of the decisions taken and, when signed by the Chairman, becomes the permanent official record of the company. Under the direction of the board, the secretary issues all notices to members and others, conducts correspondence with share-holders in regard to calls, transfers and forfeitures. He is in charge of the books of the company like the register of members, share ledger, transfer book and register of debenture holders. He submits the necessary returns to the Registrar of companies, and makes preparations for holding and conducting meetings.

5. The Appendices to the book give particulars of the documents to be registered with Registrar of Companies, matters requiring the sanction of the Central Government, matters requiring the sanction of the share-holders, and schedules of fees payable. Students of commerce and others connected with company secretarial work should find the publication, which has an index, extremely useful.

THE NIGERIAN LAW JOURNAL.
Vol. 3. 1969 General Editor : Prof. T. O. Elias, Dean of Law, University of Lagos, Lagos, Nigeria. Published in 1970 by Sweet & Maxwell Ltd., London (In India : N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Bombay 2) Pp. 185. Price, $2.18s. net.

Apart from the book reviews, the journal carries notes and comments on some recent amendments to the criminal code, the Nigerian Territorial Waters Decree 1967 and international law, and Homicide by Reckless or Dangerous Driving (Summary Trial and Punishment) Edict 1968, and includes contributions, inter alia, on the legality of the O. A. U. Council of Ministers' Resolution on Rhodesia in December 1965 and on civil suits by and against public corporations in Nigeria.

2. Four articles deal with the legal framework of industrial relations in Nigeria, some recent constitutional issues, the proper place of Islamic Law, and the reform of the customary Court systems. The basic concept of Nigerian Labour law is the acceptance of the common law principle that the relationship between an employer and employee is based upon the individual contract of employment, but this presupposition of equality between the parties tends to ignore other social and economic considerations which tilt the scales so much in favour of the employers that safeguards have had to be provided by way of collective bargaining or by State regulation. Until recently virile and strong trade unions were absent and the State had therefore to pass legislation (the Labour Code) designed to provide protection to workers and to guarantee them certain minimum standards as regards their terms and conditions of employment. Does collective bargaining give rise to legal rights and duties? The somewhat uncertain position was however regularised by the present law contained in the Trade Disputes (Emergency Provisions) Decree, No. 21 of 1968. The writer suggests that an industrial Court should also be established to deal with such matters as termination of contracts of employment, interpretation of collective agreements, and adjudication upon industrial disputes.

3. Should the Nigerian Courts adopt a consistent method of construction of the constitution or leave room for choice between a strict and liberal method? Some want a liberal approach to the interpretation of the constitution, but it is feared that a consistent application of liberal interpretation may result in unfettered legislation in the sphere of fundamental human rights, and the position of the Courts as the guardians of individual liberty may be weakened. The Courts, it is urged, should be free to make a choice between a liberal and a strict approach; it will be possible only then to decide whether the interest of the Government should prevail or that of the individual in a given legal contest.

4. Another of the articles tries to define the proper place of Islamic law in Nigeria. Islam has influence in legal matters in the northern parts of Nigeria only and is virtually unknown in the legal life of the south, which raises a very interesting issue of finding the reason for the differences in the approach to Islamic law. The conclusion is arrived at that Islamic law should be applicable only when the parties have selected Islamic law to bind them in a particular transaction or when the matter in question is known to no other law but the Islamic Law.

5. The military revolution of 15th January 1966 brought about striking reforms in the customary Court systems in Nigeria, and the various changes effected are discussed in another contribution. One of the writers attempts an analysis of the sources of equity in the Nigerian legal system and shows how equity has exercised a continuing and growing influence on its development, while another considers at length the area in which the constitution could be influential in remoulding the rules governing the admissibility of evidence in Nigeria. The latest Navakal case in India should have made it evident that the Indian Evidence Act also requires certain specific amendments. The article on character as a basis of criminal liability examines those cases in which the good or bad character of the accused forms an essential ingredient of the offence.

COMMENTARIES ON THE CONSTITUTION OF INDIA. By V. B. Raju, M. A., I. C. S., Formerly Judge, Gujarat High Court. 1971. Eastern Book Company, Lalbagh Road, Lucknow. Pp. xxxviii & 899, Price, Rs. 35.

Commentaries and dissertations on the Indian Constitution have been numerous. The reader is familiar with the works of distinguished jurists and legal experts like Durgadas Basu, H. M. Seervai, K. Subba Rao, T. L. Venkatarama Ayyar and M. P. Jain, and the volume under review is a notable addition to that long list. The 395 Articles of the Constitution are grouped under 22 different Parts, several of the Parts being sub-divided into appropriate chapters. Parts I and II (Arts. 1-11) deal with the Union and its territory and citizenship. Parts III and IV (Arts. 12-51) deal with the fundamental rights and directive principles of State policy, and Parts V and VI (Arts. 52-237) cover the Union and State Executive, Legislature, and Judiciary. Parts XI and XII consider the relations between the Union and States, and finance, property, contracts and suits. Parts XIII and XV to XVIII (Arts. 301-307, 324-360) deal with the subjects of trade and commerce, elections, special provisions relating to certain classes, language, and emergency provisions. Articles 361, 362 and 363 dwell on the powers of the President, the rights and privileges of the rulers of Indian States and bar to interference by Courts in disputes arising out of certain treaties, covenants, etc., and Art. 368 with the procedure for amending the constitution.

2. Can new pleas and arguments be advanced for the first time before the Supreme Court? Is the advice of the Council of Ministers binding on all matters on the President or Governor? Can the fundamental rights be modified? On these and other topics the author's views are presented with cogency. An Act amending the constitution under Art. 368 is valid even if it abridges or takes away fundamental rights (AIR 1965 SC 845—Sajjan Singh case). But the contrary view is taken in the cause celebre, Golaknath (AIR 1967 SC 1643), on the ground that the amendment of the constitution is law under Art. 13(2) and Art. 368 deals only with the procedure, although the present author would seem to be in good company when he holds that fundamental rights can be modified as provided in Art. 368. As if to give the quietus to this vexatious controversy, the latest constitution amendment bill seeks to empower the Parliament to amend any provisions of the Constitution, including fundamental rights, priority being accorded to the Directive Principles of State policy. The Prime Minister has made it clear that it is not the intention straightway to make mincemeat of these rights, but only to make it possible to acquire compulsorily private property for a public purpose on payment of a certain sum (not to be confused with compensation). No confrontation between the legislature and judiciary is envisaged and it is quite plausibly argued that what the people have given themselves, viz., the constitution, through a constituent assembly, they should be able to amend or abrogate through the constituent power of their own parliament.

3. Similarly, all the powers of his office exercisable by a Governor can be exercised only on the advice of Ministers except in so far as the constitution expressly or by necessary implication says that he can exercise those powers in his individual discretion. As regards summoning and dissolution of Parliament the author's views are based on the fact that the President of India, unlike the King of England, is elected and represents the whole nation, and, therefore, the conventions which apply in England cannot be applied in India in the face of the constitutional provisions. The author deplores that in spite of the fact that India is a Union of States, the Constitution has been amended to deprive some territories of their statehood in order to make them "Union territories".

4. That the important principles of the Constitution should be clearly understood by the lawyer, law student and layman nobody can gainsay. In the present attempt to present an analytical, explanatory and critical commentary with synopsis on the different Articles of the Constitution, the author has expressed his own views independently and cogently.

5. The volume contains all the nine schedules of the constitution as well as ten appendices (including the twenty-three Constitution amending Acts), and carries a table of cases and index.

EXTRADITION IN INTERNATIONAL LAW. By I. A. Shearer, LL. M. (Adelaide), S. J. D. (Northwestern), University of Adelaide. 1st Edition. 1971. Manchester University Press, 316-24 Oxford Road, Manchester, England. (In India: N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., Bombay. 2.) Pp. xxiii & 283. Price, £ 4.20 net.

Increasing air traffic has made the flight of a fugitive from the law easier than before and extradition proceedings are a necessary instrument to secure the return of the offender to his country; the latest case of Dharma Teja's extradition from the U. K. for being tried in India will readily occur to the reader's mind. Extradition means the surrender of an accused person or a convict by the territorial State where he is found to the requesting State where he is alleged to have committed or to have been convicted of a crime. The Indian Extradition Act has certain special features like Basis of Extradition, Categorisation of States, Pre-Independence Treaties, Two categories of Extradition offences, and Extradition with Formalities and Extradition without Formalities. Extradition law is a dual law involving municipal as well as transnational law.

2. In 1932 a committee appointed by the Harvard Law School 'Research in International Law' Programme drew up a draft convention on extradition law and practice, and the book before us is, in part, a re-assessment of the Harvard team's proposals in the light of the subsequent thirty years of treaty practice, legislation and national jurisprudence. It makes a special study of hindrances to the effective working of extradition law, such as lack of sufficient extradition treaties, the rigidity of several of them, and excessive procedural requirements. The book deals with the role of treaties, statutes, the courts and the executive, with alternatives such as abduction and deportation, with the problem of defining the offences, and the question of whether evidence of guilt should always accompany a request for surrender, and with political offences and procedural difficulties.

3. An essential element in international law, the extradition law, the author argues, should be harmonised with national practice in order to strengthen inter-State co-operation in the fight against crime. He therefore pleads for the conclusion of further extradition treaties, the overcoming of old barriers erected by outdated prejudices, the requirement of prima facie evidence of guilt as a protection to the fugitive and the simplification and harmonisation of extradition proceedings.

4. International co-operation in the suppression of crime, the framework of extradition, procedures other than extradition, and the nationality of the fugitive are discussed; and then are considered the subjects of acts for which extradition may be granted, evidence of guilt, political offences, and procedural problems. It is the author's conviction that there already exists more common ground than is supposed between national laws and practices of extradition and further harmonisation is both attainable and necessary. The book gives selected extradition statistics and treaties and lists of extradition statutes and texts of treaties, and includes a bibliography, table of cases, and index.

5. It is believed that, in the present book, for the first time in this century a scholar of international criminal law from a common law country has tried to re-appraise all the basic problems of extradition in the light of the needs and difficulties of the modern world. It should help greatly in promoting the knowledge of extradition law both in theory and practice, in protecting the rights of man, and in improving co-operation between States and peoples.

DEVELOPMENT OF JUDICIAL SYSTEM IN INDIA UNDER THE EAST INDIA COMPANY FROM 1833 TO 1858. By Ramesh Chandra Srivastava, M.A., LL.B., Ph. D. With Foreword by M. C. Setalvad, 1st Edition. 1971. Lucknow Publishing House, 37 Cantonment Road, Lucknow. Pp. xii & 232. Price, Rs. 45.

The present judicial set-up in India is largely a legacy of British rule and its foundations go back to the days of the East India Company, and the present work is a detailed and analytical study of those foundations, based mainly on original and contemporary sources from the National Archives of India. The source material is the original and unpublished records of the Government of India, Parliamentary proceedings, judicial correspondence, and official reports and compilations. The work is concerned with the evolution of the norms and procedures which provided the infra-structure of the Indian judiciary and the legal edifice which in its essence exists even today. Of special importance in the work are the chapters dealing with Indians in the Judiciary, inter-State law, court language, codification of the law, and the emergence of the Indian Bar.

2. The Charter Act 1833, among other things, sought to simplify the complexities of the law re-assess the situation objectively by adopting a more enlightened and progressive policy, and in the next twenty years the British Indian Administrators set out to make the judiciary equal to the needs of the people and the exigencies of the situation. Clause 87 of this Act contained a specific recognition of the right of the Indians for employment under the Company, and yet the increase of Indians in judicial employment was slow and tardy and resisted by Englishmen resident in India. Even in those early days it is of interest to note that there were the familiar law officers like the Legal Remembrancer, the Advocate General, the Registrar, the Company's Solicitor, and Standing Counsel.

3. Dealing with Inter-State Law, the work describes difficult questions of international law arising out of the attempts of criminals to escape from one jurisdiction to another at a time when several jurisdictions prevailed at the same time in India. The question of court language in those days is of some particular relevance to us. For a long time Persian was the court language, but Act XXIX of 1837 "empowered the Governor-General to dispense with any Regulation which enjoined the use of the Persian language . . . and to prescribe the use of any other language". Although the change from Persian to Hindusthani was reported to be a success, a number of local languages held the field in subordinate courts until the preponderance of English barristers and judges brought English into vogue as the language of the courts.

4. As regards codification, Macaulay's efforts to compile a draft of the Indian Penal Code, the delays of which he was accused, and the eventual submission by him of the Draft Penal Code in 1837 are depicted in great detail. The story is also told in brief of the preparation and enactment of the Codes of Criminal and Civil Procedure, and, finally, the author traces the rise of the Indian Bar since Regulation VII of 1793, "which was the first attempt to regularise the institution of vakils in India."

5. For the period prior to 1833, the reader may refer to "Studies in Indian Legal History and Indian Constitutional History" (By M. S. Rama Rau, Hyderabad. 1970.) It describes the genesis of the East India Company, the administration of justice from 1639 to 1726, the Mayor's Courts, the Adalat system and the judicial reforms of Warren Hastings, as well as the Regulating Act 1773, the judicial reforms of Lord Cornwallis, and the judicial administration in the Provinces of Madras and Bombay between 1753 and 1861.

6. In concluding the present work the author observes that though the judicial system had its inadequacies, it went far towards the consolidation of the political and administrative unity of the country and provided a permanent base for the edifice of modern Indian judicial organisation. A highly useful work for the research worker and the lawyer, it should be equally suitable as a basis for further work on a topic essential to the study of legal history in India.

7. Several appendices, glossary, bibliography and index are useful features of the work.

LECTURES ON JURISPRUDENCE. (According to Meerut University Syllabus), 1971. By Bakshish Singh, M.A., LL.M., Advocate, Lecturer, Law Department, N. A. S. College, Meerut. Pp. 156. Price, Rs. 6/-.

Fundamental legal principles and their philosophical, historical and sociological basis and analysis of legal concepts, constitute the subject of jurisprudence. Jurisprudential thought has lately undergone considerable change, particularly in the realm of social philosophy underlying law. Because of the impact made on law by other subjects like sociology and economic theory, the concepts of liability and ownership (State or public ownership) have undergone a radical change. Although an abstract and theoretical subject, researches in it have repercussions over a wide range; the law of contract, for example, may well call for a general knowledge of economics and economic theory on the part of the lawyer.

2. Out of the twenty-seven lectures contained in the present publication, the first five deal with the nature and schools of jurisprudence, the evolution of law, justice and its administration, and law and fact. The topics of jurisprudence and comparative law, English and foreign jurisprudence, the Austinian definition of law. Law in terms of judicial process, natural and legal justice, necessity and administration of justice, civil and criminal justice, theories of punishment, and secondary functions of law Courts, are discussed.

3. It is understood that law should be made precise and clear, and a true picture must be available to the reader. Law is as much an abstract body of rules as a social process for reconciling the conflicting interests of the members of society. It should therefore have sanction behind it and be recognised by the bulk of the members of society. The scope of the present lecture is mainly analytical, and the lecturer accepts Salmond's definition of law "as the body of principles recognised and applied by the State in the administration of justice".

4. The lectures cover the classification and kinds of law, the theories of law, the sources of law like custom, judicial precedent and legislation, and consider kinds of custom, chief requirements of custom, distinction between custom and prescription, doctrine of stare decisis, ratio decidendi and obiter dicta, supreme and subordinate legislation, interpretation of statutes, harmonious construction, and strict interpretation. They are concerned with the analysis of legal rights, their classification, and the classification of duties. Ownership, possession, titles, intention and liability, are the subjects of five of the lectures, which describe the various kinds of ownership, the nature of possession, mode of acquisition of possession, the theory of penal liability, malice, motives and criminal attempts. The last four lectures cover the law of property, the law of obligations, the law of procedure, and the State and sovereignty.

5. It is the opinion of competent critics that, as taught today, much of the jurisprudence is out of date, and the teaching of jurisprudence in universities and schools requires radical re-orientation, both in basic ideas and presentation. Designed to meet the requirements of the LL.B. (Third Semester) students of the Meerut University, the lectures are largely in the form of question and answer, and should be of great assistance to the students for whom they are intended. The lecturer has done a competent piece of work in presenting the views of all authoritative writers, more especially of Salmond.*

DIGEST OF REPORTED AND UN-REPORTED DECISIONS ON REVENUE LAW. 1964-68. Compiled by H. P. Vaishnav, B. A. LL. B. 1963. 1st. Edition. The New Gujarat Law House, Three Gates, Ahmedabad. Pp. 292. Price, Rs. 20/-.

There are more than twenty tenure abolition laws in Gujarat, and each of them is meant for either a particular area, or tenure, or situation. Added to the laws of the erstwhile States of Saurashtra and Kutch, they present a confusing picture as they are always in a state of flux. Under the Tenancy Act of 1939, for example, the mortgagee could become a tenant; under the Tenancy Act of 1948, however, he lost that right, and a tenant inducted by a mortgagee was also not recognised as a tenant, but the Supreme Court in the case of Dahya v. Rasul held that, even if a mortgagee does not become a tenant, a tenant inducted by him can become one. The amendments made in 1952, 1953, 1956 and 1960 have made changes in the law. But in Kutch area the Tenancy Act of 1948 was still in force in 1958, when the Bombay Tenancy Act was applied. Although the Tenancy Act 1939, is mostly repealed, some of its sections still endure as good law as well as some other sections of the repealed ordinances in Saurashtra.

2. It is no wonder, therefore, that the interpretation of revenue laws became difficult and complicated and, in the volume covering 1960-64, the present author, who is a member of the Gujarat Revenue Tribunal, collected, collated and classified these decisions on the interpretation of the revenue laws, and this work has been continued in the present volume, which covers the period 1954-68. The total number of cases; i.e., dicta digested is 436 and they fall under more than 20 different Acts, and, where the dicta are relevant under more than one section, suitable cross references are given.

3. The author is specially qualified for the present task because he is in constant touch with the amendments which are from time to time being made and their purpose and background. Several decisions of the Gujarat Revenue Tribunal are challenged before the Gujarat High Court in writ petitions, the High Court orders are received by the Tribunal, and are circulated among its members. Persons unconnected with the writ petitions may not come to know about the decisions, but the author, as a member of the Tribunal, has access to all of them. He briefly sets out the facts leading to the decisions, bringing out the points in dispute, and then clearly sets out the result which brings out the ratio underlying each decision. The Digest should be highly useful to lawyers as well as litigants. Officers of the Revenue Department, who have to work quickly and under heavy pressure, should find valuable guidance in it. It should also be a useful addition to the libraries of offices connected with the work of administering the land reform laws. R.S.S.

THE LAW OF TORTS. By B. L. Vohra M. A., LL. B. 1967. University Book House, 15-U.B, Bungalow Road, Jawahar Nagar, Delhi 7. Pp. XIII & 273. Price, Rs. 7.50.

A tort usually consists in some act done by the defendant whereby he has without just cause done some kind of harm to the plaintiff. The law of torts prevents men from hurting one another, whether in respect of their property, persons, reputations, or anything else. To constitute a tort, there must be a wrongful act or omission, i.e., breach of duty by a person; the wrongful act or omission must result in legal damage to another; and the wrongful act or omission must be of such a nature as to give rise to a legal remedy in the form of an action for damages. As administered in India, the law of tort is the English law as modified by such Acts of the Indian Legislature as the Fatal Accidents Act, 1855, Carriers Act, 1865, Easements Act, 1882, Patents and Designs Act 1911, Workmen's Compensation Act, 1923, Sale of Goods Act, 1930, Employer's Liability Act, 1938, and the Specific Relief Act, 1963. In the absence of statutory or customary law applicable in a case, the Courts in India are guided by principles of justice, equity and good conscience, which has been the rule in England. They are applicable to Indian circumstances.

2. The law of torts has seen many developments in recent times. This book on the subject is well written and decisions of importance have been collected by the Courts recently. The 'remoteness of damage' and 'the liability of occupiers towards trespassers' has been restated by the Judicial Committee, and the decision of the House of Lords in Hedley Byrne v. Heller regarding 'careless misstatements' is another landmark. Rooks v. Barnard has established the tort of intimidation. Other landmarks relate to the decisions regarding forceability in negligence, master's liability for criminal acts of servants, contributory negligence of children, occupier's duty towards visitors, occupiers' duty towards users of the highway, lending a servant, and course of employment. This is said to be the first book to take note of the decisions reported from April 1965 to 1967. Butterworths' publications (Sole Selling Agents: Eastern Law House Private Ltd., Calcutta) on Torts by Philip S. James, D. M. Scott, and D. G. Cracknell, appeared subsequently in 1969.

3. The book contains, an appendix, the full text of the Government (Liability in Tort) Bill 1967, which is at present before the Select Committee of Parliament in India. The main provisions of the Bill relate to the liability of Government to third parties for torts committed by its employees and agents; liability of Government to third parties for torts committed by an independent contractor employed by the Government and his servants and workers; liability of Government in tort as owner or occupier of immovable property; liability in respect of escape of dangerous things, and liability in respect of breach of duties to its employees. The exceptions are the armed forces of the Union and the Police forces, Judicial acts, and Act of State.

4. The book deals with the elements of tort, general exceptions to liability, capacity to sue and be sued, felonious and foreign torts, vicarious liability and joint tortfeasors. It covers death in relation to tort, discharge of torts, remedies, trespass to the person, and negligence. The topics of remoteness of damage and measure of damages, particular aspects of negligence, breach of statutory duty, nuisance, strict liability, and fraud, are considered, while the other chapters are concerned with wrongs relating to (1) immovable property; (2) movable property; and (3) families and service relations, defamation, inducing breach of contract, and abuse of legal process. A table of cases and index are provided.

5. The book attempts to state the principles of the law of torts simply and concisely primarily for the benefit of students who may not be able to read the original works of great authors and keep themselves abreast of important developments. R.S.S.

JURISPRUDENCE. By R. W. M. Dias. M. A., LL. B., (Cantab.) Lecturer in Law in the University of Cambridge. 3rd Edition. 1970. Butterworths, London (Sole Selling Agents: Eastern Law House Private Ltd., Calcutta.) Pp. lxviii & 606. Price, Rs. 50.

Generally speaking, the material of the law may be identified provisionally by taking the application of the word 'law' by courts. But what regulates the use of this label? The regulators in Great Britain are judicial precedent, statute (including legislation by prerogative) and immemorial customs. The material constituted as 'law' by these media comprises the body of the law. The present volume deals first with the ways in which the courts handle these media and suggest ideas about the nature of the judicial function and to some extent also of laws. Tentative hypotheses are suggested about the nature and function of laws. The next step is to examine in the light of the judicial process some concepts of the law, i.e., the tools or instruments that are used for the purpose of regulating and judging behaviour. The structure of these concepts is examined with a view to improving one's understanding of them and assessing their suitability to fulfil the required needs. Finally, the author considers some theories about law. These reveal the manner in which the people in different countries at different times have speculated about some of the problems revealed by the preceding portions of the book. And these theories should serve as an introduction to great thinkers in history.

2. Sources of Law, Concepts of Law, and Theories of Law, are the three parts into which the book is divided. Part I deals with the criteria of identification, precedent legislation, statutory interpretation, custom and values. Part II is concerned with duties and rules, rights, conduct, persons, possession, and ownership, while the final part considers the Austinian theory of law, the pure theory, the historical and anthropological approaches, the economic approach, the sociological approach, modern realism, and natural law. The subject-matter of many of these chapters is ably summed up in the concluding pages of each chapter.

3. The main change in the latest edition of the book under notice is the introduction of a 'temporal' approach to legal phenomena, which affects practically every part of the book, and lends itself readily as a basis for more meaningful treatment of the existing material. The 'temporal' approach offers a systematic plan by asking: What factors (social, political and moral) brought about a rule of law? What factors keep it going? How does it work? (which calls for an investigation into its structure, its efficiency in fulfilling its task and the factors that affect its working) Can it be improved? Such questions reach out into other fields like sociology, ethics, and other fields, and the present book seeks to amplify this 'temporal approach'.

4. Other changes have been induced by the ever-changing contemporary scene, which constantly throws up new problems. There is also an attempt to draw the book more tightly together by bringing various theories (Part III) into the context of discussion in the earlier chapters. Forward references are given in the first two parts to appropriate theories appearing in the last part. In the result the length of the text has been increased by about sixty pages and much has had to be cut out from the chapters on precedent and statutory interpretation.

5. The present book, which includes a table of cases and index, furnishes material for the evolution of one's own ideas and the understanding of other theories and serves as a prelude to such contributions by inducing an informed and critical approach to them. On the one hand, an attempt has been made to provide a text which might serve as a guiding thread to the literature on the various topics and, on the other, explanatory references to the literature itself. The text should give readers a picture of certain topics and some idea of the issues and problems they involve. The reading lists appended are pointers only and fuller references are available in the companion volume, A Bibliography of jurisprudence. The University undergraduate should benefit greatly by the present book.

BEST JUDGMENT ASSESSMENT AND PENALTY UNDER SALES TAX LAW. (With Particular reference to Andhra Pradesh). By B. Satyanarayana, M. A., LL. B., Formerly Deputy Commissioner of Commercial Taxes, 8-3-1015, Srinagar Colony, Hyderabad 38. Pp. VI & 214. Price, Rs. 7.50.

In this handy and compact commentary on the Andhra Pradesh Sales Tax Law, with particular reference to the best judgment assessment and penalty, the author tries to state clearly the principles evolved by the Courts in these matters. A Best Judgment assessment is assessment made estimating the turnover, and determining the tax payable when no return is submitted or when the return submitted appears to the assessing authority to be incorrect or incomplete. Power is conferred on the assessing authority to make best judgment assessment under certain circumstances; but it should not be arbitrary or capricious and the estimate should have due regard to the material collected by the assessing authority and conform to the guidelines laid by the courts. There can be no rule or principle universally applicable and the task of the assessing authority is, therefore, rendered all the more difficult. The author has devoted much labour in classifying the different views of the law courts with regard to the definition of 'Best Judgment Assessment' and 'Levy of Penalty', and gives a very clear picture of the law on the subject. We have here a clear analysis and critical statement of the Sales Tax Law in Andhra Pradesh and carefully compiled case law on the subject.

2. The author has discussed at length the duties and responsibilities of the assessing authority as well as the assessee. He has devoted adequate space to the method and manner of scrutiny of accounts, mode of making enquiries, and of conducting inspections and searches. The various methods of estimating turnover and determining tax have been dealt with. The assessing authority has to act judicially and in a judicious manner and to follow the principles of logic and reason instead of basing the assessments on set formulae while estimating turnovers. In matters like inspection, scrutiny of accounts, rejection of returns and estimation of turnovers the author has quoted extensively from the judgements of the High Courts and the Supreme Court.

3. In regard to the imposition of penalty, the author has explained the distinction between assessment proceedings and penalty proceeding and has cited authorities to show that penalty proceedings need not automatically follow assessment proceedings and that only conscious and deliberate concealment can attract penalty, and that the burden lies on the Department to prove that the assessee was guilty of suppressing turnover with a view to evading sales tax. He has explained at length the meanings given by the courts to such words as 'wilful' and 'not wilful' and 'bona fide mistake'. Matters relating to the burden of proof, limitation, and the procedure for passing an order imposing penalty have also been discussed.

4. The author's object has been to acquaint the assessing authority, as well as the assessee with the procedure prescribed under the Acts and the Rules for making assessments and imposing penalties against the background of court rulings. The commentary should be of great assistance to the Departmental authorities, the practitioners and the businessmen in dealing with the problems connected with the levy, assessment, and collection of sales tax.

5. A suggestion made by the author in conclusion would appear to be worth noting. The Department, he thinks, should have its own Staff Training College in which officers like the Assistant Commercial Tax Officers and Commercial Tax Officers, directly recruited, could be given intensive and comprehensive training in the study of the Act and the Rules and in subjects like check of accounts, conducting inspections and making enquiries. Employees already in service could also undergo refresher courses in order to keep themselves posted with the latest legal pronouncements.

LECTURES ON COMPANY LAW. By Shantilal Mohanlal Shah, formerly Judge of the Bombay High Court. 16th Edition 1971, N. M. Tripathi Private Ltd., 164, Samaldas Gandhi Marg. Bombay 2, Pp. xxxi, 460, ccclii, Price Rs. 24.

The fifteenth edition of the present publication appeared in 1968, but since then the Company (Amendment) Act 1969 has been passed, doing away with the system of managing agents and secretaries and treasurers as from 3rd April 1970. It also imposes a complete ban on contributions by companies to political parties or for any political purpose to any individual or body. The provisions relating to managing agents and secretaries and treasurers, contained in Chapters III & IV of the Companies Act, have been omitted and only such of them retained as continue to be effective with further comments where needed. But the topic of 'Secretaries', in relation to their appointment, position, powers and duties, has for the first time been included as it is an important limb of company management in the present set-up. References to managing agents and secretaries and treasurers elsewhere also have been deleted to the extent that they are no longer necessary. A brief reference to the English Companies Act, 1967, which amends the principal Act of 1948, has been made in the first Lecture and at other suitable places.

2. There are nineteen Lectures, each preceded by a summary. The memorandum of association, the articles of association, and preliminary contracts, promoters, and registration, are considered at the outset, followed by Lectures on prospectus, members, capital, shares, contracts, investments, and borrowing powers. Directors, managing agents, secretaries and treasurers, meetings, appointment of staff, arbitration and compromise, and accounts and audit, are the subjects of the other Lectures. Finally, are examined the topics of investigation and prevention of oppression and mismanagement, private, foreign, and other companies, modes of winding up and dissolution, liquidators, and consequences of winding up and defunct companies.

3. The text of the Companies Act, 1956 as so far amended has been given at the end along with the twelve Schedules. The Act consists of 13 Parts, Parts 2 to 5 (Ss. 11-145) dealing with incorporation, prospectus and allotment of shares and registration; Parts 8-13 (Ss. 561-658) dealing with companies formed under other laws, winding up of unregistered companies, registration officers, offices and fees, and collection of information and statistics; management, administration and winding-up taking up as much as two thirds of the Act (13 chapters of Parts 6 and 7; Ss. 146-560). Matters requiring the approval or order of the Central Government, matters requiring the sanction of the share-holders by special resolution, documents and notices to be filed with or given to the Registrar, books and registers to be maintained by the company, rights, powers and duties of the Central Government, provisions of the Act which do not apply to private companies and provision relating to managing agents which wholly ceases to be effective, are given in the Appendix.

4. For the purposes of the present edition, the Lectures have been thoroughly revised and to some extent enlarged and made more comprehensive in certain respects. Various aspects of the several important topics have been marked out and assigned distinctive sub-titles. Equipped with a table of cases and index, this practical book for lawyers, businessmen and students, contains references to all important English and Indian decisions reported till the end of 1970.

5. A company now-a-days has ceased to be the exclusive concern of shareholders or directors and is now considered a national asset. Company legislation aims, therefore, at checking the concentration of income and economic power, restricting the powers of directors and managements and ensuring proper management, aims which accord with the Directive Principles of State Policy contained in Part IV of the Indian Constitution.

CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY. (L.S.E. Research Monographs No. 8.) By Francis G. Jacobs, Formerly Lecturer in Law at the London School of Economics. With a Preface by H. L. A. Hart, Professor of Jurisprudence in the University of Oxford, Weidenfeld & Nicolson, 5 Winsley Street, Cxford Circus, London. 1. 1971. Pp. xi & 188. Price £. 2-75.

The monograph under review is concerned to determine the extent to which the conception of the criminal responsibility of the individual, reflected in the legal doctrine of mens rea, has been displaced or modified by certain features of contemporary English Law. The effects of the introduction into the Law of murder of the idea of 'diminished responsibility', the scope and incidence of strict liability, the change made by the Mental Health Act, 1959 and by the legislation relating to the criminal responsibility of children and young persons, and the cultural and civil functions of juvenile courts, are complex and wide-ranging, and can be understood only by reference to previous history and the actual working of institutions.

2. At the outset the author shows that no consistent pattern can be traced in the conflict between a principle of absolute liability and a principle of liability dependent on fault in the historical evolution of English criminal law. However recent developments seem to have fundamental implications for the concept of responsibility, and the most important of these are examined in the present monograph. Regarding the problems raised by the mentally abnormal offenders, recent innovations in this area of the law raise the question whether it is possible to draw a distinction between those who are and those who are not responsible for their actions. These innovations are examined in their historical context and their significance is assessed for the concept of responsibility.

3. Next comes the young offender. Recent developments have blurred the edge of responsibility here too. Reforms have largely removed the differences between the criminal and civil jurisdictions of the juvenile courts. The measures available to the courts are often the same and have a remedial object, treatment rather than punishment being regarded as the solution to juvenile delinquency, and this attitude is reflected by the tendency to deprive the courts of the task of selecting the appropriate institution for training and by recent legislation extending provision for after-care. In an attempt to assess the doctrine of strict liability, a brief survey illustrates the tendencies of the common law to place greater restrictions on the operation of the doctrine. The wider implications of the concept of responsibility are examined and it is shown that strict responsibility cannot on any view be equated with the complete elimination of responsibility.

4. The notion of objective liability is analysed, showing that this doctrine may take different forms and that the test of the 'reasonable man' applied in the modern law differs at a number of points from the theory of O. W. Holmes. Finally the author goes beyond these individual doctrines and considers the concept of responsibility in its wider aspects. He tries to show that at a number of points, much of the traditional debate about the concept of responsibility and the function of the criminal law has been misconceived, and it would appear that both the advocates of mens rea and their opponents have used arguments which fail to establish their case. It is the aim of the author to supply the principle of mens rea with a solid foundation in terms of the social purposes of modern law.

5. Published jointly with the London School of Economics and Political Science, the L.S.E. Research Monographs aim to provide a continuing outlet for serious scholarly work and relatively quick publication. They should be of interest to specialists in the various fields, whether in Universities, or Government departments, or elsewhere, as well as to libraries. The present monograph, with its Notes and index, for example, should be instructive not only to the lawyer but also the philosopher and political scientist.

IX CONGRESS OF THE INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF DEMOCRATIC LAWYERS. Published by IADL, 49 Avenue Jupiter, 1190 Brussels, Belgium. Price 100 Belg. Fr. or U. S. $ 2.

The 9th Congress of the International Association of Democratic Lawyers was held in Helsinki from the 15th to the 19th of July 1970. Three hundred and twentyone lawyers from fifty-five countries took part in the Congress and twelve international organisations, including the International Commission of Jurists, were also represented by observers. There were four plenary sessions including those on Indo-China and the Middle East, four Commissions, and the General Assembly of IADL. The Congress elected a Presidential Committee, of which Mr. V. K. Krishna Menon, M. P., former Minister and President of the Indian Association of Lawyers for Peace, was a member. The General Assembly of the IADL then elected Mr. D. N. Pritt, Q. C. (Britain) as Honorary President and Pierre Cot, Professor at the Faculty of Law, Paris, as President. Among the Vice-Presidents and Secretaries elected were Mr. V. K. Krishna Menon, and Mr. Haris Chandra, Secretary of the Indian Association of Lawyers for Peace.

2. Four Commissions were appointed covering the subjects of legal aspects of certain problems of national independence, peace, international security and the struggle against imperialism in the contemporary world; certain legal problems of the developing countries; legal aspects of safeguarding the fundamental human rights; and technical progress and human rights. The first Commission was concerned with problems of self-determination and sovereignty and the fundamental principles of friendly relations and peaceful co-existence among nations. As observed by President Pierre Cot, the most important question before the first Commission concerned the necessity for a new European Security Organisation. It adopted resolutions on the Middle-East and the Palestinian problem, the Portuguese Colonies, European Security and Co-operation, Korea, and the Okinawa problem.

3. The questions which faced the second Commission related to political and economic independence in the struggle against neo-colonialism, regional, political and economic co-operation, the rights of the people freely to dispose of national resources, and the development of law as a vehicle of progress. Besides a general resolution, it adopted a resolution, against the economic blockade of Cuba. The President emphasised the need for these countries to become involved in an international law system which for years has been forged without them.

4. The third Commission considered the problems of measures for the elimination of all forms of racial discrimination, universal implementation of covenants on civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights, and human rights and emergency laws. As long as there are States and Courts of justice, legal errors and abuses of authority are possible, and lawyers must continue to exercise their vigilance where political rights are concerned. The questions with which the fourth Commission was concerned included the protection of personal privacy in view of the advancement of biology, medicine and biochemistry; the use of electronic devices in the juridical field; and legal protection against pollution and deterioration of the human environment.

5. The IADL publishes twice a year, in a French and English Edition, the Review of Contemporary Law (Annual subscription: 150 Belg. Fr. or $ 3; Single copy 100 Belg. Fr. or 2 $). Each issue of the Review will contain articles and documents on the major legal problems of the present time. Finland's policy of security, Lenin's ideas on Soviet law and socialist legality, Legal data processing and human rights, the use of cybernetic in law in the U. S. S. R., and trade unionism in India were among the contributions in the last issue, which included also a couple of documents on war crimes and the Greek case; report of the European Commission of Human rights. In the next issue the Review will publish reports and papers presented in Helsinki at the IX International Congress of the IADL.

HANDWRITING EVIDENCE (A Guide in Disputed Documents Trial) 1971. By K. S. Ramamurti, Handwriting Expert, Madras. K. Sivaprasad, 8, III Main Road, Gandhi Nagar, Madras. 20. Pp. xii & 381. Price Rs. 30.

The work before us reviews the subject of handwriting evidence from various angles and explains clearly the principles of the science. Sections 45, 47 and 73 of the Indian Evidence Act are concerned with the subject. According to S. 45, when the Court has to form an opinion as to the identity of handwriting (or finger impression) the opinions upon the point of persons specially skilled in questions as to the identity of handwriting or finger impressions are relevant facts, and such persons are called experts. They are taught by study and practice, having a facility of performance from experience. Section 47 lays down that, when the Court has to form an opinion as to the person by whom anything was written, the opinion of any other person acquainted with handwriting of that person is a relevant fact. Under S. 73, in order to ascertain whether any writing is that of the person alleged, any writing admitted or proved to the satisfaction of the court to have been written by that person may be compared with the one which is to be proved.

2. It is believed that Sections 45 & 47 of the Evidence Act deserve proper amendment to prevent any sort of person coming forward as an expert. Section 73 provides for comparison of the handwriting by the trial judge, but the Privy Council considers that it is unsatisfactory and dangerous to determine the genuineness of a signature by mere comparison with admitted signatures without the aid of expert advice. In spite of S. 45, the evidence of persons examined under S. 47 is preferred to that of experts. It is thought that under present conditions S. 47 is superfluous, and S. 45 can be suitably amended, as well as S. 73.

3. In the chief examination of an expert what is needed is to make his opinion intelligible and understandable. Fortified by reasons, his opinions would be more helpful than the mere asking for his opinion, which leaves him to the tender mercies of the cross-examiner. Cross-examination is more difficult. Cross-examination of an expert by another expert would be helpful, because the lawyer may not be well-versed in the subject; in any case, it is upto the trying judge to weigh the pros and cons of the rival expert witnesses and arrive at his own independent judgment.

4. Evolution of writing, writing characteristics or writing habits, study and comparison of numerals, photograph, inks, variations, standards, forgery and the science of detection, comparison, age of documents and writings, are among the topics covered by the present work. It includes more than 50 illustrations and photographs of signatures in various languages, and nearly 80 examples of reports and evidences take up much the greater part of the book.

5. In all cases of forgery and disputed documents, the identification and proof of hand-writing, especially signatures, is of vital importance, and the evidence of a hand-writing expert, though not always conclusive, is useful in testing the validity of other evidence. This identification occupies an important place in the administration of justice, where the rights and liabilities of persons depend upon the genuineness of questioned documents as established in Courts of law. In trials relating to disputed documents, therefore, the Bench, the Bar, and the litigant public should find the book an invaluable guide.

SECULARISM AND THE CONSTITUTION OF INDIA. By P. B. Gajendragadkar. K. T. Telang Endowment Lecture of the University of Bombay, Fort, Bombay 32. 1st Edition. 1971. Pp. 179. Price, Rs. 18.

The Constitution of India declares that the people of India have resolved to constitute India into a sovereign democratic republic and to secure to all her citizens justice, social, economic, and political; liberty of thought, expression, belief, faith, and worship; equality of status and of opportunity. These provisions involve a commitment to the ideal of creating a new social order based on social equality and political and economic justice. That is to be done in a democratic way, consistently with the fundamental rights guaranteed to the citizens.

2. In the lectures before us Dr. Gajendragadkar analyses the essential qualities of secularism and discusses its relevance to Indian life and law. Is the new society which the Constitution visualises a secular society? Is the sovereign democratic republic of India a secular State? What are the distinguishing features of Indian secularism as contemplated by the Constitution? In undertaking these and other enquiries, Dr. Gajendragadkar focuses the reader's attention on the basic philosophy of Indian secularism against the background of Indian history, tradition, and development of social thought.

3. According to the author, the Republic of India, which has evolved as a result of the provisions of the Constitution, can well be described as a secular State. The word 'secular,' in the context of the Constitution and in the light of our historical and philosophic background, has a somewhat different meaning from that associated with it in the Christian world. Indian secularism is not anti-God or anti-religion. It recognises that religion has relevance and validity in the lives of many citizens; but it emphasises that religion cannot hamper or frustrate the progress of Indian democracy in its allotted task of creating a new secular order. While the Constitution guarantees full freedom to all religions in India, it is subject to certain basic limitations. This guarantee of religious freedom applies to citizens as well as foreigners. As the distinguished author observes, "whether one emphasises the width of the guarantee or the width of the limitations imposed upon that guarantee would depend upon the approach one adopts in dealing with the problem". If we look for freedom of religion, we must emphasise the breadth and width of the guarantee enshrined in Articles 25 and 26. If, on the other hand, we are emphasising the doctrine of secularism, dedicated to the cause of creating a new social order founded on justice, social, economic, and political, we should be laying stress on the limitations, imposed upon the right to exercise freedom of religion.

4. According to the author, it is impossible to superimpose a secular state on a tradition-bound and superstition-ridden society. A secular state presupposes the existence of a secular society. India awaits a profound social change, whose pace must be accelerated by education and law and in which processes progressive intellectuals must play an increasingly important part. Dr. Gajendragadkar takes stock of what and how much has been achieved in this respect. He has briefly referred to some of the notable revolutionaries who assisted the cause of social reform and social change and made a good section of the Hindu community responsive to the needs of changing times and changing circumstances.

5. The author sees the enactment of the Hindu Code as an important step towards secularism. But he feels that the process of secularisation of the law must be undertaken without further delay. According to him a common civil code is a must. The demand for a total ban on the slaughter of cows or resistance to change in the Muslim personal law are seen as challenges to Indian secularism. The author analyses in detail the causes of communal violence and suggests ways for providing a harmonious community.

6. The publication is provided with a useful bibliography and with tables of statements regarding communal violence, both Statewise and yearwise.

THE PRESS COUNCIL OF INDIA Fifth Annual Report, 1970.

The twin objects of the Press Council of India are the preservation of the freedom of the press and the maintenance and improvement of the standards of newspapers in India. In both respects the record of work of the Council for the last four years has been such as to belie the fears of those who were inclined to be pessimistic about the outcome of this novel experiment of a statutory body shouldering the responsibility for what should be essentially a self-regulating mechanism. The fifth annual report opens with a Foreward by the Chairman, Justice N. Rajagopala Ayyangar, and reviews the complaints against newspapers and the complaints against Governments, and presents its statement of accounts. The Appendices give the text of the Press Council Act, 1965, Press Council (Amendment) Act 1970, Press Council (Procedure for Enquiry) Regulations 1967, and the Press Note on the presentation of grievances against the press.

2. The year 1970 saw the termination of the first Press Council, set up under the Press Council Act 1965, and the reconstitution of the second. As it is the last annual document recording the activities of the first Council, facts and figures called and collected from separate annual reports are set out here in a nutshell to enable the readers to have a comprehensive picture of what has been achieved.

The first Council considered a number of issues of vital concern to the Press, enunciated principles for the freedom of newspapers being safeguarded, and admonished encroachments on their independence. By its decisions it laid down norms for the conduct of the Press and condemned instances of abnormality.

3. The Council has drawn up 'guidelines' laying down the broad principles which should be followed while reporting or commenting on communal or regional issues. Its adjudication helped in setting out a few tenets of journalism and building up a case-law. The Council's monograph on 'Parliamentary Privileges and the Press' received good notice in the country. While functioning as a quasi-judicial body adjudicating on complaints against newspapers, it has also looked into the grievances of papers against Governments and others, particularly those involving infringements on their right to function freely and fearlessly. It expressed its displeasure over the action of the State authorities when they utilised the distribution of advertisements as a lever for influencing editorial policy. The recent decision of the Council in this regard arising out of a complaint by the Tribune of Chandigarh against the Government of Haryana has aroused wide-spread interest and attracted the notice of Parliament.

4. The Council drew up a scheme for a Newspaper Finance Corporation which could be set up by an Act of Parliament with a financial capital of Rs. 3 crores for assisting ailing, but economically viable, small and medium newspapers, and the present Bill in Parliament is based upon the Council's scheme. The Council suggested that the provisions of the Indian Telegraph Act, 1885 for intercepting press telegrams should come into force only after an emergency has been declared by Government and that the offence should be made non-cognisable in the case of accredited correspondents. It made suitable recommendations regarding the revision of the Indian Postal Act also. It scrutinised the Contempt of Courts Bill, 1968, particularly the provisions likely to affect the free function of the Press, and the Criminal and Election laws (Amendment) Bill, 1968.

5. In the matter of training journalists, the Council carried out a survey of the existing facilities for institutional training in journalism. Information on the syllabi followed and particulars of the scope of practical training in the different universities, colleges and schools of journalism have been collected.

land, for Respondent.

SUMMARY

Upon determining that the continued operation of four interstate passenger trains was not required by public convenience and necessity and would unduly burden inter-State commerce, the Interstate Commerce Commission entered orders terminating its investigation of the proposed discontinuances (331 ICC 447; 333 ICC 720). In the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, various cities, State regulatory agencies, and other interested parties brought suit before a three-judge court to review the Commission's decisions.
The District Court dismissed the cases for lack of jurisdiction, holding that the Commission's decisions to terminate its investigations were not "orders" within the meaning of 28 USC § 1336(a), which gives the District Courts jurisdiction to review any "order" of the Commission (294 F Supp 1103).

On direct appeal, the United States
Supreme Court reversed. In an opinion by Douglas, J., expressing the unanimous view of the court, it was held that the Commission's decision to terminate its investigations were "orders" which were judicially reviewable on the complaint of aggrieved persons.

OPINION OF THE COURT

Mr. JUSTICE DOUGLAS delivered the
opinion of the Court.

The question in these cases is whether orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission discontinuing investigations respecting the notice of rail carriers to terminate or change the operation or ser[vices of inter-State passenger trains are judicially reviewable on the complaint of aggrieved persons.

2. Section 13a(1) of the Inter-State Commerce Act, 72 Stat 571, 49 USC Section 13a(1) provides, with details not important here, that a rail carrier may file notice of such discontinuance or change with the Commission and that within 30 days the Commission may make an investigation of the proposed discontinuance or change. Apart from interim relief, the Commission may order continuance of the operation and service for a period not to exceed one year(i). One of the present cases involves two inter-State passenger trains between Chicago and Evansville, Indiana, discontinued by the Chicago & Eastern Illinois R. Co. (331 ICC 447) and the other two inter-State passenger trains between New Orleans and Cincinnati discontinued by the Louisville & Nashville R. Co., 333 ICC 720.

3. In each case the Commission, addressing itself to the standards in S. 13a(1) found that continued operation of the trains was not required by public convenience and necessity and that continued operation would unduly burden inter-State commerce. It thereupon entered in each case an order terminating its investigation of the proposed discontinuance.

4. Appellants in each case — cities, State regulatory agencies, and other interested parties — brought these suits before the same three-judge court to review the Commission's decisions. It is provided by 28 USC S. 1336(a):

"Except as otherwise provided by Act of Congress, the district courts shall have jurisdiction of any civil action to enforce, enjoin, set aside, annul or suspend, in whole or in part, any order of the inter-State Commerce Commission."

5. The District Court held that decisions terminating investigations under S. 13a(1) are not "orders" within the meaning of 28 USC S. 1336(a),(ii) 294 F

(i) Section 13a(2), applicable to discontinuance of intrastate trains, provides that where a State bars discontinuance or change in operation or service of a train, or where the State authority has not acted on a carrier's application for such discontinuance change within 120 days, the carrier may petition the Commission for a grant of such authority.

(ii) There is a conflict among the District Courts. Minnesota v. United States, 238 F Supp 107, and New Hampshire v. Boston & Maine Corp. 251 F Supp 421, are in accord with the District Court in the instant cases. Opposed to that view are Vermont v. Boston & Maine Corp. 269 F Supp 80, and New York v. United States, 299 F Supp 989. And see City of Williamsport

Supp 1103, 1106. The cases are here on direct appeal, 28 USC Ss. 1253, 2325, and we noted probable jurisdiction, (1969) 395 US 957, 23 L Ed 2d 744, 89 S Ct 2103.

6. As stated in Abbott Laboratories v. Gardner, (1966) 387 US 136, 140, 18 L Ed 2d 681, 140, 87 S Ct 1507, we start with the presumption that aggrieved persons may obtain review of administrative decisions unless there is "persuasive reason to believe" that Congress had no such purpose. Certainly under S. 13a(1) the carrier if overruled by the Commission, could obtain review. We can find no talismanic sign indicating that Congress desired to deny review to opponents of inter-State discontinuances alone.

7. Section 13a in its present form came into the Act in 1958 and was designed to supersede the prior confused and delayed procedure under which the States supervised the discontinuance of passenger trains. Accordingly, Congress provided a uniform federal scheme to take the place of the former procedure.(iii) A single federal standard was to govern train discontinuances whether inter-State or intrastate, though the procedure of

v. United States, 273 F Supp 899, 282 F Supp 46, affd. 392 US 642, 20 L Ed 2d 1348, 88 S Ct 2286.

(iii) "Without reciting individual cases the sub-committee is satisfied that State regulatory bodies all too often have been excessively conservative and unduly repressive in requiring the maintenance of uneconomic and unnecessary services and facilities. Even when allowing the discontinuance or change of a service or facility, these groups have frequently delayed decisions beyond a reasonable time limit. In many such cases, State regulatory commissions have shown a definite lack of appreciation for the serious impact on a rail-road's financial condition resulting from prolonged loss-producing operations.

"To improve this situation, the sub-committee proposes to give the Inter-State Commerce Commission jurisdiction in the field of discontinuance or change of rail services and facilities similar to the jurisdiction it now has over intrastate rates under Section 13 of the Inter-State Commerce Act so that when called upon to do so it may deal with such matters that impose an undue burden on inter-State commerce. This, the sub-committee believes, would protect and further the broad public interest in a sound transportation system and would prevent undue importance being attached to matters of a local nature." S Rep No. 1647, 85th Cong, 2d Sess, p 22. For a review of the legislative history of S. 13a(2) see Southern R. Co. v. North Carolina, 376 US 93, 100-103, 11 L Ed 2d 541, 547, 548, 84 S Ct 564.

S. 13a(1) for discontinuance of an inter-State train was made somewhat different from the procedure for discontinuance of intrastate trains.(iv) But the Commission is to have the final say in each case and "precisely the same substantive standard" now governs discontinuance of either inter-State or intrastate operations. Southern R. Co. v. North Carolina, (1963) 376 US 93, 103, 11 L Ed 2d 541, 548, 84 S Ct 564.

8. Whether the Commission should make an investigation of a S. 13a(1) discontinuance is of course within its discretion, a matter which is not reviewable. State of New Jersey v. United States, 168 F Supp 324, affirmed, (1958) 359 US 27, 3 L Ed 2d 625, 79 S Ct 607. But when the Commission undertakes to investigate, it is under a statutory mandate:

"Whenever an investigation shall be made by said Commission, it shall be its duty to make a report in writing in respect thereto, which shall state the conclusions of the Commission, together with its decision, order, or requirement in the premises" 49 USC S. 14(1).

A decision to investigate indicates that a substantial question exists under the statutory standards. The Commission's report therefore deals with the merits. We cannot say that an answer that discontinuance should not be allowed is agency "action," while an answer saying the reverse is agency "inaction." The technical form of the order is irrelevant. In each case the Commission is deciding the merits. The present cases are kin to the "negative orders"(v) which we dealt with in Rochester Telephone Corp. v. United States, (1938) 307 US 125, 142-143 = 83 L Ed 1147, 1159 = 59 S Ct 754:

"An order of the Commission dismissing a complaint on the merits and maintaining the status quo is an exercise of administrative function, no more and no

(iv) See n. 1, supra.

(v) The Administrative Procedure Act, 5 USC (Supp IV) S. 551(6) defines "order" as including a "negative" form of "a final disposition" by agency action. And that kind of "order" is subject to judicial review. 5 USC (Supp III) Ss. 551(13), 701 (b) (2), 702.

When carriers file new rates, the Commission has authority on its own initiative or on complaint to make an investigation either with or without suspension of the new rates. 49 USC S. 15(7). Where the Commission finds the proposed rates lawful, its order reads "the investigation proceedings [are] discontinued." See Eastern Central Motor Carriers Ass'n v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 314 ICC 5, 51. Such orders are reviewable. Cooper-Jarrett Inc. v. United States, 226 F Supp 318; affirmed, 379 US 6, 13 L Ed 2d 21, 35 S Ct 49, less, than an order directing some change in status. The nature of the issues foreclosed by the Commission's action and the nature of the issues left open, so far as the reviewing power of courts is concerned, are the same. . . .

"We conclude, therefore, that any distinction, as such, between 'negative' and 'affirmative' orders, as a touchstone of jurisdiction to review the Commission's orders, serves no useful purpose, and insofar as earlier decisions have been controlled by this distinction, they can no longer be guiding."

9. The District Court reasoned that since "the statute is self-implementing," only an "order" requiring action is reviewable. 294 F Supp, at 1106. But that theory is of the vintage we discarded in Rochester Telephone.

As a general rule whenever a state or local government decides to select persons by popular election to perform governmental functions the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment requires that each qualified voter must be given an equal opportunity to participate in that election and when members of an elected body are chosen from separate districts, each district must be established on a basis which will insure as far as is practicable that equal numbers of voters can vote for proportionally equal numbers of officials. equal voting power it does so in a way that does not comport with constitutional requirements, because the Act necessarily results in a systematic discrimination against voters in the more populous school districts. This discrimination occurs because whenever a large district's percentage of the total enumeration falls within a certain percentage range it is always allocated the number of trustees corresponding to the bottom of that range. OPINION OF THE COURT

MR. JUSTICE BLACK delivered the opinion of the Court.

This case involves the extent to which the Fourteenth Amendment and the "one man, one vote" principle applies in the election of local governmental officials. Appellants are residents and taxpayers of the Kansas City School District, one of eight separate school districts that have combined to form the Junior College District of Metropolitan Kansas City. Under Missouri law separate school districts may vote by referendum to establish a consolidated junior college district and elect six trustees to conduct and manage the necessary affairs of that district.(i) The state law also provides that these trustees shall be apportioned among the separate school districts on the basis of "school enumeration," defined as the number of persons between the ages of six and 20 years, who reside in each district.(ii) In the case of the Kansas City School District this apportionment plan results in the election of three trustees, or 50% of the total number, from that district. Since that district contains approximately 60% of the total school enumeration in the junior college district,(iii) appellants brought suit claiming that their right to vote for trustees was being unconstitutionally diluted in violation of the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. The Missouri Supreme Court upheld the trial Court's dismissal of the suit, stating that the "one man one vote" principle was not applicable in this case. 432 SW 2d 328. We noted probable jurisdiction of the appeal, (1969) 393 US 1115 = 22 L Ed 2d 120, and for the reasons set forth below we reverse and hold that the Fourteenth Amendment requires that the trustees of this junior college district be apportioned in a manner which does not deprive any voter of his right to have his own vote given as much weight, as far as is practicable, as that of any other voter in the junior college district.

2. In Wesberry v. Sanders, (1964) 376 US 1 = 11 L Ed 2d 481 = 84 S Ct 526, we held that the Constitution requires that

(ii) Mo Ann Stat S. 167.011 (1965).

(iii) For the years 1963 through 1967, the actual enumeration in the Kansas City School District varied between 63.55% and 59.49%. App, at 38.

"as nearly as is practicable one man's vote in a congressional election is to be worth as much as another's." Id., at 7-8, 11 L Ed 2d at 486, 487. Because of this requirement we struck down a Georgia statute which had glaring discrepancies among the populations in that State's congressional districts. In Reynolds v. Sims, (1964) 377 US 533 = 12 L Ed 2d 506 = 84 S Ct 1362, and the companion cases, (iv) we considered state laws which had apportioned state legislatures in a way that again showed glaring discrepancies in the number of people who lived in different legislative districts. In an elaborate opinion we there called attention to prior cases indicating that a qualified voter has a constitutional right to vote in elections without having his vote wrongfully denied, debased or diluted. Ex parte Siebold, (1880) 100 US 371 = 25 L Ed 717; Ex parte Yarbrough, (1884) 110 US 651 = 28 L Ed 274 = 4 S Ct 152; United States v. Mosley, (1915) 238 US 383 = 59 L Ed 1355 = 35 S Ct 904; Guinn v. United States, (1915) 238 US 347 = 59 L Ed 1340 = 35 S Ct 926; Lane v. Wilson, (1939) 307 US 268 = 83 L Ed 1281 = 59 S Ct 872; United States v. Classic, (1941) 313 US 299 = 85 L Ed 1368 = 61 S Ct 1031. Applying the basic principle of Wesberry, we therefore held that the various state apportionment schemes denied some voters the right guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment to have their votes given the same weight as that of other voters. Finally in Avery v. Midland County, (1968) 390 US 474 = 20 L Ed 2d 45 = 88 S Ct 1114, we applied this same principle to the election of Texas county commissioners, holding that a qualified voter in a local election also has a constitutional right to have his vote counted with substantially the same weight as that of any other voter in a case where the elected officials exercised "general governmental powers over the entire geographic area served by the body." Id., at 485, 20 L Ed 2d at 53.

Appellants in this case argue that the junior college trustees exercised general governmental powers over the entire district and that under Avery the State was thus required to apportion the trustees according to population on an equal basis, as far as practicable. Appellants argue that since the trustees can levy and collect taxes, issue bonds with certain restrictions, hire and fire teachers, make contracts, collect fees, supervise and discipline students, pass on petitions to annex school districts, acquire property by condemnation, and in general manage the operations of the junior college, (v) their powers are equivalent for apportionment purposes, to those exercised by the county commissioners in Avery. We feel that these powers, while not fully as broad as those of the Midland County Commissioners, (vi) certainly show that the trustees perform important governmental functions within the districts, and we think these powers are general enough and have sufficient impact throughout the district to justify the conclusion that the principle which we applied in Avery should also be applied here.

3. This Court has consistently held in a long series of cases, (vii) that in situations involving elections, the States are required to insure that each person's vote counts as much, insofar as it is practicable, as any other person's. We have applied this principle in congressional elections, state legislative elections, and local elections. The consistent theme of those decisions is that the right to vote in an election is protected by the United States Constitution against dilution or debasement. While the particular offices involved in these cases have varied, in each case a constant factor is the decision of the government to have citizens participate individually by ballot in the selection of certain people who carry out governmental functions. Thus in the case now before us, while the office of junior college trustee differs in certain respects from those offices considered in prior cases, it is exactly the same in the one crucial factor — these officials are elected by popular vote.

4. When a Court is asked to decide whether a State is required by the Constitution to give each qualified voter the same power in an election open to all, there is no discernible, valid reason why constitutional distinctions should be drawn on the basis of the purpose of the election. If one person's vote is given less weight through unequal apportionment, his right to equal voting participation is impaired just as much when he votes for a school board member as when he votes for a state legislator. While there are differences in the powers of different officials, the crucial consideration is the right of each qualified voter to participate on an equal footing in the election process. It should be remembered that in cases like this one we are asked by voters to insure that they are given equal treatment, and from their perspective the harm from unequal treatment is the same in any election, regardless of the officials selected.

If the purpose of a particular election were to be the determining factor in deciding whether voters are entitled to equal voting power, courts would be faced with the difficult job of distinguishing between various elections. We cannot readily perceive judicially manageable standards to aid in such a task. It might be suggested that equal apportionment is required only in "important" elections, but good judgment and common sense tell us that what might be a vital election to one voter might well be a routine one to another. In some instances the election of a local sheriff may be far more important than the election of a United States Senator. If there is any way of determining the importance of choosing a particular governmental official, we think the decision of the State to select that official by popular vote is a strong enough indication that the choice is an important one. This is so because in our country popular election has traditionally been the method followed when government by the people is most desired.

5. It has also been urged that we distinguish for apportionment purposes between elections for "legislative" officials and those for "administrative" officers. Such a suggestion would leave Courts with an equally unmanageable principle since governmental activities "cannot easily be classified in the neat categories favoured by civics texts," Avery, supra, (1968) 390 US 474 at 482 = 20 L Ed 2d 45 at 52, and it must also be rejected. We therefore hold today that as a general rule, whenever a state or local government decides to select persons by popular election to perform governmental functions, the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment requires that each qualified voter must be given an equal opportunity to participate in that election, and when members of an elected body are chosen from separate districts, each district must be established on a basis which will insure, as far as is practicable, that equal numbers of voters can vote for proportionally equal numbers of officials. It is of course possible that there might be some case in which a State elects certain functionaries whose duties are so far removed from normal governmental activities and so disproportionately effect different groups that a popular election in compliance with Reynolds, supra, might not be required, but certainly we see nothing in the present case which indicates that the activities of these trustees fit in that category. Education has traditionally been a vital governmental function, and these trustees, whose election the State has opened to all qualified voters, are governmental officials in every relevant sense of that term.

6. In this particular case the "one man one vote" principle is to some extent already reflected in the Missouri statute. That act provides that if no one or more of the component school districts has 33 1/3% or more of the total enumeration of the junior college district, then all six trustees are elected at large. If, however, one or more districts has between 33 1/3% and 50% of the total enumeration, each such district elects two trustees and the rest are elected at large from the remaining districts. Similarly if one district has between 50% and 66 2/3% of the enumeration it elects three trustees, and if one district has more than 66 2/3% it elects four trustees. (viii) This scheme thus allocates increasingly more trustees to large districts as they represent an increasing proportion of the total enumeration.

7. Although the statutory scheme reflects to some extent a principle of equal voting power, it does so in a way that does not comport with constitutional requirements. This is so because the act necessarily results in a systematic discrimination against voters in the more populous school districts. This discrimination occurs because whenever a large district's percentage of the total enumeration falls within a certain percentage range it is always allocated the number of trustees corresponding to the bottom of that range. Unless a particular large district has exactly 33 1/3%, 50% or 66 2/3% of the total enumeration it will always have proportionally fewer trustees than the small districts. As has been pointed out, in the case of the Kansas City School District approximately 60% of the total enumeration entitles that district to only 50% of the trustees. Thus while voters in large school districts may frequently have less effective voting power than residents of small districts, they can never have more. Such built-in discrimination against voters in large districts cannot be sustained as a sufficient compliance with the constitutional mandate that each person's vote count as much as another's, as far as practicable. Consequently Missouri cannot allocate the junior college trustees according to the statutory formula employed in this case. (ix) We would be faced with a (viii) Mo Ann Stat S. 178.820 (1965).

(ix) There is some question in this case whether school enumeration figures, rather than actual population figures, can be used as a basis of apportionment. Cf. Burns v. Richardson, 384 US 73, 90-95, 16 L Ed 2d 376, 390-392, 86 S. Ct 1286 (1966). There is no need to decide this question at this time different question if the deviation from equal apportionment presented in this case resulted from a plan that did not contain a built-in bias in favour of small districts, but rather from the inherent mathematical complications in equally apportioning a small number of trustees among a limited number of component districts. We have said before that mathematical exactitude is not required, Wesberry, supra, (1964) 376 US 1 at 18 = 11 L Ed 2d 481 at 492, Reynolds, supra, (1964) 377 US 533 at 577 = 12 L Ed 2d 506 at 536, but a plan that does not automatically discriminate in favour of certain districts is.

8. In holding that the guarantee of equal voting strength for each voter applies in all elections of governmental officials, we do not feel that the States will be inhibited in finding ways to insure that legitimate political goals of representation are achieved. We have previously upheld against constitutional challenge an election scheme which required that candidates be residents of certain districts which did not contain equal numbers of people. Dusch v. Davis, (1967) 387 US 112 = 18 L Ed 2d 656 = 37 S Ct 1554. Since all the officials in that case were elected at large, the right of each voter was given equal treatment.^(x) We have also held that where a State chooses to select members of an official body by appointment rather than election, and that choice does not itself offend the Constitution, the fact that each official does not "represent" the same number of people does not deny those people equal protection of the laws. Sailors v. Bd. of Education, (1967) 387 US 105 = 18 L Ed 2d 650 = 37 S Ct 1549; cf. Fortson v. Morris, (1966) 385 US 231 = 17 L Ed 2d 330 = 37 S Ct 446. And a State may, in certain cases, limit the right to vote to a particular group or class of people. As we said before, "(v)iable local governments may need many innovations, numerous combinations of old and new devices, great flexibility in municipal arrangements to meet changing urban conditions. We see nothing in the Constitution to prevent experimentation." Sailors, supra, at 110-111 = 18 L Ed 2d at 654, 655. But once a state has decided to use the process of popular election and "once the class of voters is chosen and their qualifications specified, we see no constitutional way by which equality of voting power may be evaded." Gray v. Sanders, (1963) 372 US 368, 381 = 9 L Ed 2d 821, 830 = 33 S Ct 801.

9. For the reasons set forth above the judgment below is reversed and the case is since even if school enumeration is a permissible basis, the present statute fails to apportion trustees constitutionally even on that basis.

(x) The statute involved in this case provides that trustees who are elected from component districts rather than at large must be residents of the district from which they are elected. Mo Ann Stat S. 178.820 (2) (1965).

remanded to the Missouri Supreme Court for proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

SEPARATE OPINIONS

MR. JUSTICE HARLAN, with whom the Chief Justice and MR. JUSTICE STEWART join, dissenting.

11. Today's decision demonstrates, to a degree that no other case has, the pervasiveness of the federal judicial intrusion into state electoral processes that was unleashed by the "one man, one vote" rule of (1964) 377 US 533 = 12 L Ed 2d 506 = 34 S Ct 1362.

12. Reynolds established that rule for the apportionment of state legislatures, thereby denying States the right to take into account in the structuring of their legislatures any historical, geographical, economic, or social considerations, or any of the other many practical and subtle factors that have always been recognized as playing a legitimate part in the practice of politics.

13. Four years later, in (1968) 390 US 474 = 20 L Ed 2d 45 = 38 S Ct 1114, the "one man, one vote" rule was extended to many kinds of local governmental units, thereby affecting to an unknown extent the organizational integrity of some 80,000 such units throughout the country, and constricting the States in the use of the electoral process in the establishment of new ones.

14. And today, the Court holds the "one man, one vote" rule applicable to the various boards of trustees of Missouri's junior college system, and forebodes, if indeed the case does not decide, that the rule is to be applied to every elective public body, no matter what its nature.

15. While I deem myself bound by Reynolds and Avery — despite my continued disagreement with them as constitutional holdings (see my dissenting opinions in Reynolds, (1964) 377 US 533 at 589 = 12 L Ed 2d 506 at 543, and in Avery, (1968) 390 US 474 at 486 = 20 L Ed 2d 45 at 54) — I do not think that either of these cases, or any other in this Court, justifies the present decision. I therefore dissent, taking off from Avery in what is about to be said.

16. In Avery the Court acknowledged that "the states varied, pragmatic approach in establishing governments" has produced "a staggering number" of local governmental units. The Court noted that, "while special-purpose organizations abound, . . . virtually every American lives within what he and his neighbors regard as a unit of local government with general responsibility and power for local affairs." The Midland County Commissioners Court, the body whose composition was challenged in Avery, was found to possess a broad range of powers that made it "representative of most of the general governing bodies of American cities, counties, towns, and villages," and the Court was at pains to limit its holding to such general bodies. (1968) 390 US 474 at 482-485 = 20 L Ed 2d 45 at 52-54. Today the Court discards that limitation, stating that "there is no discernible, valid reason why constitutional distinctions should be drawn on the basis of the purpose of the election." Ante, at (1970) 25 L Ed 2d 45 at p. 50 = (AIR 1971 USSC 3 at pp. 5, 6) I believe, to the contrary, that the need to preserve flexibility in the design of local governmental units that serve specialized functions, and must meet particular local conditions, furnishes a powerful reason to refuse to extend the Avery ruling beyond its original limits. If local units having general governmental powers are to be considered, like state legislatures, as having a substantial identity of function that justifies imposing on them a uniformity of elective structure, it is clear that specialized local entities are characterized by precisely the opposite of such identity. From irrigation districts to air pollution control agencies to school districts, such units vary in the magnitude of their impact upon various constituencies and in the manner in which the benefits and burdens of their operations interact with other elements of the local political and economic picture. Today's ruling will forbid these agencies from adopting electoral mechanisms that take these variations into account.

17. In my opinion, this ruling imposes an arbitrary limitation on the ways in which local agencies may be constituted. The Court concedes that the States may use means other than apportionment "to insure that legitimate political goals of representation are achieved." For example, officials elected at large may be required to be residents of particular areas that do not contain equal numbers of people, (1967) 387 US 112 = 18 L Ed 2d 656 = 87 S Ct 1554; the right to vote may be denied outright to persons whose interest in the function performed by the agency is non-existent or slight, cf. Kramer v. Union Free School District, (1969) 395 US 621 = 23 L Ed 2d 583 = 89 S Ct 1886; Cipriano v. City of Houma, (1969) 395 US 701 = 23 L Ed 2d 647 = 89 S Ct 1897; or the State may in many instances abandon the elective process altogether and allow members of an official body to be appointed, without any regard for the equal-population principle, (1967) 387 US 105 = 18 L Ed 2d 650 = 87 S Ct 1549. Since the Court recognizes the States' need for flexibility in structuring local units, I am unable to see any basis for its selectively denying to them one of the means to achieve such flexibility. If, as the Court speculates, other means will prove as effective as apportionment in the adaptation of local agencies to meet specific needs, presumably those other means will also enable the States just as effectively to accomplish whatever evils the Court thinks it is preventing by today's decision. The Court has not shown that, under the supervision of state legislatures that are apportioned according to Reynolds, flexible methods of apportionment of local official bodies carry any greater danger of abuse than these other means of achieving the desirable goal of specialization. The Court's imposition of this arbitrary limitation on the States can be justified only in the name of mathematical nicety.

18. I do not believe that even after Avery, such a result is compelled by the absence of "judicially manageable standards" for the "difficult job of distinguishing between various elections." Ante, at —, (1970) 25 L Ed 2d 45 at 50 = (AIR 1971 USSC 3 at pp. 5, 6). Before today, the Court's rule was that "one man, one vote" applied only to local bodies having "general governmental powers over the entire geographic area served by the body." (1968) 390 US 474 at 485 = 20 L Ed 2d 45 at 53. The Court in Avery professed no temerity about concluding that the Midland County Commissioners Court was such a body. The Court's mere recitation of the powers of that entity, ante, at —, n. 6, (1970) 25 L Ed 2d 45 at p. 49 = (AIR 1970 USSC 3 at p. 5) suffices to establish that conclusion. At the same time, it cannot be argued seriously that the Junior College District of Metropolitan Kansas City is the general governing body for the people of its area. The mere fact that the trustees, can, with restrictions, levy taxes, issue bonds, and condemn property for school purposes does not detract from the crucial consideration that the sole purpose for which the district exists is the operation of a junior college. If the Court adhered to the Avery line, marginal cases would of course arise in which the courts would face difficulty in determining whether a particular entity exercised general governmental powers, but such a determination would be no different in kind from many other matters of degree upon which courts must continually pass. The importance of ensuring flexibility in the organization of specialized units of government, and the uncertainty whether the rule announced today will further any important countervailing interest, convince me that the Court should not proceed further into the political thicket than it has already gone in Avery.

19. The facts of this case afford a clear indication of the extent to which reasonable state objectives are to be sacrificed on the altar of numerical equality. We are not faced with an apportionment scheme that is a historical relic, with no present-day justification, or one that reflects the stranglehold of a particular group that, having once attained power, blindly resists a redistribution. The structure of the Junior College District of Metropolitan Kansas City is based upon a state statute enacted in 1961. Prior to that date, the individual school boards had the power to create their own junior colleges, as they still do, but there was apparently no authorization for cooperation among districts. The 1961 statute was enacted out of concern on the part of the legislature that Missouri's public educational facilities were not expanding at a satisfactory rate, see Three Rivers Junior College District v. Statler, 421 SV 2d 235, 237 (Mo. 1967). (i) The provisions of the statute evidence a legislative determination of the most effective means to encourage expansion through cooperation between districts.

20. The statutory provision for election of the six-man board of trustees, summarized by the Court, reflects a careful balancing of the desirability of population-based representation against the practical problems involved in the creation of new educational units. The statute does not by its own force create any junior college districts; this is left to the initiative of the residents of particular areas who are interested in providing public junior-college education for their children. In recognition of the fact that individual school districts may lack the funds or the population to support a junior college of their own, the state legislature has authorized them to make voluntary arrangements with their neighbors for joint formation of a junior college district. If one of the cooperating school districts greatly preponderates in size, it enters into the arrangement knowing that its representation on the board of trustees, while large, will be somewhat smaller than it would be if based strictly on relative school enumeration.

21. The features of this system are surely sensibly designed to facilitate creation of new educational bodies while guaranteeing to small school districts that they will not be entirely swallowed up by a large partner. The small districts are free to avoid alliance with a highly populated neighbor, if they prefer to link with enough others of their own size to provide a viable base for a junior college. At the same time, a very large school district is probably capable of forming a junior college on its own if it prefers not to consolidate, on the terms set by statute, with smaller neighbors. On the other hand, large and small districts may work together if they find this the most beneficial arrangement. (ii) The participation, as here, of seven smaller and one larger school district in the joint formation of a junior college

(i) Counsel for appellees informed the Court at oral argument that prior to the passage of this statute, when the law merely authorized each school district in the State to establish its own junior college, there were only seven such junior colleges, with a total enrollment of approximately 5,000 students. Today there are 12 junior college districts, in which nearly 120 individual school districts participate, with a total enrollment of over 80,000 students.

(ii) At the time this suit was filed, nine junior college districts had been formed pur-district, represents a pragmatic choice by all concerned from among a number of possible courses of action.

22. I find it bizarre to conclude that such a voluntary arrangement effects an unconstitutional "dilution" of the votes of residents of the largest school district. When the Court, in Reynolds, rejected a proposed analogy between state legislatures and the Federal Congress, it relied heavily on the fact that state legislative districts "are merely involuntary political units of the State created by statute to aid in the administration of state government." 377 US 533 at 548 = 12 L Ed 2d at 519. In contrast, the National Government was created by the union of "a group of formerly independent States." The system of representation in Congress was "conceived out of compromise and concession" between the larger and smaller States. Id., (1964) 377 US 533 at 574 = 12 L Ed 2d 506 at 534. The system struck down today shares much of this same character of voluntary compromise. It is true that the analogy would be even closer if the legislature had left the school districts free to negotiate their own apportionment terms, rather than imposing a uniform scale; but as I read the Court's opinion today, it would strike down the apportionment in this case even if the terms had resulted from an entirely free agreement among the eight school districts. Insistence upon a simplistic mathematical formula as the measure of compliance with the Equal Protection Clause in cases involving the electoral process has resulted in this instance in a total disregard of the salutary purposes underlying the statutory scheme.

23. Finally, I find particularly perplexing the portion of the Court's opinion explaining why the apportionment involved in this case does not measure up even under the "one man, one vote" dogma. The Court holds that the voters of the Kansas City School District, who elect 50% of the trustees, are denied equal protection of the laws because that district contains about 60% of the school enumeration. This is so because the statutory formula embodies a "built-in discrimination against voters in large districts." Ante. at —, 25 L Ed 2d 45 at 51. The Court seems to suggest that the same discrepancy among districts might pass muster if it could be shown to be mathematically unavoidable in the apportionment of the small number of trustees among the component districts; but the discrepancy is not permissible where it simply reflects the legislature's choice of a means to foster a legitimate state goal. This reasoning seems hard to follow and also disturbing on two scores.

suant to the statutory procedures. Of these, three did not contain a component district large enough to bring into play the fractional formula; the remaining six did contain such a district.

24. First, to apply the rule with such rigor to local governmental units, especially single-function units, is to disregard the characteristics that distinguish such units from state legislatures. As I noted in my dissent in Avery, (1968) 390 US 474 at 488-490 = 20 L Ed 2d 45 at 55, 56, there is a much smaller danger of abuses through malapportionment in the case of local units because there exist avenues of political redress that are not similarly available to correct malapportionment of state legislatures. Further, as noted above, the greater diversity of functions performed by local governmental units creates a greater need for flexibility in their structure. If these considerations are inadequate to stave off the extension of the Reynolds rule to units of local government, they at least provide a persuasive rationale for applying that rule so as to allow local governments much more play in the joints.

25. Such an approach is not foreclosed by the previous cases. In Reynolds, (1964) 377 US 533 at 577-581 = 12 L Ed 2d 506 at 536-538, the Court catalogued a number of considerations indicating that "somewhat more flexibility" might be permissible in state legislative apportionment than in congressional districting. Compare Swann v. Adams, (1967) 385 US 440 = 17 L Ed 2d 501 = 87 S Ct 569, with Kirkpatrick v. Preisler, (1969) 394 US 526 = 22 L Ed 2d 519 = 89 S Ct 1225 and Wells v. Rockefeller, (1969) 394 US 542 = 22 L Ed 2d 535 = 89 S Ct 1234. The need for more flexibility becomes greater as we proceed down the spectrum from the state legislature to the single purpose local entity.

26. The disparities of representation in Avery were of an entirely different order from those here. In that case, each of the four districts elected one commissioner to the Commissioners Court, despite the fact that the population of one district was 67,906, while those of the remaining three were 852, 414, and 828. I think that the Avery rule, born in an extreme case, is being applied here with a rigidity that finds no justification in the considerations that gave it birth. (1969) 394 US 542 at 553 = 22 L Ed 2d 535 at 552 = 89 S Ct 1234 (White, J., dissenting). In this case the disparity of representation is relatively minor. Even more important, it is not an unexplained and unjustified deviation from equality, see (1967) 385 US 440 at 445-446 = 17 L Ed 2d 501 at 505, 506 = 87 S Ct 569 but reflects an enlightened state policy of encouraging individual school districts to join together voluntarily to expand the State's public junior college facilities.

27. Second, the Court leaves unexplored the premises underlying its conclusion that the apportionment here does not achieve equality, "as far as practicable." Ante, at —, (1970) 25 L Ed 2d 45 at p. 51 = (AIR 1970 USSC 3 at pp. 6, 10) Missouri is forbidden to use the statutory formula employed in this case because the percentage categories it creates will, in particular instances, only approximate equality, and because whatever discrepancy exists will always favor residents of the smaller districts. The Court does not suggest how a formula could be devised that would provide a general rule for application to all the various junior college districts but would not share these alleged faults. If a large district falling within a given percentage range were allocated the number of trustees corresponding to the top, rather than the bottom, of the range, that would also produce, on the Court's theory, a "built-in discrimination" against voters in small districts.

28. Thus, the result of the Court's holding may be that Missouri is forbidden to establish any formula of general application for apportionment of trustees, but must instead provide for the improvisation of an individual apportionment scheme for each junior college district after the contours of the district have been settled. But surely a State could reasonably determine that the mechanics of operating such a system would be so unduly burdensome that it would be better to apportion according to a statewide formula. Would not such considerations justify a conclusion that the statewide formula achieves equality "as far as practicable"? While the Court does not discuss the problem, its invalidation of this statutory formula seems to be based on the premise that such practical considerations, like a State's desire to encourage co-operation among districts, are constitutionally inadequate to justify any divergence from voting "equality."

29. The Court does not, however, spell out any rationale for concluding that such matters of administrative convenience deserves no weight in determining what is "practicable." This is especially incongruous in light of the Court's unexplained conclusion that deference can be given to legislative determinations that the Boards should have a small number of trustees and that the trustees in some instances should represent component school districts. Why does the Court not require that the number of trustees be increased from six, in order to reduce the roughness with which equality is approximated? Would a three-man board be unconstitutionally small? Why is the Court willing to accept inequality that derives from a desire to give representation to component school districts, when similar inequality in state legislative districting could probably not be justified by a desire to give representation to counties? (1964) 377 US 533 at 579-581 = 12 L Ed 2d 506 at 537, 538 = 84 S Ct 1362; (1967) 385 US 440 at 444 = 17 L Ed 2d 501 at 504 = 87 S Ct 569. If equality cannot be achieved when representation is by component districts, why does the "as far as practicable" standard not require at large election of trustees? Is there something about these considerations that gives them a status under the Equal Protection Clause that is not possessed by a legislative desire to apportion by a formula of statewide application?

30. It seems to me that beneath the surface of the Court's opinion lie unspoken answers to these and other similar questions, questions that I can characterize only as matters of political judgment. The Court's adoption of a rigid, mathematical rule turns out not to have saved it from having to balance and judge political considerations, concluding that one does merit some weight in an apportionment scheme while another does not. The fact that the courts, rather than the legislatures, now are the final arbiters of such matters will continue, I fear, after the present decision to be the inevitable consequence of the shallow approach to the Equal Protection Clause represented by the "one man, one vote" theory. The Court could at least lessen the disruptive impact of that approach at the local level by approving this relatively minor divergence from strict equality on the ground that the legislature could reasonably have concluded that it was necessary to accomplish legitimate state interests.

31. I would affirm the judgment of the Supreme Court of Missouri. What our Court has done today seems to me to run far afield of the values embodied in the scheme of government ordained by the Constitution.

Mr. Chief Justice BURGER, dissenting.

32. I concur fully in the opinion of Mr. Justice Harlan. I add this comment to emphasize the subjective quality of a doctrine of constitutional law which has as its primary standard "a general rule, [that] whenever a state or local government decides to select persons by popular election . . .," the Constitution commands that each qualified voter must be given a vote which is equally weighted with the votes cast by all other electors.

33. The failure to provide guidelines for determining when the Court's "general rule" is to be applied is exacerbated when the Court implies that the stringent standards of "mathematical exactitude" which are controlling in apportionment of federal congressional districts need not be applied to smaller specialized districts such as the junior college district in this case. This gives added relevance to Mr. Justice Harlan's observation that "[t]he need for more flexibility becomes greater as we proceed down the spectrum from the state legislature to the single-purpose local entity." Ante, at —, (1970) 25 L Ed 2d 45 at p. 57 = (AIR 1971 USSC 3 at p. 10). Yet the Court has given almost no indication of which nonpopulation interests may or may not legitimately be considered by a legislature in devising a constitutional apportionment scheme for a local, specialized unit of government.

34. Ultimately, only this Court can finally apply these "general rules" but in the interim all other judges must speculate as best they can when and how to apply them; with all deference I suggest the Court's opinion today fails to give any meaningful guidelines.

Case remanded.

BLACK, DOUGLAS, BRENNAN AND MARSHALL, JJ.

E. S. Evans et al., Petitioners v. Guyton G. Abney et al., Respondents.

(No. 60) Decided on 26-1-1970.

†(A) Constitution of India, Article 14 — Case from America — Racial discrimination — Testator bequeathing land to city for creating park exclusively for white persons — After Supreme Court rulings upon segregation, intention incapable of being carried out — Property reverts to estate — Cy pres doctrine does not apply — (Civil P. C. (1908), Section 92 — Cy pres) — (Succession Act (1925), Sections 118, 126 — Cy pres) — (Constitution of United States of America 14th Amendment).

A testator created a testamentary trust by which certain land was conveyed to the city for the express purpose of providing a park for white persons only. For some years the city so operated the park. But later on the Negroes were permitted. In a ruling in a proceeding in respect of this park, the Supreme Court of America had ruled that the public character of the park required that it be treated as public institution subject to the provisions of the 14th Amendment. Thereafter the Trustees applied for a motion that the object of the trust failed and had thus become unenforceable and had thus reverted to the testator's heirs. The Negroes contended that the doctrine of cy pres should be applied and thus the trust should be saved. The Court (Supreme Court of Georgia, affirming the trial Court) granted the motion and rejected the application of the Negroes for application of doctrine of cy pres. On certiorari, the Supreme Court of United States affirmed and:

Held that the trust failed not because of segregation but because of impossibility of fulfilling the testator's intention and that therefore the property reverted to the heirs of the testator. The trust could not be saved by applying doctrine of cy pres. Court had to determine the intention of the testator and since racial segregation was inseparable part, the intention could not be carried out. It was obvious that the testator would rather have had the whole trust fail than have the part integrated. The ruling did not violate the 14th Amendment. (Paras 1, 8, 12)

Since there was no indication that the State Courts were motivated by discriminatory intent, in construing the will, there was no violation of equal protection clause by the Courts. (Paras 9, 11)

Even though the will did not provide for reverter, the decision of the Court did not involve a matter of choice and the Court's anti-Negro choice did not violate 14th Amendment. (Para 11)

(B) Civil P. C. (1908), Section 92 — Succession Act (1925), Section 118 — Cy pres doctrine of — Case from America.

The doctrine of cy pres is that when a valid charitable bequest is incapable for some reason, of execution in the exact manner provided by the testator, the Court of equity may carry it into effect in such a way as will as nearly as possible effectuate his general intention. The object is to allow the Court to carry out the general charitable intent of the testator where such intent might otherwise be thwarted by impossibility of the particular plan or scheme provided by the testator. This doctrine implies that it cannot be applied in certain class of cases e. g. where the particular intention of the testator is dominant, and he would not have created the trust but to carry out that intention and the intention for some reason is incapable of being carried out. In such a case the property reverts to the estate. (Para 5)

(C) Constitution of India, Article 32 — Case from America — Responsibility of Supreme Court (of United States of America) is to construe and enforce the Constitution and laws of the land as they are and not to legislate social policy on basis of its own personal inclinations — Interpretation of Statutes. SUMMARY

Under a testamentary trust, certain land was conveyed to the city of Macon, Georgia, for the express purpose of providing a park for white persons only, and the city so operated the park for some years, but in time permitted use by Negroes. In earlier proceedings, the Georgia state courts ruled in favor of the managers of the park who sought to have the city removed as trustee since it could not legally enforce racial segregation in the park, and to have private trustees appointed to whom title would be transferred, but the United States Supreme Court, ruling in favor of Negro citizens of Macon who had intervened, reversed, holding that the public character of the park required that it be treated as a public institution subject to the Fourteenth Amendment, regardless of who had title under state law (382 US 296 = 15 L Ed 2d 373 = 83 S Ct 486). Thereafter, a motion of trustees of the testator's estate for a ruling that the trust had become unenforceable and the trust property had thus reverted to the testator's heirs, was granted by the Georgia trial court, which rejected the argument of both the Negro intervenors and the Attorney General of Georgia that the trust should be saved by applying the cy pres doctrine to amend the terms of the will by striking the racial restrictions and permitting integration of the park. The Supreme Court of Georgia affirmed (224 Ga 826 = 165 SE2d 160).

On certiorari, the Supreme Court of the United States affirmed. In an opinion by Black, J., expressing the view of five members of the court, it was held that (1) the Fourteenth Amendment rights of the Negro intervenors were not violated by the ruling of the Georgia Supreme Court, which court did no more than apply well-settled principles of Georgia law in construing the will and in concluding that the cy pres doctrine could not be applied since racial segregation was an inseparable part of the testator's intent as indicated by the whole will, including provisions that under no circumstances was the property to be used for any purpose other than an all-white park and that the testator was not influenced by any unkindness of feeling for Negroes, but was of the opinion that in social relations the two races should be forever separate and should not have recreation grounds to be used in common, (2) the Georgia courts ruling did not violate the Federal Constitution as imposing a penalty on the city and its citizens by forcing the closing of the park, since the court, upon interpreting the will as embodying a preference for termination of the park rather than its integration, had no alternative but to end the trust under Georgia's long-standing and racially neutral trust laws, (3) there was no state action violative of the equal protection clause, since a private party had injected the racially discriminatory motivation, there being no indication that any of the Georgia judges involved were motivated by discriminatory intent of any sort in construing and enforcing the will, nor that the testator was induced to include the racial restrictions in his will by the fact that such restrictions were permitted by the Georgia trust statutes, and (4) even though the will did not expressly provide for a reverter in the event that the racial restrictions failed, the Georgia court's decision did not involve a matter of choice and that court's assertedly "anti-Negro choice" did not violate the Fourteenth Amendment, since there was no indication that the Georgia judges were motivated by any desire to discriminate against Negroes, and since the only choice the Georgia judges either had or exercised was their judicial judgment in construing the will to determine the testator's intent, the Constitution imposing no requirements upon the Georgia court to approach the will any differently than it would approach any will creating any charitable trust of any kind.

DOUGLAS, J., dissented on the grounds that (1) since the testator's will did not leave any remainder or reversion in the park to his heirs but left all remainders and reversions to the city, giving the property to the heirs, rather than reserving it for some municipal use, violated the testator's intent as much as would converting the park to an all-Negro park, (2) even at the time the will was executed, under the separate-but-equal concept the municipal use projected by the will was not constitutionally permissible, since the beneficiaries were members of the white race only and like accommodations were not made for the Negro race, (3) the purpose of the will was to dedicate the land for some municipal use, and continuation of the use as a municipal park or for another municipal purpose would carry out a larger share of the testator's purpose than the complete destruction of such use, and (4) the Georgia decision should fail as the imposition of a penalty for obedience to a principle of national supremacy.

BRENNAN, J., dissented, expressing the view that the record clearly established the closing of a public facility for the sole reason that the public authority which owned and maintained it could not keep it segregated, which violated the equal protection clause, and that the closing of the park involved state action, since (1) the state, by the official action involved in the city's acceptance of the gift of the park, entered into an arrangement involving both the creation and the enforcement of a private right to compel the reversion of a public facility, (2) the Georgia court's enforcement of the racial restriction prevented willing parties from dealing with one another, there being no indication that city officials or its citizens were unwilling to have the park integrated, and the Georgia Attorney General having sought integration of the park, and (3) Georgia, 6 years before the testator's will was written, had enacted statutes expressly permitting dedication of land for use as a park open to only one race the state having thereby undertaken to facilitate racial restrictions as distinguished from all other kinds of restrictions on access to a public park.

MARSHALL, J., took no part in the decision of the case.

OPINION OF THE COURT

MR. JUSTICE BLACK delivered the opinion of the Court.

Once again this Court must consider the constitutional implications of the 1911 will of United States Senator A. O. Bacon of Georgia which conveyed property in trust to Senator Bacon's home city of Macon for the creation of a public park for the exclusive use of the white people of that city. As a result of our earlier decision in this case which held that the park, Baconsfield, could not continue to be operated on a racially discriminatory basis, Evans v. Newton, (1966) 382 US 296 = 15 L Ed 2d 373 = 86 S Ct 486 the Supreme Court of Georgia ruled that Senator Bacon's intention to provide a park for whites only had become impossible to fulfill and that accordingly the trust had failed and the parkland and other trust property had reverted by operation of Georgia law to the heirs of the Senator. (1968) 165 SE 2d 160 Petitioners, the same Negro citizens of Macon who have sought in the courts to integrate the park, contend that this termination of the trust violates their rights to equal protection and due process under the Fourteenth Amendment. We granted certiorari because of the importance of the questions involved. (1969) 394 US 1012 = 23 L Ed 2d 38 = 89 S Ct 1628. For the reasons to be stated we are of the opinion that the judgment of the Supreme Court of Georgia should be, and it is, affirmed.

2. The early background to this litigation was summarized by Mr. Justice Douglas in his opinion for the Court in (1966) 382 US 296 at pp. 297-298 = 15 L Ed 2d 373 at p. 376;

"In 1911 United States Senator Augustus O. Bacon executed a will that devised to the Mayor and Council of the City of Macon, Georgia, a tract of land which, after the death of the Senator's wife and daughters, was to be used as "a park and pleasure ground" for white people only, the Senator stating in the will that while he had only the kindest feeling for the Negroes he was of the opinion that "in their social relations the two races (white and negro) should be forever separate." The will provided that the park should be under the control of a Board of Managers of seven persons, all of whom were to be white. The city kept the park segregated for some years but in time let Negroes use it, taking the position that the park was a public facility which it could not constitutionally manage and maintain on a segregated basis.

"Thereupon, individual members of the Board of Managers of the Park brought this suit in a state court against the City of Macon and the trustees of certain residuary beneficiaries of Senator Bacon's estate, asking that the city be removed as trustee and that the Court appoint new trustees, to whom title to the park would be transferred. The city answered, alleging it could not legally enforce racial segregation in the park. The other defendants admitted the allegation and requested that the city be removed as trustee.

"Several Negro citizens of Macon intervened, alleging that the racial limitation was contrary to the laws and public policy of the United States, and asking that the Court refuse to appoint private trustees. Thereafter the city resigned as trustee and amended its answer accordingly. Moreover, other heirs of Senator Bacon intervened and they and the defendants other than the city asked for reversion of the trust property to the Bacon estate in the event that the prayer of the petition were denied.

"The Georgia Court accepted the resignation of the city as trustee and appointed three individuals as new trustees, finding it unnecessary to pass on the other claims of the heirs. On appeal by the Negro intervenors, the Supreme Court of Georgia affirmed, holding that Senator Bacon had the right to give and bequeath his property to a limited class, that charitable trusts are subject to supervision of a Court of equity, and that the power to appoint new trustees so that the purpose of the trust would not fail was clear. (1965) 220 Ga 280 = 138 SE2d 573."

3. The Court in Evans v. Newton, (1966) 382 US 296 = 15 L Ed 2d 373 supra. went on to reverse the judgment of the Georgia Supreme Court and to hold that the public character of Baconsfield "requires that it be treated as a public institution subject to the command of the Fourteenth Amendment, regardless of who now has title under state law." (1966) 382 US 296 at 302 = 15 L Ed 2d 373 at 379. Thereafter, the Georgia Supreme Court interpreted this Court's reversal of its decision as requiring that Baconsfield be henceforth operated on a non-discriminatory basis. "Under these circumstances," the state high court held, "we are of the opinion that the sole purpose for which the trust was created has become impossible of accomplishment and has been terminated." Evans v. Newton, (1966) 221 Ga 870. Without further elaboration of this holding, the case was remanded to the Georgia trial Court to consider the motion of Guyton G. Abney and others, successor trustees of Senator Bacon's estate, for a ruling that the trust had become unenforceable and that accordingly the trust property had reverted to the Bacon estate and to certain named heirs of the Senator. The motion was opposed by petitioners and by the Attorney General of Georgia, both of whom argued that the trust should be saved by applying the cy pres doctrine to amend the terms of the will by striking the racial restrictions and opening Baconsfield to all the citizens of Macon without regard to race or color. The trial Court, however, refused to apply cy pres. It held that the doctrine was inapplicable because the park's segregated, whites-only character was an essential and inseparable part of the testator's plan. Since the "sole purpose" of the trust was thus in irreconcilable conflict with the constitutional mandate expressed in our opinion in Evans v. Newton, the trial Court ruled that the Baconsfield trust had failed and that the trust property had by operation of law reverted to the heirs of Senator Bacon. On appeal, the Supreme Court of Georgia affirmed.

4. We are of the opinion that in ruling as they did the Georgia Courts did no more than apply well settled general principles of Georgia law to determine the meaning and effect of a Georgia will. At the time Senator Bacon made his will and still today, Georgia cities and towns are authorized to accept devises of property for the establishment and preservation of "parks and pleasure grounds" and to hold the property thus received in charitable trust for the exclusive benefit of the class of persons named by the testator. Ga Code Ann, c. 69-5 (1959); Ga Code Ann Ss. 108-203, 207 (1959). These provisions of the Georgia Code explicitly authorized the testator to include, if he should choose, racial restrictions such as those found in Senator Bacon's will. The city accepted the trust with these restrictions in it. When this Court in (1966) 382 US 296 = 15 L Ed 2d 373 = 86 S Ct 486, held that the continued operation of Baconsfield as a segregated park was unconstitutional, the particular purpose of the Baconsfield trust as stated in the will failed under Georgia law. The question then properly before the Georgia Supreme Court was whether as a matter of state law the doctrine of cy pres should be applied to prevent the trust itself from failing. Petitioners urged that the cy pres doctrine allowed the Georgia courts to strike the racially restrictive clauses in Bacon's will so that the terms of the trust could be fulfilled without violating the Constitution.

5. The Georgia cy pres statutes upon which petitioners relied provide:

"When a valid charitable bequest is incapable for some reason of execution in the exact manner provided by the testator, donor, or founder, a Court of equity will carry it into effect in such a way as will as nearly as possible effectuate his intention." Ga Code Ann S. 108-202 (1959).

"A devise or bequest to a charitable use will be sustained and carried out in this state; and in all cases where there is a general intention manifested by the testator to effect a certain purpose, and the particular mode in which he directs it to be done shall fail from any cause, a Court of chancery may by approximation, effectuate the purpose in a manner most similar to that indicated by the testator." Ga Code Ann S. 113-815 (1959).

The Georgia Courts have held that the fundamental purpose of these cy pres provisions is to allow the Court to carry out the general charitable intent of the testator where this intent might otherwise be thwarted by the impossibility of the particular plan or scheme provided by the testator. Moss v. Youngblood, (1938) 187 Ga 188. But this underlying logic of the cy pres doctrine implies that there is a certain class of cases in which the doctrine cannot be applied. Professor Scott in his treatise on trusts states this limitation on the doctrine of cy pres which is common to many States(i) as follows:

"It is not true that a charitable trust never fails when it is impossible to carry out the particular purpose of the testator. In some cases it appears that the accomplishment of the particular purpose and only that purpose was desired by the testator and that he had no more general charitable intent and that he would presumably have preferred to have the whole trust fail if the particular purpose is impossible of accomplishment. In such a case the cy pres doctrine is not applicable." IV Scott, Trusts S. 399, at 3085 (1967).

6. In this case, Senator Bacon provided an unusual amount of information in his will from which the Georgia Courts could determine the limits of his charitable purpose. Immediately after specifying that the park should be for "the sole, perpetual and unending use, benefit and enjoyment of the white women, white girls, white boys and white children of the City of Macon," the Senator stated that "the said property under no circumstances (is) to be at any time for any reason devoted to any other purpose or use excepting so far as herein specifically authorised." And the Senator continued:

" I take occasion to say that in limiting the use and enjoyment of the property perpetually to white people, I am not influenced by an unkindness of feeling or want of consideration for the Negroes, or colored people. On the contrary I have for them the kindest feeling, and for many of them esteem and regard, while for some of them I have sincere personal affection.

"I am however, without hesitation in the opinion that in their social relations the two races should be forever separate and that they should not have pleasure or recreation grounds to be used or enjoyed, together and in common."

7. The Georgia Courts, construing Senator Bacon's will as a whole, Yerby v. Chandler, (1942) 194 Ga 263, concluded from this and other language in the will that the Senator's charitable intent was not "general" but extended only to the establishment of a segregated park for the benefit of white people. The Georgia trial Court found that "Senator Bacon could not have used language more clearly indicating his intent that the benefits of Baconsfield should be extended to white persons only, or more clearly indicating that this limitation was an essential and indispensable part of his plan for Baconsfield." App, at 519. Since racial separation was found to be an inseparable part of the testator's intent, the Georgia Court held that the State's cy pres doctrine could not be used to alter the will to permit racial integration. See Ford v. Thomas, (1900) 111 Ga 493; Adams v. Bass, (1855) 18 Ga 180. The Baconsfield trust was therefore held to have failed, and, under Georgia law, "[w]here a trust is expressly created, but (its) uses . . . fail from any cause, a resulting trust is implied for the benefit of the grantor, or testator, or his heirs." Ga Code Ann S. 108-106 (4) (1959). (ii) The Georgia Courts concluded, in effect, that Senator Bacon would have rather had the whole trust fail than have Baconsfield integrated.

8. When a city park is destroyed because the Constitution required it to be integrated, there is reason for everyone to be disheartened. We agree with petitioners that in such a case it is not enough to find that the State Court's result was reached through the application of established principles of state law. No state law or act can prevail in the face of contrary federal law, and the federal Courts must search out the fact and truth of any proceeding or transaction to determine if the Constitution has been violated. Presbyterian Church v. Hull Church, (1969) 393 US 440 = 21 L Ed 2d 658 = 89 S Ct 601, New York Times v. Sullivan, (1964) 376 US 254 = 11 L Ed 2d 686 = 84 S Ct 710 = 95

(ii) Although Senator Bacon's will did not contain an express provision granting a reverter to any party should the trust fail, S. 108-106 (4) of the Georgia Code quoted in the text makes such an omission irrelevant under state law. At one point in the Senator's will he did grant "all remainders and reversions" to the city of Macon, but the Supreme Court of Georgia showed in its opinion that this language did not relate in any way to what should happen upon a failure of the trust but was relevant only to the initial vesting of the property in the city. The Georgia Court said:

"Senator Bacon devised a life estate in the trust property to his wife and two daughters, and the language pointed out by the intervenors appears in the following provision of the will: 'When my wife, Virginia Lamar Bacon and my two daughters, Mary Louise Bacon Sparks and Augusta Lamar Bacon Curry, shall all have departed this life, and immediately upon the death of the last survivor of them, it is my will that all right, title and interest in and to said property hereinbefore described and bounded, both legal and equitable, including all remainders and reversions and every estate in the same of whatsoever kind, shall thereupon vest in and belong to the Mayor and Council of the City of Macon, and to their successors forever, in trust etc.' This language concerned remainders and reversions prior to the vesting of the legal title in the City of Macon, as trustee, and not to remainders and reversions occurring because of a failure of the trust, which Senator Bacon apparently did not contemplate, and for which he made no provision." 165 SE2d 160, 165 (1968).

ALR 2d 1412. Here, however, the action of the Georgia Supreme Court declaring the Baconsfield trust terminated presents no violation of constitutionally protected rights, and any harshness that may have resulted from the State Court's decision can be attributed solely to its intention to effectuate as nearly as possible the explicit terms of Senator Bacon's will.

9. Petitioners first argue that the action of the Georgia Court violates the United States Constitution in that it imposes a drastic "penalty," the "forfeiture" of the park, merely because of the city's compliance with the constitutional mandate expressed by this Court in Evans v. Newton. Of course, Evans v. Newton did not speak to the problem of whether Baconsfield should or could continue to operate as a park; it held only that its continued operation as a park had to be without racial discrimination. But petitioners now want to extend that holding to forbid the Georgia courts from closing Baconsfield on the ground that such a closing would penalize the city and its citizens for complying with the Constitution. We think, however, that the will of Senator Bacon and Georgia law provide all the justification necessary for imposing such a "penalty." The construction of wills is essentially a state-law question, Lyeth v. Hoey, (1938) 305 US 188 = 83 L Ed 119 = 59 S Ct 155 = 119 ALR 410, and in this case the Georgia Supreme Court, as we read its opinion, interpreted Senator Bacon's will as embodying a preference for termination of the park rather than its integration. Given this, the Georgia Court had no alternative under its relevant trust laws, which are long standing and neutral with regard to race, but to end the Baconsfield trust and return the property to the Senator's heirs.

10. A second argument for petitioners stresses the similarities between this case and the case in which a city holds an absolute fee simple title to a public park and then closes that park of its own accord solely to avoid the effect of a prior Court order directing that the park be integrated as the Fourteenth Amendment commands. Yet, assuming arguendo that the closing of the park would in those circumstances violate the Equal Protection Clause, that case would be clearly distinguishable from the case at bar because there it is the State and not a private party which is injecting the racially discriminatory motivation. In the case at bar there is not the slightest indication that any of the Georgia Judges involved were motivated by racial animus or discriminatory intent of any sort in construing and enforcing Senator Bacon's will. Nor is there any indication that Senator Bacon in drawing up his will was persuaded or induced to include racial restrictions by the fact that such restrictions were permitted by the Georgia trust statutes. Ante, at —, 24 L Ed 2d 634 at 641 = (AIR 1971 SC 11 at p. 15). On the contrary, the language of the Senator's will shows that the racial restrictions were solely the product of the testator's own fall-blown social philosophy. Similarly, the situation presented in this case is also easily distinguishable from that presented in Shelley v. Kraemer, (1948) 334 US 1 = 92 L Ed 1161 = 68 S Ct 836 = 3 ALR 2d 441, where we held unconstitutional state judicial action which had affirmatively enforced a private scheme of discrimination against Negroes. Here the effect of the Georgia decision eliminated all discrimination against Negroes in the park by eliminating the park itself, and the termination of the park was a loss shared equally by the white and Negro citizens of Macon since both races would have enjoyed a constitutional right of equal access to the park's facilities had it continued.

11. Petitioners also contend that since Senator Bacon did not expressly provide for a reverter in the event that the racial restrictions of the trust failed, no one can know with absolute certainty that the Senator would have preferred termination of the park rather than its integration, and the decision of the Georgia Court therefore involved a matter of choice. It might be difficult to argue with these assertions if they stood alone, but then petitioners conclude: "Its [the Court's] choice, the anti-Negro choice, violates the Fourteenth Amendment, whether it be called a 'guess,' an item in 'social philosophy,' or anything else at all." We do not understand petitioners to be contending here that the Georgia Judges were motivated either consciously or unconsciously by a desire to discriminate against Negroes. In any case, there is, as noted above, absolutely nothing before this Court to support a finding of such motivation. What remains of petitioners' argument is the idea that the Georgia Courts had a constitutional obligation in this case to resolve any doubt about the testator's intent in favour of preserving the trust. Thus stated, we see no merit in the argument. The only choice the Georgia Courts either had or exercised in this regard was their judicial judgment in construing Bacon's will to determine his intent, and the Constitution imposes no requirement upon the Georgia Court to approach Bacon's will any differently than it would approach any will creating any charitable trust of any kind. Surely the Fourteenth Amendment is not violated where, as here, a state court operating in its judicial capacity fairly applies its normal principles of construction to determine the testator's true intent in establishing a charitable trust and then reaches a conclusion with regard to that intent which, because of the operation of neutral and non-discriminatory state trust laws, effectively denies everyone whites as well as Negroes, the benefits of the trust.

12. Another argument made by petitioners is that the decision of the Georgia Court holding that the Baconsfield trust had "failed" must rest logically on the unspoken premise that the presence or proximity of Negroes in Baconsfield would destroy the desirability of the park for whites. This argument reflects a rather fundamental misunderstanding of Georgia law. The Baconsfield trust "failed" under that law not because of any belief on the part of any living person that whites and Negroes might not enjoy being together but, rather, because Senator Bacon who died many years ago intended that the park remain forever for the exclusive use of white people.

13. Petitioners also advance a number of considerations of public policy in opposition to the conclusion which we have reached. In particular, they regret, as we do, the loss of the Baconsfield trust to the City of Macon, and they are concerned lest we set a precedent under which other charitable trusts will be terminated. It bears repeating that our holding today reaffirms the traditional role of the States in determining whether or not to apply their cy pres doctrines to particular trusts. Nothing we have said here prevents a state Court from applying its cy pres rule in a case where the Georgia Court, for example, might not apply its rule. More fundamentally, however, the loss of charitable trusts such as Baconsfield is part of the price we pay for permitting deceased persons to exercise a continuing control over assets owned by them at death. This aspect of freedom of testation, like most things, has its advantages and disadvantages. The responsibility of this Court, however, is to construe and enforce the Constitution and laws of the land as they are and not to legislate social policy on the basis of our own personal inclinations.

14. In their lengthy and learned briefs, the petitioners and the Solicitor-General as amicus curiae have advanced several arguments which we have not here discussed. We have carefully examined each of these arguments, however, and find all to be without merit.

15. The judgment is Affirmed.

SEPARATE OPINIONS

MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS, dissenting.

16-17. Bacon's will did not leave any remainder or reversion in "Baconsfield" to his heirs. He left "all remainders and reversions and every estate in the same of whatsoever kind" to the City of Macon. He further provided that the property "under no circumstances, or by any authority whatsoever" should "be sold or alienated or disposed of, or at any time for any reason" be "devoted to any other purpose or use excepting so far as herein specifically authorized."

18. Giving the property to the heirs, rather than reserving it for some municipal use, does therefore as much violence to Bacon's purpose as would a conversion of an "all-white" park into an "all-Negro" park.

19. No municipal use is of course possible where the beneficiaries are members of one race only. That was true in 1911 when Bacon made his will. Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 US 537 = 41 L Ed 256 = 16 S Ct 1138, decided in 1896, had held that while "separate" facilities could be supplied to each race, those facilities had to be "equal". The concept of "equal" in this setting meant not just another park for Negroes but one equal in quality and service to that municipal facility which is furnished to the whites. See Sweatt v. Painter, 339 US 629, 633-634 = 94 L Ed 1114, 1118, 1119 = 70 S Ct 848. It is apparent that Bacon's will projected a municipal use which at the time was not constitutionally permissible unless like accommodations were made for the Negro race.

20. So far as this record reveals, the day the present park was opened to whites it may, constitutionally speaking, also have been available to Negroes.

21. The Supreme Court of Georgia stated that the sole purpose for which the trust was created had become impossible. But it was impossible in those absolute terms even under the regime of Plessy v. Ferguson. As to cy pres, the Georgia statute provides:

"When a valid charitable bequest is incapable for some reason of execution in the exact manner provided by the testator, donor, or founder, a court of equity will carry it into effect in such a way as will as nearly as possible effectuate his intention." Ga Code Ann S. 108-202 (1959).

22. The Georgia court held that the doctrine of cy pres "cannot be applied to establish a trust for an entirely different purpose from that intended by the testator." (1969) 224 Ga 826, 830 = 165 SE 2d 160, 164. That however does not state the issue realistically. No proposal to bar use of the park by whites has ever been made, except the reversion ordered to the heirs. Continuation of the use of the property as a municipal park or, for another municipal purpose carries out a larger share of Bacon's purpose than the complete destruction of such use by the decree we today affirm.

23. The purpose of the will was to dedicate the land for some municipal use. That is still possible. Whatever that use, Negroes will of course be admitted, for such is the constitutional command. But whites will also be admitted. Letting both races share the facility is closer to a realization of Bacon's desire than a complete destruction of the will and the abandonment of Bacon's desire that the property be used for some municipal purpose.

24. Bacon, in limiting the use of this park property "to white people", expressed the view that "in their social relations the two races (white and negro) should be forever separate and that they should not have pleasure or recreation grounds to be used or enjoyed, together and in common." Can we possibly say that test puts a curse on each and every municipal use — music festivals, medical clinics, hospitals?

25. Moreover, putting the property in the hands of the heirs will not necessarily achieve the racial segregation which Bacon desired. We deal with city real estate. If a theatre is erected, Negroes cannot be excluded. If a restaurant is opened, Negroes must be served. If office or housing structures are erected, Negro tenants must be eligible. If a church is erected, mixed marriage ceremonies may be performed. If a Court undertook to attach a racial use condition to the property once it became "private," that would be an unconstitutional covenant or condition.

26. Bacon's basic desire can be realized only by the repeal of the Fourteenth Amendment. So the fact is that in the vicissitudes of time there is no constitutional way to assure that this property will not serve the needs of Negroes.

27. The Georgia decision, which we today approve, can only be a gesture toward a state-sanctioned segregated way of life, now passe. It therefore should fail as the imposition of a penalty for obedience to a principle of national supremacy.

MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN, dissenting.

28. For almost half a century Bacon's field has been a public park. Senator Bacon's will provided that upon the death of the last survivor among his widow and two daughters title to Bacon's field would vest in the Mayor and Council of the City of Macon and their successors forever. Pursuant to the express provisions of the will, the Mayor and City Council appointed a Board of Managers to supervise the operation of the park, and from time to time these same public officials made appointments to fill vacancies on the Board. Senator Bacon also bequeathed to the city certain bonds which provided income used in the operation of the park.

29. The city acquired title to Bacon's field in 1920 by purchasing the interests of Senator Bacon's surviving daughter and another person who resided on the land. Some $46,000 of public money was spent over a number of years to pay the purchase price. From the outset and throughout the years the Mayor and City Council acted as trustees, Baconsfield was administered as a public park. T. Cleveland James, superintendent of city parks during this period testified that when he first worked at Baconsfield it was a "wilderness nothing there but just undergrowth everywhere, one road through there and that's all, one paved road." He said there were no park facilities at that time. In the 1930's Baconsfield was transformed into a modern recreational facility by employees of the Works Progress Administration, an agency of the Federal Government. WPA did so upon the city's representation that Baconsfield was a public park. WPA employed men daily for the better part of a year in the conversion of Baconsfield to a park. WPA and Mr. James and his staff cut underbrush, cleared paths, dug ponds, built bridges and benches, planted shrubbery, and, in Mr. James' words, "just made a general park out of it." Other capital improvements were made in later years with both federal and city money. The Board of Managers also spent funds to improve and maintain the park.

30. Although the Board of Managers supervised operations, general maintenance of Baconsfield was the responsibility of the city's superintendent of parks. Mr. James was asked whether he treated Baconsfield about the same as other city parks. He answered, "Yes, included in my appropriation." The extent of the city's services to Baconsfield is evident from the increase of several thousand dollars in the annual expenses incurred for maintenance by the Board of Managers after the Mayor and City Council withdrew as trustees in 1964.

31. The city officials withdrew after suit was brought in a Georgia court by individual members of the Board of Managers to compel the appointment of private trustees on the ground that the public officials could not enforce racial segregation of the park. The Georgia court appointed private trustees, apparently on the assumption that they would be free to enforce the racially restrictive provision in Senator Bacon's will. In (1966) 382 US 296 = 15 L Ed 2d 373 = 86 S Ct 486, we held that the park had acquired such unalterable indicia of a public facility that for the purposes of the Equal Protection Clause it remained "public" even after the city officials were replaced as trustees by a board of private citizens. Consequently, Senator Bacon's discriminatory purpose could not be enforced by anyone. This Court accordingly reversed the Georgia court's acceptance of the city officials' resignations and its appointment of private trustees. On remand the Georgia courts held that since Senator Bacon's desire to restrict the park to the white race could not be carried out, the trust failed and the property must revert to his heirs. The Court today holds that that result and the process by which it was reached do not constitute a denial of equal protection. I respectfully dissent.

32. No record could present a clearer case of the closing of a public facility for the sole reason that the public authority which owns and maintains it cannot keep it segregated. This is not a case where the reasons or motives for a particular action are arguably unclear, cf. Palmer v. Thompson, — F2d — (CA 5th Cir, 1969) (en banc), nor is it one where a discriminatory purpose is one among other reasons, cf. Johnson v. Branch, 364 F2d 177 (CA 4th Cir 1966), nor one where a discriminatory purpose can be found only by inference, cf. Gomillion v. Lightfoot, (1960) 364 US 339 = 5 L Ed 2d 110 = 81 S Ct 125. The reasoning of the Georgia Supreme Court is simply that Senator Bacon intended Baconsfield to be a segregated public park, and because it cannot be operated as a segregated public park any longer, Watson v. Memphis, (1963) 373 US 526 = 10 L Ed 2d 529 = 83 S Ct 1314; see Mayor & City Council of Baltimore v. Dawson, (1955) 350 US 877 = 100 L Ed 774 = 76 S Ct 133, the park must be closed down and Baconsfield must revert to Senator Bacon's heirs. This Court agrees that this "city park is (being) destroyed because the Constitution require(s) it to be integrated." No one has put forward any other reason why the park is reverting from the City of Macon to the heirs of Senator Bacon. It is therefore quite plain that but for the constitutional prohibition on the operation of segregated public parks, the City of Macon would continue to own and maintain Baconsfield.

33. I have no doubt that a public park may constitutionally be closed down because it is too expensive to run or has become superfluous, or for some other reason, strong or weak, or for no reason at all. But under the Equal Protection Clause a State may not close down a public facility solely to avoid its duty to desegregate that facility. In Griffin v. County School Board, (1964) 377 US 218, 231 = 12 L Ed 2d 256, 265 = 84 S Ct 1226, we said, "whatever nonracial grounds might support a State's allowing a county to abandon its public schools, the object must be a constitutional one, and grounds of race and opposition to desegregation do not qualify as constitutional." In this context what is true of public schools is true of public parks. When it is as starkly clear as it is in this case that a public facility would remain open but for the constitutional command that it be operated on a non-segregated basis, the closing of that facility conveys an unambiguous message of community involvement in racial discrimination. Its closing for the sole and unmistakable purpose of avoiding desegregation, like its operation as a segregated park, "generates (in Negroes) a feeling of inferiority as to their status in the community that may affect their hearts and minds in a way unlikely ever to be undone." Brown v. Board of Education, (1954) 347 US 483, 494 = 98 L Ed 873, 880 = 74 S Ct 686 = 38 ALR 2d 1180. It is no answer that continuing operation as a segregated facility is a constant reminder of a public policy which stigmatizes one race, whereas its closing occurs once and is over. That difference does not provide a constitutional distinction. State involvement in discrimination is unconstitutional, however short-lived.

34. The Court, however, affirms the judgment of the Georgia Supreme Court on the ground that the closing of Baconsfield did not involve state action. The Court concedes that the closing of the park by the city "solely to avoid the effect of a prior Court order directing that the park be integrated" would be unconstitutional. However, the Court finds that in this case it is not the State or city but "a private party which is injecting the racially discriminatory motivation," supra, p —, (1969) 24 L Ed 2d 634 at p. 644 = (AIR 1971 USSC 11 at p. 16). The exculpation of the State and city from responsibility for the closing of the park is simply indefensible on this record. This discriminatory closing is permeated with state action: at the time Senator Bacon wrote his will Georgia statutes expressly authorized and supported the precise kind of discrimination provided for by him; in accepting title to the park, public officials of the City of Macon entered into an arrangement vesting in private persons the power to enforce a reversion if the city should ever incur a constitutional obligation to desegregate the park; it is a public park that is being closed for a discriminatory reason after having been operated for nearly half a century as a segregated public facility; and it is a state Court which is enforcing the racial restriction which keeps apparently willing parties of different races from coming together in the park. That is state action in overwhelming abundance. I need emphasize only three elements of the state action present here.

35. First, there is state action whenever a State enters into an arrangement which creates a private right to compel or enforce the reversion of a public facility. Whether the right is a possibility of reverter, a right of entry, an executory interest, or a contractual right, it can be created only with the consent of a public body or official, for example the official action involved in Macon's acceptance of the gift of Baconsfield. The State's involvement in the creation of such a right is also involvement in its enforcement; the State's assent to the creation of the right necessarily contemplates that the State will enforce the right if called upon to do so. Where, as in this case, the State's enforcement role conflicts with its obligation to comply with the constitutional command against racial segregation the attempted enforcement must be declared repugnant to the Fourteenth Amendment.

36. Moreover, a State cannot divest itself by contract of the power to perform essential government functions. e.g., Contributors to the Pennsylvania Hospital v. City of Philadelphia, (1917) 245 US 20 = 62 L Ed 124 = 38 S Ct 35; Stone v. Mississippi, (1880) 101 US 814 = 25 L Ed 1079. Thus a State cannot bind itself not to operate a public park in accordance with the Equal Protection Clause, upon pain of forfeiture of the park. The decision whether or not a public facility shall be operated in compliance with the Constitution is an essential governmental decision. An arrangement which purports to prevent a State from complying with the Constitution cannot be carried out, Evans v. Newton, supra; see Pennsylvania v. Board of Directors, (1957) 353 US 230 = 1 L Ed 2d 792 = 77 S Ct 806. Nor can it be enforced by a reversion; a racial restriction is simply invalid when intended to bind a public body and cannot be given any effect whatever, cf. Pennsylvania v. Brown, 392 F2d 120 (CA 3d Cir).

37. Initially the City of Macon was willing to comply with its constitutional obligation to desegregate Baconsfield. For a time the city allowed Negroes to use the park, "taking the position that the park was a public facility which it could not constitutionally manage on a segregated basis." Supra, (1966) 382 US 296 at 297 = 15 L Ed 2d 373 at 376. But the Mayor and Council reneged on their constitutional duty when the present litigation began, and instead of keeping Baconsfield desegregated they sought to sever the city's connection with it by resigning as trustees and telling Superintendent James to stop maintaining the park. The resolution of the Mayor and Council upon their resignation as trustees makes it very clear that the probability of a reversion had induced them to abandon desegregation. Private interests of the sort asserted by the respondents here cannot constitutionally be allowed to control the conduct of public affairs in that manner.

38. A finding of discriminatory state action is required here on a second ground. (1948) 334 US 1 = 92 L Ed 1161 = 68 S Ct 836 = 3 ALR 2d 441, stands at least for the proposition that where parties of different races are willing to deal with one another a state Court cannot keep them from doing so by enforcing a privately authored racial restriction. See also Sweet Briar In- stitute v. Button, 280 F Supp 312 (DC WD Va 1967) (state attorney general enjoined from enforcing privately authored racial restriction). Nothing in the record suggests that after our decision in Evans v. Newton, supra, the City of Macon retracted its previous willingness to manage Baconsfield on a nonsegregated basis or that the white beneficiaries of Senator Bacon's generosity were unwilling to share it with Negroes, rather than have the park revert to his heirs. Indeed, although it may be that the city would have preferred to keep the park segregated, the record suggests that, given the impossibility of that goal, the city wanted to keep the park open. The resolution by which the Mayor and Council resigned as trustees prior to the decision in Evans v. Newton, supra, reflected not opposition to the admission of Negroes into the park, but a fear that if Negroes were admitted the park would be lost to the city. The Mayor and Council did not participate in this litigation after the decision in Evans v. Newton. However, the Attorney General of Georgia was made a party after remand from this Court, and, acting "as parens patriae in all legal matters pertaining to the administration and disposition of charitable trusts in the State of Georgia in which the rights of beneficiaries are involved," he opposed a reversion to the heirs and argued that Baconsfield should be maintained "as a park for all the citizens of the State of Georgia." Thus, so far as the record shows, this is a case of a state Court's enforcement of a racial restriction to prevent willing parties from dealing with one another. The decision of the Georgia Courts thus, under (1948) 334 US 1 = 92 L Ed 1161 = 68 S Ct 836, constitutes state action denying equal protection.

39. Finally, a finding of discriminatory state action is required on a third ground. In Reitman v. Mulkey, (1967) 387 US 369 = 18 L Ed 2d 830 = 87 S Ct 1627, this Court announced the basic principle that a State acts in violation of the Equal Protection Clause when it singles out racial discrimination for particular encouragement, and thereby gives it a special preferred status in the law, even though the State does not itself impose or compel segregation. This approach to the analysis of state action was foreshadowed in Mr. Justice White's concurring opinion in Evans v. Newton, supra. There Mr. Justice White comprehensively reviewed the law of trusts as that law stood in Georgia in 1905, prior to the enactment of Ss. 69-504 and 69-505 of the Georgia Code. He concluded that prior to the enactment of those statutes "it would have been extremely doubtful" whether Georgia law authorized "a trust for park purposes when a portion of the public was to be excluded from the park." (1966) 382 US 296 at 310 = 15 L Ed 2d 373 at 383. Sections 69-504 and 69-505 removed this doubt by expressly permitting dedication of land to the public for use as a park, open to one race only. Thereby Georgia undertook to facilitate racial restrictions as distinguished from all other kinds of restriction on access to a public park. Reitman compels the conclusion that in doing so Georgia violated the Equal Protection Clause.

40. In 1911, only six years after the enactment of Ss. 69-504 and 69-505, Senator Bacon, a lawyer, wrote his will. When he wrote the provision creating Baconsfield as a public park open only to the white race, he was not merely expressing his own testamentary intent, but was taking advantage of the special power Georgia had conferred by Ss. 69-504 and 69-505 on testators seeking to establish racially segregated public parks. As Mr. Justice White concluded in Evans v. Newton, "the State through its regulations has become involved to such a significant extent in bringing about the discriminatory provision in Senator Bacon's trust that the racial restriction 'must be held to reflect . . . state policy and therefore to violate the Fourteenth Amendment.'" (1966) 382 US 296 at 311 = 15 L Ed 2d 373 at 384. This state-encouraged testamentary provision is the sole basis for the Georgia court's holding that Baconsfield must revert to Senator Bacon's heirs. The Court's finding that it is not the State of Georgia but "a private party which is injecting the racially discriminatory motivation" inexcusably disregards the State's role in enacting the statute without which Senator Bacon could not have written the discriminatory provision.

41. This then is not a case of private discrimination. It is rather discrimination in which the State of Georgia is "significantly involved", and enforcement of the reverter is therefore unconstitutional. Cf. Burton v. Wilmington Parking Authority, (1961) 365 US 715 = 6 L Ed 2d 45 = 81 S Ct 856; Robinson v. Florida, (1964) 378 US 153 = 12 L Ed 2d 771 = 84 S Ct 1693.

42. I would reverse the judgment of the Supreme Court of Georgia.

compensation" — Meaning of — Means full monetary equivalent of the property taken.

"Just compensation" means the full monetary equivalent of the property taken. The owner is to be put in the same position monetarily as he would have occupied if his property had not been taken. The "market value" of property condemned can be affected, adversely or favourably, by the imminence of the very public project that makes the condemnation necessary. To permit compensation to be either reduced or increased because of an alteration in market value attributable to the project itself would not lead to the "just compensation" that the Constitution requires. On the other hand, the development of a public project may also lead to enhancement in the market value of neighbouring land that is not covered by the project itself. And if that land is later condemned, whether for an extension of the existing project or for some other public purpose, the general rule of just compensation requires that such enhancement in value be wholly taken into account, since fair market value is generally to be determined with due consideration of all available economic uses of the property at the time of the taking.

If farm land taken for recreational facilities as part of a federal reservoir project is within the original scope of the project, then its compensable value is to be measured in terms of agricultural use. If, on the other hand, the acreage is outside the original scope of the project, its compensable value is properly measurable in terms of its economic potential as lakeside residential or recreational property. SUMMARY

The United States brought suit in the United States District Court for the Western District of Kentucky to condemn more than 250 acres of the respondents' land for a reservoir project. A jury awarded the respondents $20,000 as just compensation for all the land taken. Although the Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit reversed on another ground (404 F2d 303), the trial and appellate courts were in agreement in rejecting the government's contention that the trial judge, rather than the jury, should have decided whether, for purposes of determining just compensation, 78 of the 250 acres, taken for construction of recreation facilities adjacent to the reservoir, had been probably within the original scope of the project.

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court vacated the judgment of the Court of Appeals and remanded the case to the District Court. In an opinion by Stewart, J., expressing the view of six members of the court, it was held that under Rule 71A (h) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, which provides (with certain exceptions) that any party to a federal eminent domain proceeding "may have a trial by jury of the issue of just compensation," it was for the trial judge and not the jury to decide whether the condemned property was probably within the project's original scope.

DOUGLAS, J., joined by BLACK, J., dissented, saying that there was no reason why the jury, chosen by Congress to decide the final issue of "just compensation," should be denied the power to determine the subordinate issues of fact upon which the jury's final verdict must rest.

OPINION OF THE COURT

Mr. JUSTICE STEWART delivered the opinion of the Court.

The United States brought this suit in the Western District of Kentucky to condemn more than 250 acres of the respondents' land for a federal development known as the Nolin Reservoir Project located in that State. An important issue in the case was raised by the respondents' claim that 78 acres of the land, taken for construction of recreational facilities adjacent to the reservoir, had not been within the original scope of the project. (i) A jury awarded the respondents $20,000 as just compensation for all the land taken. Upon an appeal by the respondents, the Court of Appeals for the Sixth

(i) Congress authorized the Nolin Reservoir Project in 1938 as part of a comprehensive flood control plan for the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers. See Act of June 28, 1938, § 4, 52 Stat 1217. Congress first appropriated funds for the planning stage of the project in 1956. See Public Works Appropriation Act of 1957, 70 Stat 479-480. In July 1958 the Chief of Army Engineers approved a general design memorandum contemplating the construction of recreational areas in connection with the project, but evidently not specifying where they would be. The first funds for construction were appropriated in 1958. See Public Works Appropriation Act of 1959, 72 Stat 1573. Construction began in January 1959.

Circuit reversed the judgment and ordered a new trial, finding that the District Judge in his instructions to the jury had erroneously referred to matters disclosed outside the jury's presence.(ii) The trial and appellate courts were in agreement, however, in rejecting the Government's contention that the "scope of the project" issue was for the trial judge to decide and should not, therefore, have been submitted to the jury at all. There being a conflict between the circuits on this question,(iii) we granted certiorari to consider a recurring problem of importance in federal condemnation proceedings. (1969) 396 US 814 = 24 L Ed 2d 66 = 90 S Ct 54.

2. The Fifth Amendment provides that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation. And "just compensation" means the full monetary equivalent of the property taken.(iv) The owner is to be put in the same position monetarily as he would have occupied if his property had not been taken.(v) In enforcing the constitutional mandate, the Court at an early date adopted the concept of market value: the owner is entitled to the fair market value of the property(vi) at the time of

Most of the respondents' acreage condemned by the Government was taken because it would be inundated by the reservoir, and there is no question that this land was within the original scope of the project. But 78 acres of the tract were taken for the construction of recreational facilities adjacent to the reservoir itself. These 78 acres were not referred to in a design memorandum submitted in June 1959. They were, however, designated for taking in a memorandum approved in October of that year. It has been Government policy to build recreational areas in conjunction with federal reservoir projects since 1944. Act of December 22, 1944, § 4, 58 Stat 889.

(iii) The Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit has held that the "scope of the project" issue is to be determined by the trial judge. Wardy v. United States, 402 F2d 762, 763.

the taking.(vii) But this basic measurement of compensation has been hedged with certain refinements developed over the years in the interest of effectuating the constitutional guarantee. It is one of these refinements that is in controversy here.

3. The Court early recognized that the "market value" of property condemned can be affected, adversely or favourably, by the imminence of the very public project that makes the condemnation necessary.(viii) And it was perceived that to permit compensation to be either reduced or increased because of an alteration in market value attributable to the project itself would not lead to the "just compensation" that the Constitution requires.(ix) On the other hand, the development of a public project may also lead to enhancement in the market value of neighboring land that is not covered by the project itself. And if that land is later condemned, whether for an extension of the existing project or for some other public purpose, the general rule of just compensation requires that such enhancement in value be wholly taken into account, since fair market value is generally to be determined with due consideration of all available economic uses of the property at the time of the taking.(x)

4. In United States v. Miller, 317 US 369, 87 L Ed 336, 63 S Ct 276, 147 ALR 55, the Court gave full articulation to these principles:

"If a distinct tract is condemned, in whole or in part, other lands in the neighborhood may increase in market value due to the proximity of the public improvement erected on the land taken. Should the Government, at a later date, determine to take these other lands, it must pay their market value as enhanced by this factor of proximity. If, however, the public project from the beginning included the taking of certain tracts but only one of them is taken in the first instance, the owner of the other tracts should not be allowed an increased value for his lands which are ultimately to be taken any more than the owner of the tract first condemned is entitled to be allowed an increased market value because adjacent lands not immediately taken increased in value due to the projected improvement.

"The question then is whether the respondents' lands were probably within the scope of the project from the time the Government was committed to it. If they were not, but were merely adjacent lands, the subsequent enlargement of the project to include them ought not to deprive the respondents of the value added in the meantime by the proximity of the improvement. If, on the other hand, they were, the Government ought not to pay any increase in value arising from the known fact that the lands probably would be condemned. The owners ought not to gain by speculating on probable increase in value due to the Government's activities." (1942) 317 US 369, at Pp. 376-377 = 87 L Ed 336 at p. 344.

5. There is no controversy in the present case regarding these basic principles. The parties agree that if the acreage in issue "was probably within the scope of the project from the time the Government was committed to it," substantially less compensation is due than if it was not. For if the property was probably within the project's original scope, then its compensable value is to be measured in terms of agricultural use. If, on the other hand, the acreage was outside the original scope of the project, its compensable value is properly measurable in terms of its economic potential as lakeside residential or recreational property.

6. The issue between the parties is simply whether the "scope of the project" question is to be determined by the trial judge or by the jury. There is no claim that the issue is of constitutional dimensions. For it has long been settled that there is no constitutional right to a jury in eminent domain proceedings. See Bauman v. Ross, (1897) 167 US 548, 593 = 42 L Ed 270, 289 = 17 S Ct 966. As Professor Moore has put the matter:

"The practice in England and in the colonies prior to the adoption in 1791 of the Seventh Amendment, the position taken by Congress contemporaneously with, and subsequent to, the adoption of the Amendment, and the position taken by the Supreme Court and nearly all of the lower federal courts lead to the conclusion that there is no constitutional right to jury trial in the federal courts in an action for the condemnation of property under the power of eminent domain."(xi)

7. It is not, therefore, to the Seventh Amendment that we look in this case, but to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Rule 71A (h) provides that, except in circumstances not applicable here, "any party" to a federal eminent domain proceeding "may have a trial by jury of the issue of just compensation," unless the court in its discretion orders that that issue "shall be determined by a commission of three persons appointed by it. . . . Trial of all issues shall otherwise be by the court."(xii) The Rule thus provides that, except for the single issue of just compensation, the trial judge is to decide all issues, legal and factual, that may be presented. The critical inquiry is thus whether "the issue of just compensation," as that phrase is used in the Rule, is broad enough to embrace the question whether the condemned property was probably within the scope of the federal project.(xiii)

(xi) 5 Moore's Federal Practice Para 38.32 [1], at 239 (2d ed. 1969). (Footnote omitted.)

(xii) The full text of Rule 71A (h) is as follows:

"If the action involves the exercise of the power of eminent domain under the law of the United States, any tribunal specially constituted by an Act of Congress governing the case for the trial of the issue of just compensation shall be the tribunal for the determination of that issue; but if there is no such specially constituted tribunal any party may have a trial by jury of the issue of just compensation by filing a demand therefor within the time allowed for answer or within such further time as the court may fix, unless the court in its discretion orders that, because of the character, location, or quantity of the property to be condemned, or for other reasons in the interest of justice, the issue of compensation shall be determined by a commission of three persons appointed by it. If a commission is appointed it shall have the powers of a master provided in subdivision (c) of Rule 53 and proceedings before it shall be governed by the provisions of paragraphs (1) and (2) of subdivision (d) of Rule 53. Its action and report shall be determined by a majority and its findings and report shall have the effect, and be dealt with by the court in accordance with the practice, prescribed in paragraph (2) of subdivision (e) of Rule 53. Trial of all issues shall otherwise be by the court."

(xiii) In United States v. Miller, supra, it appears that that question was decided by the trial judge, who excluded all evidence of enhanced value attributable to the project. 317 US, at 372-373, 87 L Ed at 341, 342. While this Court's opinion in Miller approved of that procedure, it is to be remembered that the case was decided before the adoption of Rule 71A (h) in 1951, at a time when federal courts in condemnation proceedings followed the procedures of the States in which they

8. Although the matter could be decided either way without doing violence to the language of Rule 71A (h), we think the Rule's basic structure makes clear that a jury in federal condemnation proceedings is to be confined to the performance of a single narrow but important function—the determination of a compensation award within ground rules established by the trial judge. The Rule gives the trial court discretion to eliminate a jury entirely. And when a jury is afforded, the sweeping language of the final sentence of the Rule discloses a clear intent to give the district judge a role in condemnation proceedings much broader than he occupies in a conventional jury trial. It is for him to decide "all issues" other than the precise issue of the amount of compensation to be awarded. It follows that it is for the judge to tell the jury the criteria it must follow in determining what amount will constitute just compensation, and that in order to do so he must decide the "scope of the project" issue as a preliminary matter. We therefore approve and adopt the procedural rule announced by the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit in Wardy v. United States, 402 F2d 762, and hold that it is for the judge and not the jury to decide whether the property condemned was probably within the project's original scope.(xiv)

9. Finally, the Government asks us to take this occasion to "clarify" the "scope of the project" test. We think the test was stated with admirable clarity by a unanimous Court in Miller: if the "lands were probably within the scope of the project from the time the Government was committed to it," no enhancement in value attributable to the project is to be considered in awarding compensation. As with any test that deals in were located. See Advisory Committee Notes to Rule 71A; 7 Moore, supra, Para 71A.03, at 2716.

(xiv) "The question was whether appellants' lands were probably within the scope of the project from the time the Government was committed to it." . . . Appellants contend that the jury should have been allowed to answer this question. Under Rule 71A (h) the jury's function is limited to determining 'just compensation.' It is the duty of the court to decide the legal issues, as well as all other fact issues. [Citations omitted.] Thus instead of infringing on the jury's functions, the judge merely decided a legal question which limited the factors necessary to the determination of 'just compensation.'" Wardy v. United States, 402 F2d, at 763. See also Scott Lumber Co. v. United States, 390 F2d 388, 392 (CA9th Cir.); United States v. 91.69 Acres of Land, 334 F2d 229, 231-232 (CA4th Cir.).

probabilities, its application to any particular set of facts requires discriminating judgment.(xv) The rule does not require a showing that the land ultimately taken was actually specified in the original plans for the project. It need only be shown that during the course of the planning or original construction it became evident that land so situated would probably be needed for the public use.

10. The judgment of the Court of Appeals is vacated, and the case is remanded to the United States District Court for the Western District of Kentucky for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

11. It is so ordered.

SEPARATE OPINION

Mr. JUSTICE DOUGLAS, with whom Mr. JUSTICE BLACK concurs, dissenting.

12. All constitutional questions aside, there was in the present case a right to trial by jury on "the issue of just compensation" as provided in Rule 71A (h). I do not see how "the issue of just compensation" can be decided without considering whether or not the property was probably within or not within the project's original scope. As the opinion of the Court makes plain, important questions of value turn on that decision. In this case it is seen in the difference between the value of the property as agricultural land and its value as potential lakeside residential or recreational property.

13. If it were certain beyond doubt that the property was within the original scope of the project, a different question might be presented. But there is nothing in this record to show that respondent's property was included in the original design. We deal here with probabilities or perhaps with possibilities. If the property were not within the original design, a purchaser could reasonably anticipate that he would be able to devote the land to its highest economic use reflected in part by its proximity to the Government's project. Henry George(i) would have it otherwise; but that has not been the direction of our economy. Hence what we are talking about is market value and that in turn includes all of the ingredients that make up price. The most central element of price in the area now litigated was the relation of the land to the original project and that issue was one of fact. The "issue of just compensation"(ii) as used in Rule 71A (h) truly cannot be resolved without considering that question.

14. There seems to be no reason why the jury chosen by Congress to decide the final issue of "just compensation" should be denied the power to determine the subordinate issues of fact upon which the jury's final verdict must rest.

15. There are powerful forces loose in this country that deprecate the use of juries. The Department of Justice and other federal agencies(iii) often seem to dislike juries in condemnation cases. In my Circuit, juries have unexpectedly risen up in favor of homeowners and against Washington, D. C., and granted "just compensation" in large sums, in retaliation, it is believed, against hardnose officials who, with all the power of the Central Government, seek to plow them under. At other times the jury has acted

(ii) In United States v. Certain Lands, 144 F Supp 206, a road was taken and the question of "just compensation" turned on whether the construction of a substitute facility was necessary. The court held that that issue of necessity was properly left to the jury:

"In the average condemnation proceeding, many factors must be considered in arriving at just compensation, factors which are only established and available after the exercise of a fact-finding process. There appears to be no reason for introducing a trial by jury into condemnation proceedings unless the jury's province is broad enough to include the weighing of evidence which directly relates to the issue of compensation. It would seem that in this case the determination as to whether any substitute facilities are required at all is indeed a part of the 'issue of just compensation,' one of the factors to be taken into account by the jury in reaching its verdict." Id., at 214.

(iii) The present Rule 71A, which in absence of an Act of Congress gives the courts discretion to have the issue of compensation decided by a commission of three, was inspired by the Act governing condemnations by the TVA. See Notes of Advisory Committee, 28 USC, following Rule 71A. But that Act was amended in 1967. See 16 USC S. 831X (Supp. IV). Under the amendment either party has on demand "an absolute right to a trial by jury." S. Rep. No. 930, 90th Cong., 1st Sess., 2. "Proponents of the legislation indicated that no landowner should be denied his basic right to a trial by jury involving the condemnation of his property. In addition, it was indicated that the absence of a right to a jury trial had generated friction between TVA and landowners which was seriously affecting the public relations of that agency." Ibid.

differently and cut down the award.(iv) Juries in these condemnation cases perform, in other words, an historic restraint on both executive and judicial power. See Bushell's case. 6 How St Tr 999, decided in 1670.

The President and Vice-President and the Corporation were subsequently prosecuted for the violations of the provisions of the F.D.C. Act and convicted.

Held that the use of the evidence obtained through the interrogatories by the Government against the President and the Vice-President of the Corporation in the Criminal proceedings did not violate their Fifth Amendment privilege since they never asserted such a claim though they were notified of the contemplated Criminal proceedings and the Government's use of the interrogatories did not show any unfairness or want of consideration for justice so as to violate due process or constitute a departure from proper standards in the administration of justice.

SUMMARY

Upon trial in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan, the respondents, who were the president and the vice-president of a corporation, were convicted, along with the corporation, for violations of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act. Prior to the criminal prosecution, the Government had instituted civil condemnation proceedings under the Act and had served interrogatories on the corporation to obtain evidence as to certain of its products. Upon being notified by the Food and Drug Administration that criminal proceedings were contemplated against the corporation and its officers, the corporation sought to stay the civil action, or extend the time for answering the interrogatories until after disposition of any criminal proceedings, on the ground that otherwise the Government would improperly obtain evidence for the criminal prosecution by the use of civil discovery proceedings, no claim of the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination having been asserted with respect to the corporate officers, however. The corporation's motion was denied, and the corporation's vice-president then answered the interrogatories without asserting his Fifth Amendment privilege. In the subsequent criminal prosecution, which was based on an indictment returned after settlement of the civil case, the District Court denied the respondents' pretrial motion to suppress evidence obtained through the interrogatories, holding that the record showed that the Government had not acted in bad faith in filing the interrogatories. On appeal, the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit reversed the convictions of the corporate officers, on the ground that the Government's use of interrogatories to obtain evidence in the nearly contemporaneous civil condemnation proceedings violated the corporate officers' Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination (407 F2d 570).

On certiorari, the Supreme Court of the United States reversed the judgment of the Court of Appeals, and remanded the case. In an opinion by Stewart, J., expressing the unanimous view of the court, it was held that (1) the record supported the District Court's finding that the Government had not acted in bad faith in filing the interrogatories in the civil action, (2) the Government's use in the criminal prosecution of evidence obtained through the interrogatories did not violate the corporate officers' Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination, since the officers had been notified of contemplated criminal proceedings, but no assertion of the Fifth Amendment privilege had been made either by the vice-president, who was represented by counsel and who answered the interrogatories, or by the president, or by anyone associated with the corporation, and (3) the Government's use of the interrogatories under the circumstances of the case, did not reflect such unfairness or want of consideration for justice as to violate due process or constitute a departure from proper standards in the administration of justice so as to require the exercise of the Supreme Court's supervisory power.

OPINION OF THE COURT

Mr. JUSTICE STEWART delivered the opinion of the Court.

The respondents are the president and vice-president, respectively, of Detroit Vital Foods, Inc. They were convicted in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan, along with the corporation, for violations of the Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act. (i) The Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit reversed the respondents' convictions on the ground that the Government's use of interrogatories to obtain evidence from the respondents in a nearly contemporaneous civil condemnation proceeding operated to violate their Fifth Amendment privilege against compulsory self-incrimination. (ii) We granted certi-orari to consider the questions raised by the Government's invocation of simultaneous civil and criminal proceedings in the enforcement of federal law.(iii)

2. In March 1960 the Division of Regulatory Management of the Food and Drug Administration (hereafter "FDA") instructed the agency's Detroit office to investigate the respondents' possible violations of the Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act. Within a month the Detroit office recommended to the Division a civil seizure of two of the respondents' products, "Korleen" and "Frutex"; within another month the Division similarly recommended seizure to the FDA's General Counsel. On June 6, 1960, the General Counsel requested the United States Attorney for the Eastern District of Michigan to commence an in rem action against these products of the corporation, and the United States Attorney filed a libel three days later. The corporation, appearing as the claimant, answered the libel on September 12, 1960. An FDA official in the Division of Regulatory Management then prepared extensive interrogatories to be served on the corporation in this civil action. The United States Attorney filed the agency's interrogatories on January 6, 1961, pursuant to Rule 33 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.(iv)

3. After the Division official had drafted the interrogatories, he recommended that pursuant to S. 305 of the Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act the FDA serve upon the corporation and the respondents a notice that the agency contemplated a criminal proceeding against them with respect to the transactions that were the subject of the civil action.(v) On January 9, 1961, three days after the filing of the interrogatories in the civil action, the Detroit office received an instruction from the Division to serve the statutory notice. The Detroit office com-

(iv) R. 33 provides in pertinent part: "Any party may serve upon any adverse party written interrogatories to be answered by the party served or, if the party served is a public or private corporation or a partnership or association, by any officer or agent, who shall furnish such information as is available to the party."

(v) Section 305 of the Act, 21 USC § 335, provides,

"Before any violation of [the Act] . . . is reported by the Secretary [of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare] to any United States attorney for institution of a criminal proceeding, the person against whom such proceeding is contemplated shall be given appropriate notice and an opportunity to present his plied 10 days later, and on March 8, 1961, the agency held a hearing on the notice.

4. On April 10, the corporation, having received the FDA's interrogatories but not yet having answered them, moved to stay further proceedings in the civil action or, in the alternative, to extend the time to answer the interrogatories until after disposition of the criminal proceeding signaled by the § 305 notice. The motion was accompanied by the affidavit of counsel. The moving papers urged the District Court to act under Rule 33 "in the interest of substantial justice" and as a "balancing of hardship and equities of the respective parties . . ." Permitting the Government to obtain proof of violations of the Act by resort to civil discovery procedures, the movant urged, would be "improper" and would "work a grave injustice against the claimant"; it would also enable the Government to have pretrial discovery of the respondents' defenses to future criminal charges. Counsel expressly disavowed any "issue of a self-incrimination privilege in favour of the claimant corporation." And nowhere in the moving papers did counsel raise a claim of the Fifth Amendment privilege against compulsory self-incrimination with respect to the respondents.

5. On June 21, 1961, the District Court denied the motion upon finding that the corporation had failed to demonstrate that substantial prejudice and harm would result from being required to respond to the interrogatories. The court reasoned that the § 305 notice did not conclusively indicate the Government would institute a criminal proceeding, that six to 12 months could elapse from the service of the statutory notice to initiation of a criminal prosecution, and that the Government could obtain data for a prosecution from the testimony in the civil action or by subpoenaing the books and records of the corporation. Accordingly, the court concluded, the interests of justice did not require that the Government be denied the information it wanted simply because it had sought it by way of civil-discovery procedures. On September 5, 1961, in compliance with the court's directive, the corporation, through the respondent Feldten, answered the Government's interrogatories.

views, either orally or in writing, with regard to such contemplated proceeding." Service of the statutory notice did not necessarily mean that a criminal prosecution would follow; the testimony before the District Court on the respondents' pretrial motion to suppress evidence indicated that fewer than 10% of the matters involving a § 305 notice reach the stage of either indictment or information.

6. On July 28, 1961, five weeks after the District Court's order but more than a month before receipt of the answers to the interrogatories, the Director of the FDA's Detroit office recommended a criminal prosecution to the Division. The Division forwarded the recommendation to the General Counsel on August 31, 1961, still prior to receipt of Feldten's answers. While the matter was pending in the General Counsel's office, the Division officer who had originally drafted the proposed interrogatories recommended that additional violations of the statute be alleged in the indictment. On June 13, 1962, the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare requested the Department of Justice to institute a criminal proceeding, and about two months after that the latter department instructed the United States Attorney in Detroit to seek an indictment. The civil case, still pending in the District Court, proceeded to settlement by way of a consent decree in November 1962, and eight months later the Government obtained the indictment underlying the present judgments of conviction.

I

7. At the outset, we assume that the information Feldten supplied the Government in his answers to the interrogatories, if not necessary to the proof of the Government's case in the criminal prosecution, as the Court of Appeals thought, at least provided evidence or leads useful to the Government.(vi) However, the record amply supports the express finding of the District Judge who presided at the criminal trial, and who held an extensive evidentiary hearing on the respondents' pretrial motion to suppress evidence, that the Government did not act in bad faith in filing the interrogatories. Rather, the testimony before the trial court demonstrated that the Division of Regulatory Management regularly prepares such interrogatories upon the receipt of claimants' answers to civil libels, and files them in over three-fourths of such cases, to hasten their disposition by securing admissions and laying the foundation for summary judgments.

8. The Court of Appeals thought the answers to the interrogatories were involuntarily given. The District Judge's order denying the corporation's motion to defer the answers to the interrogatories, reasoned the court, left the respondents with three choices: they could have refused to answer, thereby forfeiting the corporation's property that was the subject of the libel; they could have given false answers to the interrogatories, thereby subjecting themselves to the risk of a prosecution for perjury; or they could have done just what they did—disclose the requested information, thereby supplying the Government with evidence and leads helpful in securing their indictment and conviction.(vii)

9. In this analysis we think the Court of Appeals erred. For Feldten need not have answered the interrogatories. Without question he could have invoked his Fifth Amendment privilege against compulsory self-incrimination.(viii) Surely Feldten was not barred from asserting his privilege simply because the corporation had no privilege of its own.(ix) nor because the proceeding in which the Government sought information was civil rather than criminal in character.(x)

10. To be sure, service of the interrogatories obliged the corporation to "appoint an agent who could, without fear of self-incrimination, furnish such requested information as was available to the corporation." (xi) The corporation could not satisfy its obligation under Rule 33 simply by pointing to an agent about to invoke his constitutional privilege. "It would indeed be incongruous to permit a corporation to select an individual to verify the corporation's answers, who because he fears self-incrimination may thus secure for the corporation the benefits of a privilege it does not have." (xii) Such a result would effectively permit the corporation to assert on its own behalf the personal privilege of its individual agents. (xiii)

11. The respondents press upon us the situation where no one can answer the interrogatories addressed to the corporation without subjecting himself to a "real and appreciable" risk of self-incrimination. (xiv) For present purposes we may assume that in such a case the appropriate remedy would be a protective order under Rule 30(b), postponing civil discovery until termination of the criminal action. (xv) But we need not decide this troublesome question. For the record before us makes clear that even though the respondents had the burden of showing that the Government's interrogatories were improper, (xvi) they never even asserted, let alone demonstrated, that there was no authorized person who could answer the interrogatories without the possibility of compulsory self-incrimination. (xvii) To the contrary, the record shows that nobody associated with the corporation asserted his privilege at all. The respondents do not suggest that Feldten, who answered the interrogatories on behalf of the corporation, did so while unrepresented by counsel or without appreciation of the possible consequences. His failure at any time to assert the constitutional privilege leaves him in no position to complain now that he was compelled to give testimony against himself. (xviii)

12. Kordel's claim of compulsory self-incrimination is even more tenuous than Feldten's. Not only did Kordel never assert the privilege; he never even answered any interrogatories. The Court of Appeals nevertheless reversed his conviction because it thought it "clear from the record that Detroit Vital Foods, Inc., was merely the corporate device through which Kordel sold his products. The Government naturally wanted to cut through the facade and get to Kordel who was the president and dominant persona-

183. The respondents, urging that the Government had the burden of establishing the availability of an agent to answer for the corporation, rely upon the decision of the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit in Communist Party v. United States, 118 US App DC 61, 331 F2d 807, cert. denied, 377 US 968, 12 L Ed 2d 737, 84 S Ct 1646. But there the court departed from the customary allocation of the burden on the ground that the mere act of volunteering the information sought, or even of showing that an effort had been made to find someone who would answer, was itself potentially incriminatory. Id., at 68-69, 331 F2d, at 814-815.

lity in the corporation.”(xix) We disagree. The Government brought its libel against the goods; the corporation, not Kordel, appeared as claimant. The Government subsequently prosecuted Kordel as an officer of the company. If anyone has sought to cut through the corporate facade so far as the Fifth Amendment privilege is concerned, it is Kordel: he has, in effect, attempted to fashion a self-incrimination claim by combining testimony that he never gave and an assertion of the privilege that he never made with another assertion of the privilege that his company never had.

13. The Court of Appeals thought that Kordel must go free in any event because the Government had used Feldten's admissions in proving its criminal case against both respondents, in violation of the rule in Bruton v. United States, xxx) This too was error. Feldten's admissions were never introduced in evidence at the trial, and thus Kordel cannot maintain that the reception in evidence of a co-defendant's inculpatory statements violated his Sixth Amendment right to confrontation.(xxi)

II

14. The respondents urge that even if the Government's conduct did not violate their Fifth Amendment privilege against compulsory self-incrimination, it nonetheless reflected such unfairness and want of consideration for justice as independently to require the reversal of their convictions. On the record before us, we cannot agree that the respondents have made out either a violation of due process or a departure from proper standards in the administration of justice requiring the exercise of our supervisory power. The public interest in protecting consumers throughout the Nation from misbranded drugs requires prompt action by the agency charged with responsibility for administration of the federal food and drug laws. But a rational decision whether to proceed criminally against those responsible for the misbranding may have to await consideration of a fuller record than that before the agency at the time of the civil seizure of the offending products. It would stultify enforcement of federal law to require a governmental agency such as the FDA invariably to choose either to forgo recommendation of a criminal prosecution once it seeks civil relief, or to defer civil proceedings pending the ultimate outcome of a criminal trial.(xxii)

15. We do not deal here with a case where the Government has brought a civil action solely to obtain evidence for its criminal prosecution (xxiii) or has failed to advise the defendant in its civil proceeding that it contemplates his criminal prosecution;(xxiv) nor with a case where the defendant is without counsel(xxv) or reasonably fears prejudice from adverse pretrial publicity or other unfair injury;(xxvi) nor with any other special circumstances that might suggest the unconstitutionality or even the impropriety of this criminal prosecution.(xxvii)

16. Overturning these convictions would be tantamount to the adoption of a rule that the Government's use of interrogatories directed against a corporate defendant in the ordinary course of a civil proceeding would always immunize the corporation's officers from subsequent criminal prosecution. The Court of Appeals was correct in stating that "the Government may not use evidence against a defendant in a criminal case which has been coerced from him under penalty of either giving the evidence or suffering a † Civil P. C. (1908), S. 9 — (Case from U. S. A.) Constitution of U. S. A., Art. 3 — Judicial review of administrative action adjudicating private rights — Review is the rule and non-reviewability exception—(Constitution of India, Article 226).

Preclusion of judicial review of administrative action adjudicating private rights is not lightly to be inferred. Indeed, judicial review of such administrative action is the rule and non-reviewability an exception which must be demonstrated. A clear command of the statute will preclude review; and such a command of the statute may be inferred from its purpose. It is however only upon a showing of clear and convincing evidence of a contrary legislative intent that the Courts should restrict access to judicial review. The right of judicial review is ordinarily inferred where congressional intent to protect the interests of the class of which the plaintiff is a member can be found; in such cases, unless members of the protected class may have judicial review the statutory objectives might not be realised. Case law discussed. (Para 11)

Harold Edgar, for Petitioners; pro hac vice, by special leave of court. Peter L. Strauss, for Respondents.

SUMMARY

Tenant farmers, who were eligible for payments under the Upland Cotton Program of the Food and Agriculture Act of 1965, instituted an action in the United States District Court for the Middle District of Alabama against various persons, including the Secretary of Agriculture, to challenge the validity of the Secretary's amended regulation which permitted participants in the cotton program to assign payments thereunder to secure the payment of cash rent for farmland, such amendment having changed former provisions of the regulation which had excluded such assignments from those permitted to finance "making a crop" within the meaning of S. 8(g) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act. The plaintiffs alleged that the amended regulation provided their landlord with the opportunity to demand assignment of cotton program benefits in advance as a condition to obtaining a lease, which resulted in the further need of the tenants, who lacked cash and credit prior to harvesting their crops, to finance all of their other farm needs with the landlord at high prices and interest rates, and which also resulted in the inability of the tenants to use advance subsidy payments to form co-operatives to buy supplies elsewhere. The District Court held that the plaintiffs lacked standing to maintain the action. The United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit affirmed, holding that the plaintiffs lacked standing not only because they failed to allege invasion of a legally protected interest, but also because there was no statutory provision expressly or impliedly giving the plaintiffs standing to challenge the administrative regulation or giving the courts authority to review such administrative action (398 F2d 398).

On certiorari, the Supreme Court of the United States vacated the lower courts' judgments, and remanded the case to the District Court. In an opinion by Douglas, J., expressing the view of six members of the court, it was held that (1) the plaintiffs had standing to challenge the validity of the Secretary's regulation, since they had the personal stake and interest that imparted the concrete adverseness required by Article 3 of the Constitution, their allegations demonstrating injury in fact from the operation of the regulation, and since they were clearly within the zone of interests protected by the statute, and (2) under provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act allowing judicial review of agency action except where statutes precluded such review or where agency action was committed to agency discretion by law, judicial review of the Secretary's regulation was not precluded.

Brennan, J., joined by White, J., concurred in the result in both the subject case and in Association of Data Processing Service Organizations, Inc. v. Camp, 1969-25 L Ed 2d 184, but dissented from the majority's treatment of the question of standing to challenge agency action, expressing the view that only the inquiry as to whether the plaintiff alleged injury in fact from the challenged action was needed to determine standing, and that the second inquiry as to whether the interest sought to be protected by the complainant was arguably within the zone of interests to be protected or regulated by the statute or constitutional guaranty involved was wholly unnecessary and inappropriate, tending to confuse the merits and reviewability of the claim with standing to challenge the action involved.

OPINION OF THE COURT

Mr. JUSTICE DOUGLAS delivered the opinion of the Court.

The question to be decided in this case is whether tenant farmers eligible for payments under the Upland Cotton Program enacted as part of the Food and Agriculture Act of 1965, 79 Stat 1194, 7 USC (Supp IV) S. 1444(d), have standing to challenge the validity of a certain amended regulation promulgated by the respondent Secretary of Agriculture in 1966.

2. The Upland Cotton Program incorporates a 1938 statute, S. 8(g) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, 52 Stat 35, 205, 16 USC S. 590h (g), thereby permitting participants in the program to assign payments only "as security for cash or advances to finance making a crop." (a) The regulation of the respondent Secretary of Agriculture in effect until 1966 defined "making a crop" to exclude assignments to secure "the payment of the whole or any part of a cash . . . rent for a farm." (1955) 20 Fed Reg 6512. (b) Following passage of the 1965 Act, however,

(a) The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized by 7 USC S. 1444 (d) (5) to pay a farmer in advance of the growing season up to 50% of the estimated benefits due him. Section 1444(d) (13) authorizes the farmer to assign such benefits subject to the limitations of S. 8(g) of the 1938 Act, 16 USC S. 590(g). Section 8(g) as enacted in 1938 and as it read in 1965 established an exception to the general prohibition against assignment of federal monies in the Anti-Assignment Act, 31 USC S. 203. Section 8(g) provided:

"A payment which may be made to a farmer under this section, may be assigned, without discount, by him in writing as security for cash or advances to finance making a crop. Such assignment shall be signed by the farmer and witnessed by a member of the county or other local committee . . . Such assignment shall include the statement that the assignment is not made to pay or secure any pre-existing indebtedness. This provision shall not authorize any suit against or impose any liability upon the Secretary . . . if payment to the farmer is made without regard to the existence of any such assignment." 52 Stat 35, 205 (1938), 16 USC S. 590h (g) (emphasis added).

Section 8(g) was amended by 80 Stat 1167 (1966) to permit assignments not only to finance "making a crop" but also to fund "handling or marketing an agricultural commodity, or performing a conservation practice."

(b) 20 Fed Reg 6512 (1955) provided:

"Payment may be assigned to finance making a crop. A payment which may be made to a farmer . . . under Section 8 of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, may be assigned only as security for cash or advances to finance making a crop for the current crop year. To finance making a crop means (a) to finance the planting, and before any payments were made under it, the Secretary deleted the exclusion and amended the regulation expressly to define "making a crop" to include assignments to secure "the payment of cash rent for land used [for planting, cultivating or harvesting]." (1966) 31 Fed Reg 2815.(c)

3. Petitioners, cash rent tenant farmers suing on behalf of themselves and other farmers similarly situated, filed this action in the District Court for the Middle District of Alabama. They sought a declaratory judgment that the amended regulation is invalid and unauthorized by statute, and an injunction prohibiting the respondent federal officials from permitting assignments pursuant to the amended regulation.(d) Their cultivating, or harvesting of a crop, including the purchase of equipment required therefor; (b) to provide food, clothing and other necessities required by the assignor or persons dependent upon the assignor; or (c) to finance the carrying out of soil or water conservation practices. Nothing contained herein shall be construed to authorize an assignment given to secure the payment of the whole or any part of the purchase price of a farm or the payment of the whole or any part of a cash or fixed commodity rent for a farm."

(c) 32 Fed Reg 14921 (1967), 7 CFR S. 709.3 (1969) now provides:

"Purposes for which a payment may be assigned.

"(a) A payment which may be made to a producer under any program to which this part is applicable may be assigned only as security for cash or advances to finance making a crop, handling or marketing an agricultural commodity, or performing a conservation practice, for the current crop year. No assignment may be made to secure or pay any pre-existing indebtedness of any nature whatsoever.

"(b) To finance making a crop means (1) to finance the planting, cultivating, or harvesting of a crop, including the purchase of equipment required therefor and the payment of cash rent for land used therefor, or (2) to provide food, clothing, and other necessities required by the producer or persons dependent upon him.

"(c) Nothing contained herein shall be construed to authorize an assignment given to secure the payment of the whole or any part of the purchase price of a farm or the payment of the whole or any part of a fixed commodity rent for a farm."

(d) The respondents, in addition to the Secretary of Agriculture, are the State Executive Director of the Agricultural and Conservation Service in Alabama, and the administrator of that Service in the U. S. Department of Agriculture. The complaint also included counts against petitioners' landlord alleging that he acted improperly to deprive them of their right to receive subsidy payments, and, further, that some of the petitioners had been illegally evicted because of their participation in litigation with respect to the cotton program, and, in the case of one petitioner, because of his candidacy for Alabama Agricultural and Conservation Service county committeeman. The District Court denied the landlord's motion to dismiss these counts and transferred them for trial to the Southern District of Alabama. That ruling is not before us.

complaint alleged that the petitioners are suffering irreparable injury under the amended regulation because it provides their landlord "with the opportunity to demand that [they] and all those similarly situated assign the [Upland Cotton Program] benefits in advance as a condition to obtaining a lease to work the land."(e) As a result, the complaint stated, the tenants are required to obtain financing of all their other farm needs—groceries, clothing, tools and the like—from the landlord as well, since prior to harvesting the crop they lack cash and any source of credit other than the landlord. He, in turn, the complaint alleges, levies such high prices and rates of interest on these supplies that the tenants' crop profits are consumed each year in debt payments. Petitioners contend that they can attain a "modest measure of economic independence" if they are able to use their "advance subsidy payments . . . [to] form co-operatives to buy [supplies] at wholesale and reasonable prices in lieu of the excessive prices demanded by [the landlord] of . . . captive consumers with no funds to purchase elsewhere". Thus, petitioners allege that they suffer injury in fact from the operation of the amended regulation.

4. The District Court, in an unreported opinion, held that the petitioners "lack standing to maintain this action against these [respondents] governmental officials," because the latter "have not taken any action which invades any legally protected interest of the plaintiffs." The Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit affirmed, one judge dissenting. 398 F2d 398. It held that petitioners lacked standing not only because they alleged no invasion of a legally protected vice in the U. S. Department of Agriculture. The complaint also included counts against petitioners' landlord alleging that he acted improperly to deprive them of their right to receive subsidy payments, and, further, that some of the petitioners had been illegally evicted because of their participation in litigation with respect to the cotton program, and, in the case of one petitioner, because of his candidacy for Alabama Agricultural and Conservation Service county committeeman. The District Court denied the landlord's motion to dismiss these counts and transferred them for trial to the Southern District of Alabama. That ruling is not before us.

(e) The complaint stated that some of the petitioners "were denied the right to work the land" when they refused to execute assignments to their landlord. The complaint also alleged that "[p]laintiffs have been tenant farmers on this land from eleven to sixty-one years . . . and [two of them] have been on this land all their lives."

interest but also because petitioners "have not shown us, nor have we found any provision of the Food and Agriculture Act of 1965 which either expressly or impliedly gives [petitioners] standing to challenge this administrative regulation or gives the Courts authority to review such administrative action." Id., 398 F2d 398 at 402. We granted certiorari. (1969) 395 US 958 = 23 L Ed 2d 744 = 89 S Ct 2108.

5. Our decision in Data Processing Service v. Camp, (1969) 25 L Ed 2d 184, leads us to reverse here.

6. First, there is no doubt that in the context of this litigation the tenant farmers, petitioners here, have the personal stake and interest that impart the concrete adverseness required by Art. III.

7. Second, the tenant farmers are clearly within the zone of interests protected by the Act.

8. Implicit in the statutory provisions and their legislative history is a congressional intent that the Secretary protect the interests of tenant farmers. Both of the relevant statutes expressly enjoin the Secretary to do so. The Food and Agriculture Act of 1965 states that "[t]he Secretary shall provide adequate safeguards to protect the interests of tenants. . . ." 79 Stat 1196, 7 USC (Supp IV) S. 1444(d) (10). (f) 7 USC (Supp IV) S. 1444(d) (13), as noted earlier, incorporates by reference S. 8(g), as amended, 52 Stat 35, 205, 16 USC S. 590h (g); S. 8(b) of that Act, in turn, provides that "the Secretary shall, as far as practicable, protect the interests of tenants. . . ." 52 Stat 32, 16 USC S. 590h(b). The legislative history of the "making a crop" provision, though sparse, similarly indicates a congressional intent to benefit the tenants.(g) They are persons "aggrieved by agency action within the meaning of a relevant statute" as those words are used in 5 USC S. 702.

(f) In connection with the amended regulations, the Secretary issued under S. 1444(d)(10) various rules designed to ensure that tenants receive their fair share of the federal payments. 31 Fed Reg 4887-4888; 7 CFR 722.817, 794.3

(g) See the remarks of Rep. Fulmer, 82 Cong Rec 844 (1937), and of Senator Adams, id., at 1756. The fact that assignments could be made at all indicated a congressional concern for the farmers' welfare, in light of the general statutory prohibition on assignment of federal claims embodied in the Anti-Assignment Act, 31 USC S. 203. This concern was noted in a letter from the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture to the President of the Senate in January 1952, in which the Secretary stated that S. 8(g) "was enacted for the purpose of creating additional credit to farmers to assist them in financing farming operations." S Rep No. 1305 (1952).

9. Third, judicial review of the Secretary's action is not precluded. The Court of Appeals rested its holding on the view that no provision of the Food and Agriculture Act of 1965 "expressly or impliedly . . . gives the Courts authority to review such administrative action." 398 F2d 398 at 402. Whether agency action is reviewable often poses difficult questions of congressional intent; and the Court must decide if Congress has in express or implied terms precluded judicial review or committed the challenged action entirely to administrative discretion.

10. The Administrative Procedure Act, 80 Stat 392, 5 USC S. 701(a), allows judicial review of agency action except where "(1) statutes preclude judicial review or (2) agency action is committed to agency discretion by law." The amended regulation here under challenge was promulgated under 16 USC S. 590d (3) which authorizes the Secretary to "prescribe such regulations, as he may deem proper to carry out the provisions of this chapter." Plainly this provision does not expressly preclude judicial review, nor does any other provision in either the 1938 or 1965 Acts. Nor does the authority to promulgate such regulations "as he may deem proper" in S. 590d(3) constitute a commitment of the task of defining "making a crop" entirely to the discretionary judgment of the Executive Branch without the intervention of the courts. On the contrary, since the only or principal dispute relates to the meaning of the statutory term, the controversy must ultimately be resolved, not on the basis of matters within the special competence of the Secretary, but by judicial application of canons of statutory construction. See Texas Gas Transmission Corp. v. Shell Oil Co., (1959) 363 US 263, 268-270 = 4 L Ed 2d 1208, 1211-1213 = 80 S Ct 1122. "The role of the courts should, in particular, be viewed hospitably where . . . the question sought to be reviewed does not significantly engage the agency's expertise . . . [W]here the only or principal dispute relates to the meaning of the statutory term' . . . [the controversy] presents issues on which courts, and not [administrators], are relatively more expert." Hardin v. Kentucky Utilities Co., (1968) 390 US 1, 14 = 19 L Ed 2d 787, 797 = 88 S Ct 651 (Harlan, J., dissenting). Therefore the permissive term "as he may deem proper," by itself, is not to be read as a congressional command which precludes a judicial determination of the correct application of the governing canons.

11. The question then becomes whether non-reviewability can fairly be inferred. As we said in Data Processing Service, (1969) 25 L Ed 2d 184, preclusion of judicial review of administrative action adjudicating private rights is not lightly to be inferred. See Leedom v. Kyne, (1958) 358 US 184 = 3 L Ed 2d 210 = 79 S Ct 180; Harmon v. Brucker, (1957) 355 US 579 = 2 L Ed 2d 503 = 78 S Ct 433; Stark v. Wickard, (1943) 321 US 288 = 38 L Ed 733 = 64 S Ct 559; American School of Magnetic Healing v. McAnulty, (1902) 187 US 94 = 47 L Ed 90 = 23 S Ct 33. Indeed, judicial review of such administrative action is the rule, and non-reviewability an exception which must be demonstrated. In Abbott Laboratories v. Gardner, (1967) 387 US 136, 140 = 18 L Ed 2d 681, 686 = 87 S Ct 1507, we held that "judicial review of final agency action by an aggrieved person will not be cut off unless there is persuasive reason to believe that such was the purpose of Congress." A clear command of the statute will preclude review; and such a command of the statute may be inferred from its purpose. Switchmen's Union v. Mediation Board, (1943) 320 US 297 = 88 L Ed 61 = 64 S Ct 95. It is, however, "only upon a showing of 'clear and convincing evidence' of a contrary legislative intent" that the courts should restrict access to judicial review. Supra, (1967) 387 US 136 at 141 = 18 L Ed 2d 681 at 687. The right of judicial review is ordinarily inferred where congressional intent to protect the interests of the class of which the plaintiff is a member can be found; in such cases, unless members of the protected class may have judicial review the statutory objectives might not be realized. See the Chicago Junction Case, (1924) 264 US 258 = 68 L Ed 667 = 44 S Ct 317; (1968) 390 US 1 = 19 L Ed 2d 787 supra.

12. We hold that the statutory scheme at issue here is to be read as evincing a congressional intent that petitioners may have judicial review of the Secretary's action.

13. The judgments of the Court of Appeals and of the District Court are vacated and the case is remanded to the District Court for a hearing on the merits. It is so ordered.

SEPARATE OPINION

Mr. JUSTICE BRENNAN, with whom Mr. JUSTICE WHITE joins, concurring and dissenting.*

14. I concur in the result in both cases but dissent from the Court's treatment of the question of standing to challenge agency action.

15. The Court's approach to standing, set out in Data Processing, has two steps: (1) since "the framework of Article III . . . restricts judicial power to 'cases' and 'controversies,'" the first step is to determine "whether the plaintiff alleges that the challenged action has caused him injury in fact"; (2) if injury in fact is alleged, the relevant statute or constitutional provision is then examined to determine "whether the interest sought to be protected by the complainant is arguably within the zone of interests to be protected or regulated by the statute or constitutional guarantee in question."

* Editor's Note: This opinion also applies to Association of Data Processing Service Organizations, Inc. v. Camp (No. 85), p. 184, supra.

16. My view is that the inquiry in the Court's first step is the only one which need be made to determine standing. I had thought we discarded the notion of any additional requirement when we discussed standing solely in terms of its constitutional content in Flast v. Cohen, (1968) 392 US 83 = 20 L Ed 2d 947 = 88 S Ct 1942. By requiring a second, non-constitutional step, the Court comes very close to perpetuating the discredited requirement that conditioned standing on a showing by the plaintiff that the challenged governmental action invaded one of his legally protected interests.^(h) Barlow is a typical illustration of the harm which resulted from that requirement. The only substantial issue in that case goes to the merits: does the statutory language "making a crop" create a legally protected interest for tenant farmers in the form of a prohibition against the assignment of their federal benefits to secure cash rent? By confusing the merits with the plaintiffs' standing to challenge the Secretary's action, both the District Court and the Court of Appeals denied the farmers the focused and careful decision on the merits to which they are clearly entitled. Although this Court properly reverses the Court of Appeals on that account, it encourages more Barlow decisions by engrafting its wholly unnecessary and inappropriate second step upon the constitutional requirement for standing.

17. Before the plaintiff is allowed to argue the merits, it is true that a canvass of relevant statutory materials must be made in cases challenging agency action. But the canvass is made not to determine 'standing' but to determine an aspect of 'reviewability,' that is whether Congress meant to deny or to allow judicial review of the agency action at the instance of the plaintiff.⁽ⁱ⁾ The Court in the present cases examines the statutory materials for just this purpose but only after making the same examination during the second step of its standing inquiry. Thus in Data Processing the Court determines that the plaintiffs have standing because they alleged injury in fact and because "S. 4 [of the Bank Service Corporation Act of 1962] arguably brings a competitor within the zone of interests protected by it." The Court then determines that the Comptroller's action is reviewable at the instance of the plaintiffs because "[b]oth [the Bank Service Corporation Act and the National Bank Act] are clearly 'relevant' statutes within the meaning of [the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 USC S. 702]. The Acts do not in terms protect a specified group. But their general policy is apparent; and those whose interests are directly affected by a broad or narrow interpretation of the Act are easily identifiable. It is clear that petitioners, as competitors of national banks which are engaging in data processing services, are within that class of 'aggrieved' persons who, under S. 702, are entitled to judicial review of 'agency action'." Again in Barlow, the plaintiff tenant farmers are found to have standing because they alleged injury in fact and because "tenant farmers are . . . within the zone of interests protected by the Act." Examination of the same statutory materials subsequently leads the Court to the conclusion that the tenant farmers are entitled to judicial review of the Secretary's action because "the statutory scheme . . . is to be read as evincing a congressional intent that petitioners may have judicial review of the Secretary's action."

(h) Compare the language in Associated Industries v. Ickes, 134 F2d 694, *00 (CA2d Cir 1943): "In a suit in a federal court by a citizen against a Government officer, complaining of alleged past . . . unlawful conduct by the defendant, there is no justiciable 'controversy' . . . unless the citizen shows that such conduct . . . invades . . . a private substantive legally protected right of the plaintiff citizen; such invaded interest must be either of a 'recognized' character at 'common law' or a substantive private legally protected interest created by statute [or Constitution]".

18. I submit that in making such examination of statutory materials an element in the determination of standing, the Court not only performs a useless and unnecessary exercise but also encourages badly reasoned decisions, which may well deny justice in this complex field. When agency action is challenged standing reviewability, and the merits pose discrete,

(i) Reviewability has often been treated as if it involved a single issue: whether agency action is conclusive and beyond judicial challenge by anyone. In reality, however, reviewability is equally concerned with a second issue: whether the particular plaintiff then requesting review may have it. See the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 USC Ss. 701(a) and 702. Both questions directly concern the extent to which persons harmed by agency action may challenge its legality.

and often complicated, issues which can best be resolved by recognizing and treating them as such.

I

Standing

19. Although Flast v. Cohen was not a case challenging agency action, its determination of the basis for standing should resolve that question for all cases. We there confirmed what we said in Baker v. Carr, (1962) 369 US 186, 204 = 7 L Ed 2d 663, 678 = 82 S Ct 691, that the "gist of the question of standing" is whether the party seeking relief has "alleged such a personal stake in the outcome of the controversy as to assure that concrete adverseness which sharpens the presentation of issues upon which the court so largely depends for illumination of difficult . . . questions." "In other words," we said in Flast, "when standing is placed in issue in a case, the question is whether the person whose standing is challenged is a proper party to request an adjudication of a particular issue" and not whether the controversy is otherwise justiciable,⁽ⁱ⁾ or whether, on the merits, the plaintiff has a legally protected interest

(j) Other elements of justiciability are, for instance, ripeness, e.g., Poe v. Ullman, 367 US 497, 6 L Ed 2d 989, 81 S Ct 1752 (1961), mootness, e.g., United States v. W. T. Grant Co., 345 US 629, 97 L Ed 1303, 73 S Ct 894 (1953), and the policy against friendly or collusive suits, e.g., Chicago & Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Wellman, 143 US 339, 36 L Ed 176, 12 S Ct 400 (1892); United States v. Johnson, 319 US 302, 87 L Ed 1413, 63 S Ct 1075 (1943). "Justiciability" is also the term of art used to refer to the constitutional necessity that courts not deal with certain issues lest they "intrude into areas committed to other branches of Government." Flast, supra, at 95, 20 L Ed 2d at 959. The political question doctrine has its analogue in the sphere of administrative law in the concept of non-reviewability. See, e.g., Chicago & Southern Air Lines, Inc. v. Waterman Steamship Corp., 333 US 103, 92 L Ed 2d 568, 68 S Ct 431 (1948); Schilling v. Rogers, 363 US 666, 4 L Ed 2d 1478, 80 S Ct 1288 (1960). And, of course, federal courts may not decide questions over which they lack jurisdiction, e.g., Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 US 294, 305, 8 L Ed 2d 510, 523, 82 S Ct 1502 (1962); American Fire & Casualty Co. v. Finn, 341 US 6, 17-18, 95 L Ed 702, 710, 71 S Ct 534, 19 ALR 2d 738 (1951). Thus, on many grounds other than an absence of standing, a court may dismiss a lawsuit without proceeding to the merits to determine whether the plaintiff presents a claim upon which relief may be granted, and, if so, whether he has borne his burden of proof.

which the defendant's action invaded. (1968) 392 US 83 at 99-100 = 20 L Ed 2d 947 at 961. The objectives of the Article III standing requirement are simple: the avoidance of any use of a "federal court as a forum [for the airing of] generalized grievances about the conduct of the government," and the creation of a judicial context in which "the questions will be framed with the necessary specificity, . . . the issues . . . contested with the necessary adverseness and . . . the litigation . . . pursued with the necessary vigor to assure that the . . . challenge will be made in a form traditionally thought to be capable of judicial resolution." Id., at 106, 20 L Ed 2d at 965. Thus, as we held in Flast, "the question of standing is related only to whether the dispute sought to be adjudicated will be presented in an adversary context and in a form historically viewed as capable of judicial resolution." Id., at 101, 20 L Ed 2d at 962.(k) See also Chicago v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., (1958) 357 US 77, 83-84 = 2 L Ed 2d 1174, 1180 = 78 S Ct 1063.

20. In light of Flast, standing exists when the plaintiff alleges, as the plaintiffs in each of these cases alleged, that the challenged action has caused him injury in fact, economic or otherwise.(l) He thus shows that he has the requisite

(k) It is true, of course, that in certain types of litigation parties may properly request judicial resolution of issues not "presented in an adversary context." See Davis, Standing: Taxpayers and Others, 35 U Chi L Rev 601, 607 (1968). But in most instances, among them private challenges to agency action, the plaintiff must establish his adverseness to obtain standing.

(l) Thus, for purposes of standing, it is sufficient that a plaintiff allege damnum absque injuria, that is, he has only to allege that he has suffered harm as a result of the defendant's action. Injury in fact has generally been economic in nature, but it need not be. See, e.g., Scenic Hudson Preservation Conf. v. FPC, 354 F2d 608 (CA2d Cir 1965); Office of Communication of the United Church of Christ v. FCC, 359 F2d 994 (CA DC Cir 1966). The more "distinctive or discriminating" the harm alleged and the more clearly it is linked to the defendant's action, the more easily a plaintiff may meet the constitutional test. See Jaffe, Judicial Control of Administrative Action 501 (1965). The plaintiffs in the present cases alleged distinctive and discriminating harm, obviously linked to the agency action. Thus, I do not consider what must be alleged to satisfy the standing requirement by parties who have sustained no special harm themselves but sue rather as taxpayers or citizens to vindicate the interests of the general public.

"personal stake in the outcome" of his suit. Supra, (1962) 369 US 186 at 204 = 7 L Ed 2d 663 at 678. We may reasonably expect that a person so harmed will, as best he can, frame the relevant questions with specificity, contest the issues with the necessary adverseness, and pursue the litigation vigorously.(m) Recognition of his standing to litigate is then consistent with the Constitution, and no further inquiry is pertinent to its existence.

II

Reviewability

21. When the legality of administrative action is at issue, standing alone will not entitle the plaintiff to a decision on the merits. Pertinent statutory language, legislative history and public policy considerations must be examined to determine whether Congress precluded all judicial review, and, if not, whether Congress nevertheless foreclosed review to the class to which the plaintiff belongs. Under the Administrative Procedure Act (APA), "statutes [may] preclude judicial review" or "agency action [may be] committed to agency discretion by law." 5 USC S. 701(a). In either case, the plaintiff is out of court, not because he had no standing to enter, but because Congress has stripped the judiciary of authority to review agency action. Review may be totally foreclosed, as in Schilling v. Rogers, (1960) 363 US 666 = 4 L Ed 2d 1478, = 80 S Ct 1288, or, if permitted, it may nonetheless be denied to the plaintiff's

(m) Past decisions of this Court indicate that a person who has suffered injury in fact meets the relevant Article III requirement. See, for example, FCC v. Sanders Bros. Radio Station, 309 US 470, 476-477, 84 L Ed 869, 874, 875, 60 S Ct 693 (1940); Scripps-Howard Radio, Inc. v. FCC, 316 US 4, 86 L Ed 1229, 62 S Ct 875 (1942). In these decisions the Court permitted parties economically harmed by administrative action to challenge it although no legal interest of the parties was found to have been invaded by the action. The Court stated in Scripps-Howard Radio, supra, at 14, 86 L Ed at 1236, that "[t]he Communications Act of 1934 did not create new private rights. The purpose of the Act was to protect the public interest in communications. By S. 402(b)(2) Congress gave the right of appeal to persons 'aggrieved or whose interests are adversely affected by Commission action'." Accordingly, since Congress cannot expand the Article III jurisdiction of federal courts, Muskrat v. United States, 219 US 346, 55 L Ed 246, 31 S Ct 250 (1911), it follows that injury in fact renders a party adverse under the Constitution. Cf. Davis, 3 Administrative Law Treatise S. 22.02, at 211 (1958); Jaffe, supra, n. 5, at 336.

class. But the governing principle laid down in (1967) 387 US 136, 140 = 18 L Ed 2d 681, 686 = 87 S Ct 1507, is that judicial review of a final agency action by an aggrieved person will not be cut off unless there is persuasive reason to believe that such was the purpose of Congress."

22. The APA provides that "[a] person suffering legal wrong because of agency action, or adversely affected or aggrieved by agency action within the meaning of a relevant statute, is entitled to judicial review thereof." 5 USC S. 702. Congressional intent that a particular plaintiff have review may be found either in express statutory language granting it to the plaintiff's class,⁽ⁿ⁾ or, in the absence of such express language, in statutory indicia from which a right to review may be inferred.^(o) Where, as in the instant cases, there is no express grant of review, reviewability has ordinarily been inferred from evidence that Congress intended the plaintiff's class to be a beneficiary of the statute under which the plaintiff raises his claim. See, for example, the Chicago Junction Case, (1924) 264 US 258 = 68 L Ed 667 = 44 S Ct 317; (1968) 390 US 1 = 19 L Ed 2d 787 = 88 S Ct 651; Norwalk Core v. Norwalk Redevelopment Agency, 395 F2d 920 (CA2d Cir 1968). In light of Abbott Laboratories, (1967) 387 US 136 = 18 L Ed 2d 681 slight indicia that the plaintiff's class is a beneficiary will suffice to support the inference.^(p)

III

The Merits

23. If it is determined that a plaintiff who alleged injury in fact is entitled

(n) See, e. g., the Securities Act, which provides that "[a]ny person aggrieved by an order of the Commission may obtain a review," 15 USC S. 77i (a), and the Federal Power Act which grants review to "[a]ny party to a proceeding under this chapter aggrieved by an order issued by the Commission in such proceeding" 16 USC S. 825l (b).

(o) Section 702 also provides that "[a] person suffering legal wrong because of agency action . . . is entitled to judicial review thereof." Though a person suffering such wrong is clearly entitled to review, he need not show the existence of a legally protected interest to establish either his standing or his right to review. The existence of that interest is a question of the merits.

(p) This is particularly the case when the plaintiff is the only party likely to challenge the action. Refusal to allow him review would, in effect, commit the action wholly to agency discretion, thus risking frustration of the statutory objectives.

to judicial review, inquiry proceeds to the merits — to whether the specific legal interest claimed by the plaintiff is protected by the statute and to whether the protested agency action invaded that interest.^(q) It is true, of course, that matters relevant to the merits will already have been touched tangentially in the determination of standing and, in some cases, in the determination of reviewability. The aspect of the merits touched in establishing standing is the identification of injury in fact, the existence of which the plaintiff must prove. The merits are also touched in establishing reviewability in cases where the plaintiff's right to review must be inferred from evidence that his class is a statutory beneficiary. The same statutory indicia that afford the plaintiff a right to review also bear on the merits, because they provide evidence that the statute protects his class, and thus that he is entitled to relief if he can show that the challenged agency action violated the statute. Evidence that the plaintiff's class is a statutory beneficiary, however, need not be as strong for the purpose of obtaining review as for the purpose of establishing the plaintiff's claim on the merits. Under Abbott Laboratories, (1967) 387 US 136 = 18 L Ed 2d 681 slight beneficiary indicia will suffice to establish his right to have review and thus to reach the merits.

IV

24. To reiterate, in my view alleged injury in fact, reviewability, and the merits pose questions that are largely distinct from one another, each governed by its own considerations. To fail to isolate and treat each inquiry independently of the other two, so far as possible, is to risk obscuring what is at issue in a given case, and thus to risk uninformed, poorly reasoned decisions which may result in injustice. Too often these various questions have been merged into one confused inquiry, lumped under the general rubric of "standing." The books are full of opinions which dismiss a plaintiff for lack of "standing" when dismissal, if proper at all, actually rested either upon the plaintiff's failure to prove on the merits the existence of the legally protected interest which he claimed,^(r) or on his failure to prove that the challenged

(q) If the alleged legal interest is clearly frivolous, or proof to substantiate the alleged injury in fact is wholly lacking, the plaintiff can be hastened from court by summary judgment.

(r) E. g., Tennessee Electric Power Co. v. TVA, 306 US 118, 83 L Ed 543, 59 S Ct 366 (1939); Association of Data Processing Service Organizations, Inc. v. Camp, 406 F2d 837, 843 (CA8th Cir 1969); Barlow v. Collins, 398 F2d 398, 401 (CA 5th Cir 1968).

agency action was reviewable at his instance.(s)

25. The risk of ambiguity and injustice can be minimized by cleanly severing, so far as possible, the inquiries into reviewability and the merits from the determination of standing. Today's decisions, however, will only compound present confusion and breed even more litigation over standing. In the first place, the Court's formulation of its non-constitutional element of standing is obscure. What precisely must a plaintiff do to establish that "the interest sought to be protected . . . is arguably within the zone of interests to be protected or regulated by the statute"? How specific an "interest" must he advance? Will a broad, general claim, such as competitive interest, suffice, or must he identify a specific legally protected interest? When, too, is his interest "arguably" within the appropriate "zone"? Does a mere allegation that it falls there suffice? If more than an allegation is required, is the plaintiff required to argue the merits? And what is the distinction between a "protected" and a "regulated" interest? Is it possible that a plaintiff may challenge agency action under a statute which unquestionably regulates the interest at stake, but which expressly excludes the plaintiff's class from among the statutory beneficiaries?

26. In the second place, though the Court insists that its non-constitutional standing inquiry does not involve a determination of the merits, I have grave misgivings on this score. The formulation of the inquiry most certainly bears a disquieting similarity to the erroneous notion that a plaintiff has no standing unless he can establish the existence of a legally protected interest. Finally, assuming that the inquiry does not, in fact, focus on the merits, then surely it serves only to determine whether the challenged agency action is reviewable at the instance of the plaintiff in cases where there is no express statutory grant of review to members of his class.(t) And, if this is so, it has no place in the determination of standing. In terms of treating related questions with one another, this inquiry is best made in the reviewability context. The Constitution requires for standing only that the plaintiff allege that actual harm resulted to him from the agency action. Investigation to determine whether the constitutional requirement has been met has nothing in common with the inquiry into statutory language, legislative history and public policy which must be made to ascertain whether Congress has precluded or limited judicial review.(u) More fundamentally, an approach which treats separately the distinct issues of standing, reviewability, and the merits, and decides each on the basis of its own criteria, assures that these often complex questions will be squarely faced, thus contributing to better reasoned decisions and to greater confidence that justice has in fact been done. The Court's approach does too little to guard against the possibility that judges will use standing to slam the court-house door against plaintiffs who are entitled to full consideration of their claims on the merits. The Court's approach must trouble all concerned with the function of the judicial process in today's world. As my Brother Douglas has said: "The judiciary is an indispensable part of the operation of our federal system. With the growing complexities of Government it is often the one and only place where effective relief can be obtained. . . . [W]here wrongs to individuals are done . . . it is abdication for courts to close their doors." Supra, (1968) 392 US 83 at 111 = 20 L. Ed 2d 947 at 968 (concurring opinion).

(s) E. g., Association of Data Processing Service Organizations, Inc. v. Camp, supra, at 843; Barlow v. Collins, supra, at 401-402; Harrison-Halsted Community Group, Inc. v. Housing & Home Finance Agency, 310 F2d 99 (CA7th Cir 1962).

(t) In cases involving statutes that do expressly grant the plaintiff a right to review, there would be no need for the Court's second standing inquiry—unless it serves to provide a preview of the merits.

Case remanded.

(u) I would apply my view that all examination of statutory language and congressional intent, as they bear on the right of the plaintiff to challenge agency action, should be made only in the reviewability context even if the pertinent statutory material speaks of "standing" or "statutory aid to standing." Statutory materials, of course, would be properly consulted in the determination of standing if they purport to define what constitutes injury in fact.

Court of U.S.A. — Appeal from conviction — Appellant on bail not surrendering himself to authorities upon conviction — Supreme Court will not adjudicate appeal.

Where an accused who was on bail failed to surrender himself to authorities upon his conviction, with the result that the bail was revoked and the State considered him a fugitive from justice, the Supreme Court of United States in appeal against the conviction in the absence of anything to the contrary in the statute, under which the appeal is taken would decline to adjudicate the appeal.

(Para 2)

The Supreme Court would not adjudicate upon merits of a criminal case after the convict seeking of the judgment escapes from the restraints placed upon him on his conviction. But the escape only disentitles the accused to call upon the resources of the United States Supreme Court for determination of his claim. It does not, however, strip the case of its character as an adjudicable case or controversy.

SUMMARY

A state prisoner whose conviction of abortion and conspiracy to commit abortion was being appealed was released on bail. When he failed to surrender himself to the state authorities, his bail was revoked, and the State considered him a fugitive from justice.

On appeal of the conviction from the New Jersey Supreme Court, the United States Supreme Court declined to adjudicate the case. In a per curiam opinion expressing the view of seven members of the court, it was held that in the absence of a specific provision to the contrary in the statute under which the appeal was taken [28 USC S. 1257(2)], the court had authority to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the fugitive had disentitled himself to call upon the resources of the court.

DOUGLAS, J., concurred in the result.

OPINION OF THE COURT

Per Curiam.

This case comes to the Court on appeal from the New Jersey State courts, which have affirmed appellant Molinaro's conviction for abortion and conspiracy to commit abortion. We are informed by both appellant's counsel and counsel for the State that Molinaro, who was free on bail, has failed to surrender himself to State authorities. His bail has been revoked, and the State considers him a fugitive from justice. Under these circumstances we decline to adjudicate his case.

2. The Court has faced such a situation before, in Smith v. United States, (1877) 94 US 97=24 Law Ed 32; and Bonahan v. United States, (1887) 125 US 692=31 Law Ed 854=8 S Ct 1390. In each of those cases, which were before the Court on writs of error, the Court ordered the case removed from the docket upon receiving information that the plaintiff in error had escaped from custody. In Smith, the case was dismissed at the beginning of the following term. See (1950) 18 Geo Wash L Rev 427, 430. In Bonahan, the case was stricken from the docket on the last day of the term in which it arose. See also National Union v. Arnold, (1954) 348 US 37, 43=99 Law Ed 46, 51=75 S Ct 92; Eisler v. United States, (1949) 338 US 189, 883=93 Law Ed 1897, 94 Law Ed 542, 69 S Ct 1453, 70 S Ct 181; Allen v. Georgia, (1897) 166 US 138, 41 Law Ed 949, 17 S Ct 525. No persuasive reason exists why this Court should proceed to adjudicate the merits of a criminal case after the convicted defendant who has sought review escapes from the restraints placed upon him pursuant to the conviction. While such an escape does not strip the case of its character as an adjudicable case or controversy, we believe it disentitles the defendant to call upon the resources of the Court for determination of his claims. In the absence of specific provision to the contrary in the statute under which Molinaro appeals, (1964) 28 USC S. 1257(2), we conclude, in light of the Smith and Bonahan decisions, that the Court has the authority to dismiss the appeal on this ground. The dismissal need not await the end of the term or the expiration of a fixed period of time, but should take place at this time.

3. It is so ordered.

4. Mr. JUSTICE DOUGLAS concurs in the result.

SUMMARY

Taxpayers, as the owners of a majority of the common stock of a corporation, who voted for perpetual extension of the corporate charter, were required by Iowa law to purchase the stock of a minority stockholder who had voted against the charter extension. Having been unable to negotiate the price of the minority stock, the taxpayers instituted appraisal proceedings in a State court, and ultimately purchased the minority stock interest at a price fixed thereby. On their federal income-tax returns, the taxpayers claimed deductions for attorneys', accountants', and appraisers' fees for services rendered in connection with the appraisal litigation, asserting that such expenses were ordinary and necessary expenses paid for the management, conservation, or maintenance of property held for the production of income, deductible under S. 212 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, but the Commissioner of Internal Revenue disallowed the deduction on the ground that the fees represented capital expenditures incurred in connection with the acquisition of capital stock of the corporation. The Tax Court sustained the Commissioner's determination (49 T Ct 377), and the Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit affirmed (410 F2d 313).

On certiorari, the Supreme Court of the United States affirmed. In an opinion by Marshall, J., expressing the unanimous view of the court, it was held that the appraisal litigation expenses were not deductible under S. 212, but instead constituted capital expenditures to be treated as part of the cost of the stock, under a Treasury Regulation making the "cost of acquisition" of a capital asset a capital expense, it being immaterial that the taxpayers' primary purpose in incurring the litigation expenses was merely to fix the price of the stock and not to defend or perfect title thereto.

OPINION OF THE COURT

Mr. JUSTICE MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the Court.

This case, and United States v. Hilton Hotels Corpn., (1970) 25 Law Ed 2d 585, involve the tax treatment of expenses incurred in certain appraisal litigation.

1. Taxpayers owned or controlled a majority of the common stock of the Telegraph-Herald, an Iowa publishing corporation. The Telegraph-Herald was incorporated in 1901, and its charter was extended for 20-year periods in 1921 and 1941. On June 9, 1960, taxpayers voted their controlling share of the stock of the corporation in favour of a perpetual extension of the charter. A minority stockholder voted against the extension. Iowa law requires "those stockholders voting for such renewal . . . [to] purchase at its real value the stock voted against such renewal." Iowa Code Ann. S. 491.25.

2. Taxpayers attempted to negotiate purchase of the dissenting stockholder's shares, but no agreement could be reached on the "real value" of those shares. Consequently, in 1962 taxpayers brought an action in State court to appraise the value of the minority stock interest. The trial court fixed a value, which was slightly reduced on appeal by the Iowa Supreme Court, Woodward v. Quigley, 257 Iowa 1077, 133 NW2d 38, on rehearing, 257 Iowa 1104, 136 NW2d 280 (1965). In July 1965, taxpayers purchased the minority stock interest at the price fixed by the court.

3. During 1963, taxpayers paid attorneys', accountants', and appraisers' fees of over $25,000, for services rendered in connection with the appraisal litigation. On their 1963 federal income-tax returns, taxpayers claimed deductions for these expenses, asserting that they were "ordinary and necessary expenses paid . . . for the management, conservation, or maintenance of property held for the production of income" deductible under S. 212 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue disallowed the deduction "because the fees represent capital expenditures incurred in connection with the acquisition of capital stock of a corporation." The tax court sustained the Commissioner's determination, with two dissenting opinions, (1968) 49 TC 377, and the Court of Appeals affirmed, 410 F2d 313 (CA 8th Cir 1969). We granted certiorari, (1969) 396 US 875=24 Law Ed 2d 133=90 S Ct 153 to resolve the conflict over the deductibility of the costs of appraisal proceedings between this decision and the decision of the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit in (1970) 25 Law Ed 2d 585, supra.(i) We affirm.

(i) Other federal court decisions on the point are in conflict. Compare Boulder Building Corp'n. v. United States, 125 F Supp 512 (DC WD Okla 1954) (holding appraisal proceeding costs capital expenditures), with Smith Hotel Enterprises, Inc. v. Nelson, 236 F Supp 303 (DC ED Wis 1964) (holding such costs deductible or ordinary and necessary business expense). And see Walter S. Heller, 3 TC 371 (1943), affd sub nom Heller v. Commissioner, 147 F2d 376 (CA9th Cir 1945) (holding dissenting stockholder's appraisal costs deductible under predecessor to S. 212).

See also Naylor v. Commissioner, 203 F2d 346 (CA5th Cir 1953), in which expenses of litigation to fix the purchase

4. Since the inception of the present federal income-tax in 1913, capital expenditures have not been deductible.(ii) See Internal Revenue Code of 1954, S. 263. Such expenditures are added to the basis of the capital asset with respect to which they are incurred, and are taken into account for tax purposes either through depreciation or by reducing the capital gain (or increasing the loss) when the asset is sold. If an expense is capital, it cannot be deducted as "ordinary and necessary," either as a business expense under S. 162 of the Code or as an expense of "management, conservation, or maintenance" under S. 212.(iii)

5. It has long been recognized, as a general matter, that costs incurred in the acquisition or disposition of a capital asset are to be treated as capital expenditures. The most familiar example of such treatment is the capitalization of brokerage fees for the sale or purchase of securities, as explicitly provided by longstanding Treasury regulation, Treas Reg 1.263(a)-2(e), and as approved by this Court in Helvering v. Winmill, (1933) 305 US 79 = 83 Law Ed 52 = 59 S Ct 45 and Spreckels v. Commissioner, (1942) 315 US 626=86 Law Ed 1073=62 S Ct 777. The Court recognized that brokers' commissions are "part of the acquisition cost of the securities," (1938) 305 US 79 supra, at p. 84=83 Law Ed 52 at p. 55, and relied on the Treasury regulation, which had been approved by statutory re-enactment, to deny deductions for such commissions even to a taxpayer for whom they were a regular and recurring expense in his business of buying and selling securities.

6. The regulations do not specify other sorts of acquisition costs, but rather provide generally that "the cost of acquisition . . . of . . . property having a price of stock sold pursuant to an option to purchase it at its net asset value on a certain date were held deductible under the predecessor to S. 212.

(ii) See S. II(B) of the Income-Tax Act of 1913, 38 Stat 114, 167.

[3] (iii) The two sections are in pari materia with respect to the capital-ordinary distinction, differing only in that S. 212 allows deductions for the ordinary and necessary expenses of non-business profit-making activities. See United States v. Gilmore, 372 US 39, 44-45, 9 Law Ed 2d 570, 574, 83 S Ct 623 (1963). Walter S. Heller, n. 1, supra, may have been based in part on the premise that the predecessor to S. 212 permitted the deduction of some expenses that would have been capitalized if incurred in the conduct of a trade or business.

useful life substantially beyond the taxable year" is a capital expenditure. Treas Reg 1.263(a)-2(a). Under this general provision, the courts have held that legal, brokerage, accounting and similar costs incurred in the acquisition or disposition of such property are capital expenditures. See, e. g., Spangler v. Commissioner, 323 F2d 913, 921 (CA 9th Cir 1963); United States v. St. Joe Paper Co., 284 F2d 430, 432 (CA 5th Cir 1960). See generally 4A J. Mertens, Law of Federal Income Taxation, Ss. 25.25, 25.26, 25.40, 25A.15 (1966 ed). The law could hardly be otherwise, for such ancillary expenses incurred in acquiring or disposing of an asset are as much part of the cost of that asset as is the price paid for it.

7. More difficult questions arise with respect to another class of capital expenditures, those incurred in "defending or perfecting title to property". Treas Reg 1.263(a)-2(c). In one sense, any lawsuit brought against a taxpayer may affect his title to property — money, or other assets subject to lien.(iv) The courts, not believing that Congress meant all litigation expenses to be capitalized, have created the rule that such expenses are capital in nature only where the taxpayer's "primary purpose" in incurring them is to defend or perfect title. See, e. g., Rassenfoss v. Commissioner, 153 F2d 764 (CA 7th Cir 1946); Industrial Aggregate Co. v. United States, 284 F2d 639, 645 (CA 8th Cir 1960). This test hardly draws a bright line, and has produced a melange of decisions, which, as the Tax Court has noted, "it would be idle to suggest . . . can be reconciled." Hermann F. Ruoff, 30 TC 204, 208 (1952).(v)

8. Taxpayers urge that this "primary purpose" test, developed in the context of cases involving the costs of defending property, should be applied to costs incurred in acquiring or disposing of property as well. And if it is so applied, they argue, the costs here in question were properly deducted, since the legal proceedings in which they were incurred did not directly involve the question of title to the minority stock, which all agreed was to pass to taxpayers, but rather was concerned solely with the value of that stock.(vi)

(iv) See Hochschild v. Commissioner, 161 F2d 817, 820 (CA2d Cir 1947) (Frank, J., dissenting).

(v) A large number of these decisions are collected in 4A Mertens, supra, Ss. 25.24, 25A.16.

[6] (vi) Taxpayers argue at length that under Iowa law title to the stock passed before the appraisal proceeding. The Court of Appeals viewed Iowa law differently, and it seems to us that it was cor-

9. We agree with the Tax Court and the Court of Appeals that the "primary purpose" test has no application here. That uncertain and difficult test may be the best that can be devised to determine the tax treatment of costs incurred in litigation that may affect a taxpayer's title to property more or less indirectly, and that thus calls for a judgment whether the taxpayer can fairly be said to be "defending or perfecting title". Such uncertainty is not called for in applying the regulation which makes the "cost of acquisition" of a capital asset a capital expense. In our view application of the latter regulation to litigation expenses involves the simpler inquiry whether the origin of the claim litigated is in the process of acquisition itself.

10. A test based upon the taxpayer's "purpose" in undertaking or defending a particular piece of litigation would encourage resort to formalisms and artificial distinctions. For instance, in this case there can be no doubt that legal, accounting and appraisal costs incurred by taxpayers in negotiating a purchase of the minority stock would have been capital expenditures. See Atzingen-Whitehouse Dairy, Inc., 36 TC 173 (1961). Under whatever test might be applied, such expenses would have clearly been "part of the acquisition cost" of the stock. Helvering v. Winmill, supra. Yet the appraisal proceeding was no more than the substitute which state law provided for the process of negotiation as a means of fixing the price at which the stock was to be purchased. Allowing deduction of expenses incurred in such a proceeding, merely on the ground that title was not directly put in question in the particular litigation, would be anomalous.

11. Further, a standard based on the origin of the claim litigated comports with this Court's most recent ruling on the characterization of litigation expenses for tax purposes. In United States v. Gilmore, (1953) 372 US 39=9 Law Ed 2d 570=83 S Ct 623, this Court held that the expense of defending a divorce suit was a non-deductible personal expense, even though the outcome of the divorce case would affect the taxpayer's property holdings, and might affect his business reputation. The Court rejected a test which looked to the consequences of the litigation, and did not even consider the taxpayer's motives or purposes in under-rect in so doing. See United States v. Hilton Hotels Corp., post, n. 2, 25 Law Ed 2d 585, 90 S Ct—. But resolution of this question of state law makes no difference and is not necessary for decision of the case, since, as we hold in Hilton Hotels, the sequence in which title passes and price is determined is irrelevant for purposes of the tax question involved here.

taking defence of the litigation, but rather examined the origin and character of the claim against the taxpayer, and found that the claim arose out of the personal relationship of marriage.

12. The standard here pronounced may, like any standard, present borderline cases, in which it is difficult to determine whether the origin of particular litigation lies in the process of acquisition. (vii) This is not such a borderline case. Here state law required taxpayers to 'purchase' the stock owned by the dissenters. In the absence of agreement on the price at which the purchase was to be made, litigation was required to fix the price. Where property is acquired by purchase, nothing is more clearly part of the process of acquisition than the establishment of a purchase price. (viii) Thus the expenses incurred in that litigation were properly treated as part of the cost of the stock which the taxpayers acquired.

Affirmed.

(vii) See, e. g., Petschek v. United States, 335 F2d 734 (CA2d Cir 1964), for a borderline case of whether legal expenses were incurred in the disposition of property.

[9] (viii) Taxpayers argue that "purchase" analysis cannot properly be applied to the appraisal situation, because the transaction is an involuntary one from their point of view—an argument relied upon by the District Court in the Smith Hotel Enterprises case, supra, n. 1. In the first place, the transaction is in a sense voluntary, since the majority holders know that under State law they will have to buy out any dissenters. More fundamentally, however, wherever a capital asset is transferred to a new owner in exchange for value either agreed upon or determined by law to be a fair quid pro quo, the payment itself is a capital expenditure, and there is no reason why the costs of determining the amount of that payment should be considered capital in the case of the negotiated price and yet considered deductible in the case of the price fixed by law. See Isaac G. Johnson & Co. v. United States, 149 F2d 851 (CA2d Cir 1945) (expenses of litigating amount of fair compensation in condemnation proceeding held capital expenditure).

Burns and Roe Inc. et al, Petitioner v. Local 825, International Union of Operating Engineers, AFL-CIO, Respondent.

Nos. 40 and 42, decided on 12-1-1971.

†Trade Unions Act (1926), S. 28-J — Unfair Labour practice — (American decision) — National Labour Relations Act, S. 8(b) (4) (B) and (D)—Neither of the two provisions has exclusive operation.

The general contractor for a project A sub-contracted the work to B C and D. All the three employed operating engineers who were members of union X. B assigned the job of operating electric welding machine to the members of union Z. X intimated A that its members would go on strike unless A signed a contract binding on A and B C and D giving X jurisdiction over all power equipment. On refusal by A members of X went on strike.

Held (i) the clear implication of the demand of X was that A would be required either to force a change in B's policy or to terminate B's contract. This flagrant secondary conduct with the most serious disruptive effects was prohibited by S. 8(b) (4) (B). (Paras 14, 15)

(ii) Although S. 8(b) (4) (D) also applied to neutrals the basic purpose was different from that of S. 8(b) (4) (B). The practices were unfair under both sections. But there was no indication that Congress intended either section to have exclusive operation. (Para 16)

Marshall, J., Burger, C. J., Black,
Harlan, Brennan, White, Blackmun, JJ., Douglas J. filed a dissenting opinion, in which Stewart J. joined.

Mr. JUSTICE MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the Court.

2. In this case we are asked to determine whether strikes by Operating Engineers at the site of the construction of a nuclear power generator plant at Oyster Creek, New Jersey, violated S. 8
(b) (4) (B)(i) of the National Labor Relations Act. Although the National Labor Relations Board found the strikes to be in violation of this section, the Court of Appeals refused to enforce the Board's order.(ii) We believe the Court of Appeals construed the Act too narrowly.
Accordingly, we reverse and remand the case for consideration of the propriety of the Board's order.

3. The general contractor for the project, Burns and Roe, Inc., sub-contracted all of the construction work to three companies—White Construction Company,

(i) "Sec. 8(b) It shall be unfair labor practice for a labor organization or its agents—

"(4) (i) to engage in, or to induce or industry affecting commerce to engage in, a strike or a refusal in the course of his employment to use, manufacture, process, transport, or otherwise, handle or work on any goods, articles, materials, or commodities or to perform any services; or (ii) to threaten, coerce, or restrain any person engaged in commerce or in an industry affecting commerce, where in either case an object thereof is—

"(B) forcing or requiring any person porting, or otherwise dealing in the pro-ness with any other person, or forcing or nize or bargain with a labor organization certified as the representative of such employees under the provisions of Section 9: Provided, That nothing contained in

..." 29 U.S.C. S. 158(b) (4) (B).

(ii) NLRB v. Local No. 825, International Union of Operating Engineers,
410 F2d 5 (CA3 1969).

Chicago Bridge and Iron Company, and Poirier and McClane Corporation. All three employed operating engineers who were members of Local 825, International Union of Operating Engineers. But White, unlike Chicago Bridge and Poirier, did not have a collective-bargaining agreement with Local 825.

4. In the latter part of September 1965, White installed an electric welding machine and assigned the job of pushing the buttons that operated the machine to members of the Iron Workers' Union, who were to perform the actual welding.
Upon learning of this work assignment,
Local 825's job steward and its lead engineer threatened White with a strike if operating engineers were not given the work. White, however, refused to meet the demand. On September 29, 1965, the job steward and lead engineer met with the construction manager for Burns, the general contractor. They informed him that the members of Local 825 working at the jobsite had voted to strike unless Burns signed a contract, which would be binding(iii) on all three sub-contractors as well as Burns, giving Local 825 jurisdiction over all power equipment, including electric welding machines, operated on the jobsite. On October 1, after White and Burns refused to accede to the demands, the operating engineers employed by Chicago Bridge and Poirier as well as those employed by White walked off the job. They stayed out from 8:00 a.m. to 1:00 p.m., returning to work when negotiations over their demands started.

5. On October 6, Burns submitted the work assignment dispute to the National Joint Board for the Settlement of Jurisdictional Disputes for the Construction Industry.(iv) The same day, Local 825 threatened Burns and all the subcontractors with another work stoppage

(iii) The proposed contract provided in part:

"This Agreement shall bind all subcontractors while working for an Employer who is a party to this Agreement. Any Employer who sublets any of his work must sublet the same subject to all the terms and conditions of this Agreement.

"The Employer agrees that he will not sub-contract any of his work, which is covered by the terms of this Collective Bargaining Agreement, to any sub-contractor, unless said sub-contractor agrees in writing to perform said work subject to all terms and conditions of this Agreement between the Employer and the Union, including an agreement to submit work jurisdictional disputes for determination as provided below."

(iv) A private organization established by construction industry labor unions to arbitrate jurisdictional disputes.

unless the contracts were signed and the work transferred to the operating engineers. The employers again refused, and the operating engineers walked off the project. This strike lasted from October 7 to October 11.

6. On October 20, the Joint Board notified the parties that there was no reason to change the assignment of the disputed work. Local 825 did not accept this resolution; and when the welding machine was started on November 4, the operating engineers surrounded the machine and physically prevented its operation. On November 8, the NLRB Regional Director obtained from the United States District Court a temporary injunction under S. 10(l) (v) of the Act restraining the union from coercing a cessation of business on the project or to compel White to change the work assignment. (v)

7. An unfair labor practice proceeding against Local 825 subsequently ensued. The Board found that the union had violated S. 8 (b) (4) (D)(vii) of the Act by inducing employees of White,

(v) 29 U.S.C. S. 160(l).

(vi) The Operating Engineer's activity did not stop with the issuance of the injunction. White's engineers struck again on November 17, this time ostensibly over a dispute concerning the number of employees assigned to operate a recently installed electrical pump. Local 825 representatives in a discussion with White said, however, that this walkout "was more or less because of the electric welding machine being in operation." The strike lasted until December 21. Of course the activity like that on November 4 did not involve S. 8 (b) (4) (B) violations since only the engineers working for White were involved.

(vii) "Sec. 8(b) It shall be an unfair labor practice for a labor organization or its agents—

"(4) (i) to engage in, or to induce or encourage any individual employed by any person engaged in commerce or in an industry affecting commerce to engage in, a strike or a refusal in the course of his employment to use, manufacture, process, transport, or otherwise handle or work on any goods, articles, materials, or commodities or to perform any services; or (ii) to threaten, coerce, or restrain any person engaged in commerce or in an industry affecting commerce, where in either case an object thereof is—

"(D) forcing or requiring any employer to assign particular work to employees in a particular labor organization or in a particular trade, craft or class rather than to employees in another labor organization or in another trade, craft or class, unless such employer is failing to conform to an order or certifi-

Chicago Bridge, and Poirier to strike to force White to take the disputed work away from the Ironworkers and assign it to the Operating Engineers. The Court of Appeals' approval of this finding is not questioned here. But the Board's finding that Local 825's encouragement of the Chicago Bridge and Poirier employees to strike and the union's coercion of Burns violated S. 8(b) (4) (B) of the Act was not approved by the Court of Appeals and is in issue here.

8. Congressional concern over the involvement of third parties in labor disputes not their own prompted S. 8(b) (4) (B). This concern was focused on "secondary boycotts," (viii) which was conceived of as pressure brought to bear not "upon the employer who is a party [to a dispute], but upon some third party who has no concern in it" (ix) with the objective of forcing the third party to bring pressure on the employer to agree to the union's demands. (x)

9. Section 8(b) (4) (B) is, however, the product of legislative compromise and also reflects a concern with protecting labor organizations' right to exert legitimate pressure aimed at the employer with whom there is a primary dispute. (xi) This primary activity is protected even though it may seriously affect neutral third parties. Steelworkers (Carrier Corp'n.) v. NLRB, (1964) 376 US 492, 502; Electrical Workers (General Electric) v. NLRB, (1961) 366 US 667, 673.

cation of the Board determining the bargaining representative for employees performing such work . . ." 29 U.S.C. S. 158 (b) (4) (D).

(viii) See Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen v. Jacksonville Terminal Co., 394 US 369, 386-390 (1969); National Woodwork Mfrs. Assn. v. NLRB, 386 US 612, 624 (1967).

(ix) Electrical Workers, Local 501 v. NLRB, 181 F2d 34, 37 (CA2 1950), aff'd, 341 US 694.

(x) The House Conference Report explained this idea:

"Thus it was made an unfair labor practice for a union to engage in a strike against employer A for the purpose of forcing that employer to cease doing business with employer B. Similarly it would not be lawful for a union to boycott employer A because employer A uses or otherwise deals in the goods of, or does business with employer B." H. R. Rep. No. 510, 80th Cong., 1st Sess., at 43 (1947).

(xi) The section contains a specific proviso, which was added in the 1959 amendment to the Act, that protects a "primary strike or primary picketing" that is "not otherwise unlawful." See n. 1, supra.

10. Thus there are two threads to S. 8 (b) (4) (B) that require disputed conduct to be classified as either "primary" or "secondary". And the tapestry that has been woven in classifying such conduct is among the labor law's most intricate. See Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen v. Jacksonville Terminal Co., (1969) 394 US 369. But here the normally difficult task of classifying union conduct is easy. As the Court of Appeals said, the "record amply justifies the conclusion that [Burns and the neutral sub-contractors] were subjected to coercion in the form of threats or walkouts, or both." 410 F2d at 9. And as the Board said, it is clear that this coercion was designed "to achieve the assignment of [the] disputed work" to operating engineers. 162 N. L. R. B., at 1621.

11. Local 825's coercive activity was aimed directly at Burns and the sub-contractors that were not involved in the dispute. The union engaged in a strike against these neutral employers for the specific, overt purpose of forcing them to put pressure on White to assign the job of operating the welding machine to operating engineers. Local 825 was not attempting to apply the full force of primary action by directing its efforts at all phases of Burns' normal operation as was the case in (1964) 376 US 492 and (1961) 366 US 677. It was instead using a sort of pressure that was unmistakably and flagrantly secondary. Labor Board v. Denver Building & Construction Trade Council, (1951) 341 US 675.

12. The more difficult task is to determine whether one of Local 825's objectives was to force Burns and the other neutrals to "cease doing business" with White as S. 8(b) (4) (B) requires. The Court of Appeals concluded that the union's objective was to force Burns "to use its influence with the sub-contractor to change the sub-contractor's conduct, not to terminate their relationship" and that this was not enough. That court read the statute as requiring that the union demand nothing short of a complete termination of the business relationship between the neutral and the primary employer. Such a reading is too narrow.

13. Some disruption of business relationships is the necessary consequence of the purest form of primary activity. These foreseeable disruptions are, however, clearly protected. Steelworkers (Carrier), (1964) 376 US at 492; Electrical Workers (General Electric), (1951) 366 US 667 at p. 682. Likewise, secondary activity could have such a limited goal and the foreseeable result of the conduct could be, while disruptive, so slight that the "cease doing business" requirement is not met.

14. Local 825's goal was not so limited nor were the foreseeable consequences of its secondary pressure slight. The operating engineers sought to force Burns to bind all the sub-contractors on the project to a particular form of job assignments. The clear implication of the demands was that Burns would be required either to force a change in White's policy or to terminate White's contract. The strikes shut down the whole project. If Burns was unable to obtain White's consent, Local 825 was apparently willing to continue disruptive conduct that would bring all the employers to their knees.

15. Certainly, the union would have preferred to have the employers capitulate to its demands; it wanted to take the job of operating the welding machines away from the Ironworkers. It was willing, however, to try to obtain this capitulation by forcing neutrals to compel White to meet union demands. To hold that this flagrant secondary conduct with these most serious disruptive effects was not prohibited by S. 8(b) (4) (B) would be largely to ignore the original congressional concern. NLRB v. Carpenters Dist. Council, 407 F2d 804, 806 (CA5 1969).

16. In addition to its argument that S. 8(b) (4) (B) does not cover its conduct, Local 825 argues that S. 8(b) (4) (D) provides the exclusive remedy. Clearly, S. 8(b) (4) (D) is, as the Board and Court of Appeals held, applicable. But that section is aimed at protecting "the employer trapped between the . . . claims" of rival unions. National Woodwork Mfgs. Assn., (1967) 386 US 612 at 625. Although S. 8(b) (4) (D) also applies to neutrals, the basic purpose is different from that of S. 8(b) (4) (B). The practices here were unfair under both sections and there is no indication that Congress intended either section to have exclusive application.

17. Since the Court of Appeals did not believe that S. 8(b) (4) (B) was applicable, it did not consider the propriety of the portion of Board's order relating to that section. But the order was not narrowly confined to the conduct involved here; so we must remand this case for the Court of Appeals to consider whether the order is necessary to further the goals of the Act. See Communications Workers v. NLRB, (1960) 362 US 479; NLRB v. Express Publishing Co., (1941) 312 US 426.

Mr. JUSTICE DOUGLAS, with whom Mr. JUSTICE STEWART concurs, dissenting.

18. If we take the words of the Act, rather than what the courts have interpolated, and lay them alongside the facts of the case, I do not see how we can fairly say that Local 825 engaged in an "unfair labor practice" within the meaning of S. 8(b) (4) (B). Local 825 did use coercion to get jobs from White for its workers. The Board termed it "causing a disruption of the business relationship among the various employees at the jobsite," which it held was within the ban of S. 8(b) (4) (B) since Local 825's aim, though not "a total cancellation of a business relationship" with White, constituted a "cease doing business" purpose. The Board said: "... an object of the Respondent was to force Burns to cease doing business with White, and to force Chicago Bridge and Poirier to cease doing business with Burns in order to compel Burns to cease doing business with White."

19. Yet as the Trial Examiner found "... Respondent never indicated it wanted White off the job—it wanted to harass White to gain compliance with its requests. Nor was any demand made upon Burns to cease doing business with White. . . . All Respondent wanted was the work, not a substitution of contractors nor a termination of contractual relationships between the contractors."

20. Our question turns not on the findings of fact but on the question of law which emerges, whether what was done had as its purpose to induce the general contractor and sub-contractor to "cease doing business" with White.

We held in (1951) 341 US 675 at p. 688, that an effort "to force" a sub-contractor in the position of White "off the job" satisfied the "cease doing business" test though that purpose was not the exclusive one. A strike to achieve that end, we held in Electrical Workers v. Labor Board, (1951) 341 US 694 at p. 700, also brought the coercive means within the same ban. And in (1964) 376 US 492 at p. 496, we held that a union on strike against its employer, Carrier, violated the "cease doing business" ban, when it picketed at an entrance used exclusively by railroad personnel "to induce the railroad to cease providing freight service to Carrier for the duration of the strike."

21. The case here is plainly different. The aim was not to freeze out White or to close him down for an hour or for the duration. It was merely to get the work, whose assignment he controlled, for members of Local 825. The case is therefore the classical jurisdictional conflict covered by S. 8(b) (4) (D) which makes "forcing or requiring any employer to assign particular work to employees in a particular labor organization" an unfair labor practice.

22. The Board properly issued a cease-and-desist order concerning the jurisdictional dispute condemned by S. 8

(b) (4) (D). The fact that (D) may be involved does not necessarily mean that (B) may not also be involved, as the two are not "mutually exclusive." Local 5, United Assoc. of Journeymen, 137 N. L. R. B. 828, 832.* But where the facts show only the jurisdictional dispute condemned by S. 8 (b) (4) (D) and no plan to close down White either permanently or for a day or even an hour, we should not only hold that S. 8(b) (4) (B) is not satisfied. We should also hold that (D) cannot do service for (B) where there is no element of "ceasing" to do business present.

Reversed and Remanded.

‡ (A) Constitution of India, Art. 14 — Equal protection of law — Case from America — Education Board requiring members to be freeholders — Equal protection clause is violated. (Constitution of America, Fourteenth Amendment).

The requirements of a State Statute that members of county boards of education be freeholders, violates the equal protection clause of the Constitution, as measured by the traditional test of whether the challenged classification rests on grounds wholly irrelevant to the achievement of a valid State objective.

Michael Meltsner, for Appellants;
 Alfred L. Evans, Jr., for Respondent.

SUMMARY

A class action by a Negro school-child and her father against members of the board of education of Taliaferro County, Georgia, the jury commissioners, and certain grand jurors, was instituted in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Georgia, challenging the constitutionality, on the ground of racial discrimination, of Georgia's constitutional and statutory procedure whereby the county board of education, consisting of five freeholders, was selected by the grand jury, which, in turn, was drawn from a jury list compiled by the county jury commission. Under Georgia law, the State Superior Court Judge of the county appointed the jury commissioners and was authorized to exclude anyone he deemed not "discreet," and the jury commissioners were authorized to eliminate from grand jury service anyone they found not "upright" and "intelligent." The relief sought by the plaintiffs included an injunction against enforcement of the provisions by which the board of education and grand jury were selected, and a declaration that such provisions were void on their face and as applied. After an evidentiary hearing which showed underrepresentation of Negroes on the grand jury list, the three-judge District Court adjourned for one month to enable the defendants to correct the situation, and a new list was prepared and a Negro was selected to fill a vacancy on the board of education. Thereafter, the District Court declined to hold the Georgia laws invalid on their face, found that Negroes had been systematically excluded from grand juries through token inclusion, but concluded that the new grand jury list was not unconstitutional (290 F Supp 648).

On direct appeal by the plaintiffs, the Supreme Court of the United States vacated the District Court's judgment, and remanded the cause. In an opinion by Stewart, J., expressing the unanimous view of the court, it was held that (1) the provisions of Georgia law conferring discretion on county officials in the selection of jury commissioners and prospective grand jurors were not unconstitutional on their face as providing the officials an opportunity to discriminate on the basis of race, the procedure not being inherently unfair or necessarily incapable of administration without regard to race, and the challenged provisions not referring to race, (2) the District Court had erred in upholding the new grand jury list since the jury officials had failed to overcome the prima facie case of discrimination established by evidence showing that Negroes comprised only 37 per cent. of the 304-member list, whereas about 60 per cent. of the county population was Negro, that of 178 persons disqualified by the jury commissioners for lack of "intelligence" or "uprightness", 171 were Negro, and that 225 persons who were unknown to the commissioners and who constituted about 9 per cent. of the population of the county were eliminated from consideration because of lack of information, and (3) the requirement under Georgia law that members of county boards of education be freeholders violated the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, there being no showing of any rational state interest underlying the freeholder requirement.

OPINION OF THE COURT

Mr. JUSTICE STEWART delivered the opinion of the Court.

1. This case, a companion to Carter v. Jury Comm'n of Greene County, (1969) 24 L Ed 2d 549, involves a challenge to the constitutionality of the system used in many counties of Georgia to select juries and school boards. The basic statutory scheme at issue is this. The county board of education consists of five freeholders. (i) It is selected by the grand jury, (ii) which in turn is drawn from a jury list selected by the six-member county jury commission. (iii). The commissioners are appointed by the judge of the state superior court for the circuit in which the county is located. (iv)

2. Some 2,500 to 3,000 people live in Taliaferro County, Georgia, of whom about 60% are Negroes. (v) The county

(iv) Ga Code Ann Ss. 59-101 (1965). Prior to 1966 the superior court judges were elected by all the voters in the State, but now they are elected by the voters of the circuits over which they have jurisdiction. See Ga Const, Art. VI, S. III, P. II, Ga Code Ann S. 2-3802 (Supp 1968); Stokes v. Fortson, 234 F Supp 575.

(v) In its brief Georgia informs us that its Department of Public Health estimates that Taliaferro County now has about 1,500 Negro and 1,000 white citi-

school system consists of a grammar school and a high school, and all the students at both schools are Negroes, every white pupil having transferred elsewhere.(vi) Sandra and Calvin Turner, a Negro school child and her father who reside in that county, brought this class action against the members of the county board of education, the jury commissioners, and three named white grand jurors.(vii) Their complaint alleged that the board of education consisted entirely of white people; that it had been selected by a predominantly white grand jury, which in turn had been selected by the jury commissioners, all of whom were white people. The complaint charged that the board of education had deprived the Negro school children of text-books, facilities, and other advantages; also that the Turners and other Negro citizens had sought unsuccessfully to communicate their dissatisfaction to the board of education.

zens. According to the 1960 federal census, the county had a population of 3,370, of whom 2,096 were Negroes and 1,273 white people. U. S. Dept. of Commerce, Bureau of the Census, 1960 Census of Population, Vol. I, pt. 12, p. 12-83.

(vi) This state of affairs has arisen following litigation attacking the county's former dual school system. Prior to the fall of 1965 Taliaferro County had used one school building for Negroes and the other for whites. In that year, after 87 Negro pupils sought transfers to a desegregated school, the superintendent, knowing the white school would be closed, arranged for the transfer of the white pupils, at public expense, to public schools in adjoining counties. A three-judge District Court declared the arrangement illegal, placed the Taliaferro County school system in receivership under the State's superintendent of schools, and instructed him to prepare a plan that would allow those Negroes who wanted to transfer to a desegregated school the opportunity to do so. Turner v. Goolsby, 255 F Supp 724. It is undisputed that some white pupils now attend a private institution in the county. In addition, the appellants suggest that white children continue to attend public schools in neighbouring counties. Efforts to combine districts to avoid an all-Negro school system in Taliaferro County have proved unsuccessful.

[1] (vii) The District Court struck the grand jurors as parties defendant for failure of the appellants to state as against them a claim upon which relief could be granted. The appellants did not appeal from that portion of the judgment below, and the motion of the appellee grand jurors to dismiss the appeal as to them is granted.

3. According to the appellants, the members of the county grand jury, on which white people were perennially overrepresented and Negroes underrepresented, chose only white people as members of the board of education pursuant to the Georgia constitutional and statutory provisions governing the school-board selection. The complaint attacked those provisions as accounting for both the exclusion of Negroes and non-freeholders from the board of education, and for the merely token inclusion of Negroes on the grand juries. The appellants sought (1) an injunction prohibiting enforcement of the Georgia constitutional and statutory provisions by which the board of education and grand jury were selected; (2) a declaration that the provisions were void on their face and as applied; (3) a further declaration that the various positions on the board of education, grand jury, and jury commission were vacant; (4) the appointment of a receiver for the school system and a special master for the selection of the grand jurors; and (5) $500,000 in ancillary damages.

4. A three-judge District Court was convened pursuant to 28 USC Ss. 2281 and 2284, and conducted extensive evidentiary hearings. The evidence showed that whenever a jury commissioner thought a voter from his area of the county qualified as a potentially good juror, he offered the name for consideration to his fellow commissioners; if all agreed, the name went on the master jury list. No name of a county resident was placed on the list unless he was personally known to at least one of the jury commissioners. The commissioners looked for "people that we felt would be capable of interpreting proceedings of court and . . . render[ing] a just verdict. . . ." The state superior court judge had instructed them to put Negroes on the list. Following the compilation of the list, the commissioners "picked the ones we thought were the very best people in the county" and put them on the grand-jury list. The superior court judge then drew the names of the grand jurors at random in open court. Only he could excuse from grand-jury service those whose names he drew; and he denied that Negroes were ever excused out of turn, or on account of their race.

5. At its first hearing, held in January 1968, the District Court voiced its concern that only 11 Negroes had found their way to the 130-member grand-jury list. The court adjourned for one month to enable the defendants to remedy the situation. It noted that two vacancies had opened up on the board of education and that, although the board had held an interim election, the grand jury had not yet confirmed the new members. The court suggested that "[i]f those two men would willingly stand aside the other members might select two outstanding Negro citizens . . . to go on the Board." The court also advised counsel for the defendants to explain the law of jury discrimination to his clients, and expressed the hope that the jury commissioners would be "generous" in their recomposition of the panel.

6. At the adjourned hearing in February, it appeared that three days after the first hearing the State superior court judge had discharged the county grand jury and directed the jury commissioners to recompose the jury list. Working from the voter registration list at the last general election, (viii) the commissioners had prepared a new grand-jury list containing the names of 44 Negroes and 77 white people. From this list the superior court judge drew the names that led to the impaneling of a new grand jury of 23 members, of whom only six were Negroes. Meanwhile the board of education had elected a Negro and a white man to fill the two vacancies, and the new grand jury had confirmed the new members in their offices.

7. Following these developments, the District Court declined to invalidate on their face either the various provisions governing the school-board and grand-jury selections, or the freeholder requirement for school-board membership. It found that at the commencement of suit Negroes had been systematically excluded from the grand juries through token inclusion, but it concluded that the new grand-jury list, drawn following the January hearing, was not unconstitutional. Turner v. Fouche, 290 F Supp 648.(ix)

8. Subsequently the District Court entered a final judgment permanently enjoining the defendant jury commissioners and their successors from systematically excluding Negroes from the Taliaferro County grand-jury system. The appellants, complaining of the court's failure to hold the challenged provisions

(viii) Georgia has used the voter registration lists rather than the books of the tax receiver since our decision in Whitus v. Georgia, 385 US 545, 17 Law Ed 2d 599, 87 S Ct 643.

(ix) The District Court found that the appellants' claim that the board of education had deprived the Negro school children of text-books, facilities, and other advantages failed for want of proof. The court also declined to reach the appellants' claim for ancillary damages, leaving this question to single-judge inquiry. No issue concerning these rulings is presented on the appeal.

of Georgia law invalid on their face and as applied, took a direct appeal to this Court pursuant to 28 USC S. 1253, and we noted probable jurisdiction, (1968) 393 US 1078=21 Law Ed 2d 770=89 S Ct 863.(x)

(x) We reject the appellees' suggestion that we lack jurisdiction to entertain an appeal from the District Court on the theory that a court of three judges was not required under 28 USC S. 2281 because the appellants sought to enjoin only the acts of county officials. The jury commissioners and members of the board of education were "functioning pursuant to a Statewide policy and performing a State function," Moody v. Flowers, 387 US 97, 102, 18 Law Ed 2d 643, 647, 87 S Ct 1544; cf. Spielman Motor Sales Co. v. Dodge, 295 US 89, 92-95, 79 Law Ed 1322, 1324, 1325, 55 S Ct 678; and see Dusch v. Davis, 387 US 112, 114, 18 Law Ed 2d 656, 658, 87 S Ct 1554; Sailors v. Bd. of Educ., 387 US 105, 107, 18 Law Ed 2d 650, 652, 87 S Ct 1549. The appellants cannot be denied a three-judge court below and direct review here simply because Georgia chooses to denominate as "local" or "county" the officials to whom it has entrusted the administration of the challenged constitutional and statutory provisions. Rorick v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 307 US 208, 212, 83 Law Ed 1242, 1244, 59 S Ct 808; cf. City of Cleveland v. United States, 323 US 329, 332, 89 Law Ed 274, 278, 65 S Ct 280.

Under Georgia law Taliaferro County may replace the constitutional and statutory arrangement by which the grand jury elects the board of education with the direct election of the board by the qualified voters of the county upon the enactment of a local or special law by the legislature and its approval in a referendum by a majority of the qualified voters. Ga Const, Art. VIII, S. V, P. 2; Ga Code Ann S. 2-6802 (Supp 1968). But Georgia does not suggest that so many counties have taken advantage of this provision that the present selection of the board by the grand jury in effect amounts to a local option.

The appellees also propose a distinction between attacks on statutes and attacks upon the results of their administration, and urge that the appellants' case comes within the latter category. But this argument overlooks the line, delineated by our past decisions, that falls between a petition for injunction on the ground of the unconstitutionality of a statute, either on its face or as applied, which requires a three-judge court, and a petition seeking an injunction on the ground of the unconstitutionality of the result obtained by the use of a statute not attacked as unconstitutional. Louis-

9. The appellants urge that the constitutional and statutory scheme by which the Taliaferro County grand jury selects the board of education is unconstitutional on its face. They point to the discretion of the State superior court judge to exclude anyone he deems not "discreet" from appointment to the jury commission, (xi) and of the jury commissioners to eliminate from grand-jury service anyone they find not "upright" and "intelligent." (xii) These provisions, the

Similarly, we reject the appellees' contention, ancillary to their basic attack on our jurisdiction, that the three-judge court was improperly convened because of the insubstantiality of the appellants' challenge to the Georgia laws. Swift & Co. v. Wickham, 382 US 111, 115, 15 Law Ed 2d 194, 198, 86 S Ct 258; Idlewild Bon Voyage Liquor Corp. v. Epstein, 370 US 713, 715, 8 Law Ed 2d 794, 796, 82 S Ct 1294 (per curiam); California Water Service Co. v. Further, the District Court properly entertained the question whether the constitutional and statutory complex, even if not invalid on its face, was unconstitutionally administered. Without regard to whether that issue was one by itself warranting a three-judge court, see Ex parte Bransford, supra; Currie, The Three-Judge District Court in Constitutional Litigation, 32 U Chi L Rev 1, 37-50, it related to the appellants' claim that Georgia's school-board selection procedure was unlawful on its face. appellants say, provide the county officials an opportunity to discriminate exercised both before and after the commencement of this litigation. It is argued that the terms are so vague as to leave the judge and jury commissioners at large in the exercise of discretion, with their decisions "unguided by statutory or other guidelines." Only by excising the challenged terms from Georgia's laws, it is urged, can the jury discrimination revealed in the record of this case be eliminated.

10. Such arguments are similar to those advanced in (1969) 24 Law Ed 2d 549. Our decision in that case fairly controls disposition of the contentions here. Georgia's constitutional and statutory scheme for selecting its grand juries and boards of education is not inherently unfair, or necessarily incapable of administration without regard to race; the federal courts are not powerless to remedy unconstitutional departures from Georgia law by declaratory and injunctive relief. The challenged provisions do not refer to race; indeed, they impose on the jury commissioners the affirmative duty to supplement the jury lists by going out into the county and personally acquainting themselves with other citizens of the county whenever the jury lists in existence do not fairly represent a cross-section of the county's upright and intelligent citizens. (xiii)

(xiii) Ga Code Ann S. 59-106 (Supp 1968).

Our decisions in Avery v. Georgia, 345 US 559, 97 Law Ed 1244, 73 S Ct 891, and Whitus v. Georgia, 385 US 545, 17 Law Ed 2d 599, 87 S Ct 643, cannot aid the appellants. In Avery we reversed a judgment of conviction where the names of prospective petit jurors had been printed on differently colored tickets according to their race—white tickets for white people, and yellow tickets for Negroes. A State superior court judge drew the names from the jury box and handed them to the sheriff, who entrusted them to the court clerk for arranging the tickets and typing up the list of persons to be called to serve on the panel. We found that the use of the white and yellow tickets made it easier "for those to discriminate who are of a mind to discriminate," and that even if the judge had drawn the names without looking to see the color of the tickets, "opportunity was available to resort to [discrimination] at other stages in the selection process." 345 US, at 562, 97 Law Ed at 1248.

Whitus involved a refinement of the process we had condemned in Avery. In Whitus the jury commissioners made up the jury list from which both traverse and grand jurors were selected by refer-

11. But the appellants contend that even if the challenged provisions are not void on their face, they have been unconstitutional applied. The District Court found that prior to the commencement of suit Negroes had been excluded in the administration of the grand-jury system, and the appellees do not contest that finding here.(xiv) The District Court also concluded that the newly composed grand-jury list was constitutional, and the appellants challenge that ruling. Consideration of the issues thus presented requires a fuller statement of the events following the January hearing in the court below.

12. As noted above, after the District Court had held its first hearing, the state superior court judge discharged the grand jury then sitting and ordered the ence to the tax digest, which was segregated into sections—one with white sheets for white people and the other with yellow sheets for Negroes—and to an old jury list required by former law to be made up from the tax digest. We concluded that "[u]nder such a system the opportunity for discrimination was present," and on the record before us we could not say that opportunity "was not resorted to by the commissioners." 385 US, at 552, 17 Law Ed 2d at 605.

In both Avery and Whitus we noted without comment the "upright and intelligent" requirement for jury membership. 385 US, at 552, 17 Law Ed 2d at 605; 345 US, at 562, 97 Law Ed at 1248. In Avery we expressly commented that Georgia law did not authorize the use of the potentially discriminatory process under review. 345 US, at 562, 97 Law Ed at 1247. In both cases we struck down the white-and-yellow system, however varied in design, because of the obvious danger of abuse. See Williams v. Georgia, 349 US 375, 382, 99 Law Ed 1161, 1169, 75 S Ct 814. We dealt in both cases with a physical, even mechanical aspect of the jury-selection process that could have no conceivable purpose or effect other than to enable those so disposed to discriminate against Negroes solely on the basis of their race. It is evident that the challenged provisions now before us contain no such defect. The appellants cannot contend that the present requirements serve no rational function other than to afford an opportunity to State officials to discriminate against Negroes if they desire to do so.

(xiv) Indeed, at the oral argument before this Court, counsel candidly conceded: "There is no question but that Georgia's jury selection statute is capable of being improperly administered. There is no question but that in Taliaferro County, Georgia, it has been misadministered."

jury commissioners to draw up a new jury list. The commissioners obtained the list of all persons registered to vote in the county in the last general election—some 2,152 names. To assist in the identification of all the people on the list, the commissioners consulted with "three Negroes that [they] brought in to work with [them] one afternoon" From the list the commissioners eliminated 374 people for poor health and old age; 79 as under 21 years old;(xv) 93 as dead; 514 as away from the county most of the time but maintaining a permanent place of residence there; 48 who requested that they be removed from consideration; 225 about whom the commissioners could obtain no information; 33 as duplicated names; and 178 "as not conforming to the statutory qualifications for juries either because of their being unintelligent or because of their not being upright citizens."

13. The process of elimination left 608 names. The commissioners arranged the names in alphabetical order and placed every other one on the list of potential jurors. At this point for the first time the commissioners classified the remaining 304 people by race: 113 were Negro, 191 white people. From this list the commissioners drew two-fifths of the names by lot for the grand-jury list; a check revealed 44 Negroes and 77 white people. The state superior court judge drew from this group nine Negroes and 23 white people by lot. He excused nine, leaving a 23-member grand jury of whom only six were Negroes.(xvi) It was this grand jury that the District Court determined had been constitutionally impaneled.

14. After the February hearing of the District Court, and at that court's request, the commissioners classified by race the persons eliminated from the voter list in arriving at the 608 persons eligible for jury service. The classification revealed that 171 of those rejected as unintelligent or not upright were Negroes—96% of the total removed for that reason.(xvii) Although at the adjourned hearing the District Court recognized the potential for discrimination underlying the exclusion process, it did not reopen the matter following its receipt of the racial classification to consider the extraordinarily high percentage of Negroes eliminated as "unintelligent" or not "upright", or the large number of persons about whom the commissioners said they could obtain no information even though they were registered to vote in the county.

(xv) Although Georgia grants the franchise to its citizens at 18, Ga Const. Art. II, S. I, P. II, Ga Code Ann S. 2-702 (1948), the jury commissioners struck all persons under 21.

(xvi) At the adjourned hearing the superior court judge testified that he regularly excuses people from the traverse-jury lists as well as the grand-jury panel he draws in the courtroom. Whether the request to be excused was made in open court, in writing, or over the telephone, only the judge could excuse from grand-jury service those whose names he had drawn.

15. The appellants insist the District Court has erred. They say that since the grand jury selects the board of education, the situation must be viewed as one involving a distribution of voting power among the citizens of Taliaferro County in the manner of a voting apportionment case. A grand jury with only about 25% Negro membership, they say, constitutes the school-board "electorate" in a county whose population is about 60% Negro. The State must offer a compelling justification, it is argued, in support of its "fencing out" such a substantial proportion of the potential Negro "electors" in the county.

16. We do not find it necessary to consider the appellants' argument. Nor do we reach the premise upon which it rests—that the choice of the county board of education by the grand jury rather than delegates from local school boards turns the challenged procedure into an "election" for federal constitutional purposes.(xviii) For we think that even under long-established tests for racial discrimination in the composition of juries, the District Court erred in its determination that the new list before it had been properly compiled.

17. The undisputed fact was that Negroes comprised only 37% of the Taliaferro County citizens on the 304-member list from which the new grand jury was drawn. That figure contrasts sharply with the 60% of the representation that their percentage of the general Taliaferro County population would have led them to obtain in a random selection. In the absence of a countervailing explanation by the appellees, we cannot say that the underrepresentation reflected in these figures is so insubstantial as to warrant no corrective action by a federal court charged with the responsibility of enforcing constitutional guarantees.

(xvii) It also appeared that 191 of those stricken for poor health and old age were Negro (51%); 71 of those under 21 (90%); 263 of those away from the county (51%); and three who asked to be relieved from jury duty (6%).

(xviii) See Sailors v. Bd. of Educ., 387 US 105, 106, 18 Law Ed 2d 650, 652, 87 S Ct 1549.

18. Specifically, we hold that the District Court should have responded to the elimination of 171 Negroes out of the 178 citizens disqualified for lack of "intelligence" or "uprightness". On the record as presently constituted, it is impossible to say that this purge of Negroes from the roster of potential jurors did not contribute in substantial measure to the ultimate underrepresentation. The retention of these 178 citizens might well have produced a jury list of at least an equal percentage of Negroes and white people, instead of the highly disproportionate list that actually materialized.

19. A second factor should have called itself to the District Court's attention: the lack of information respecting the 225 citizens named on the county's voting list but unknown to the jury commissioners or their assistants. Entirely apart from the question whether the commissioners' failure to inquire into the eligibility of the 225 voters comported with their statutory duty to ensure that the jury list fairly represent a cross-section of the county's intelligent and upright citizens,(xix) the court should not have passed without response the commissioners' elimination from consideration for jury service of about 9% of the population of the entire county. In the face of the commissioners' unfamiliarity with Negroes in the community and the informality of the arrangement by which they sought to remedy the deficiency in their knowledge upon recompiling the jury list, we cannot assume that inquiry would not have led to the discovery of many qualified Negroes.

20. In sum, the appellants demonstrated a substantial disparity between the percentages of Negro residents in the county as a whole and of Negroes on the newly constituted jury list. They further demonstrated that the disparity originated, at least in part, at the one point in the selection process where the jury commissioners invoked their subjective judgment rather than objective criteria. The appellants thereby made out a prima facie case of jury discrimination, and the burden fell on the appellees to overcome it.(xx)

21. The testimony of the jury commissioners and the superior court judge that they included or excluded no one because of race did not suffice to overcome the appellants' prima facie case.(xxi) So far the appellees have offered no explanation for the overwhelming percentage of Negroes disqualified as not "upright" or "intelligent," nor for the failure to determine the eligibility of a substantial segment of the county's already registered voters. No explanation for this state of affairs appears in the record. The evidentiary void deprives the District Court's holding of support in the record as presently constituted. "If there is a 'vacuum' it is one which the State must fill, by moving in with sufficient evidence to dispel the prima facie case of discrimination."(xxii)

22. The appellants also urge that the limitation of school-board membership to freeholders violates the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.(xxiii) The District Court rejected this claim, finding no evidence before it "to indicate that such a qualification resulted in an invidious discrimina-

We reserve the question whether a State that for years has provided separate and inferior schools for Negroes may now disqualify them from jury service on the "impartial" ground of educational inadequacy, however defined. See Gaston County v. United States, 395 US 285, 297, 23 Law Ed 2d 309, 317, 89 S Ct 1720.

(xxiii) Georgia's contention that no appellant has standing to raise this claim is without merit. The appellant Calvin Turner is a freeholder, but the appellant Joseph Heath is not. Heath's motion to intervene was granted by the District Court for the express purpose of adding a party plaintiff to the case to ensure that the court could reach the merits of this issue. Georgia also argues that the question against any particular segment of the community, based on race or otherwise."

23. Subsequent to the ruling of the District Court, this Court decided Kramer v. Union Free School District, (1969) 395 US 621, 23 Law Ed 2d 583, 89 S Ct 1886, and Cipriano v. City of Houma, (1969) 395 US 701, 23 Law Ed 2d 647, 89 S Ct 1897. The appellants urge that those decisions require Georgia to demonstrate a "compelling" interest in support of its freeholder requirement for school-board membership. The appellees reply that Kramer and Cipriano are inapposite because they involved exclusions from voting, not from office-holding. We find it unnecessary to resolve the dispute, because the Georgia freeholder requirement must fall even when measured by the traditional test for a denial of equal protection: whether the challenged classification rests on grounds wholly irrelevant to the achievement of a valid state objective.(xxiv)

24. We may assume that the appellants have no right to be appointed to the Taliaferro County board of education.(xxv) But the appellants and the members of their class do have a federal constitutional right to be considered for public service without the burden of invidiously discriminatory disqualifications.(xxvi) The State may not deny to some the privilege of holding public office that it extends to others on the basis of distinctions that violate federal constitutional guarantees.(xxvii)

25. Georgia concedes that "the desirability and wisdom of 'freeholder' relation is not properly before us because the record is devoid of evidence that the freeholder requirement actually has operated to exclude anyone from the Taliaferro County board of education. But the appellant Heath's allegation that he is not a freeholder is uncontested, and Georgia can hardly urge that her county officials may be depended on to ignore a provision of state law.

quirements for State or county political office may indeed be open to question. . . . But apart from its contention that prior decisions of this Court foreclose any challenge to the constitutionality of such "freeholder" requirements—a contention we think ill-founded(xxviii)—the sole argument Georgia advances in support of its statute is that nothing in its constitution or laws specifies any minimum quantity or value for the real property the freeholder must own. Thus, says Georgia, anyone who seriously aspires to county school-board membership "would be able to obtain a conveyance of the single square inch of land he would require to become a 'freeholder.'"

26. If we take Georgia at its word, it is difficult to conceive of any rational state interest underlying its requirement. But even absent Georgia's own indication of the insubstantiality of its interest in preserving the freeholder requirement, it seems impossible to discern any interest the qualification can serve. It cannot be seriously urged that a citizen in all other respects qualified to sit on a school board must also own real property if he is to participate responsibly in educational decisions, without regard to whether he is a parent with children in the local schools, a lessee who effectively pays the property taxes of his lessor as part of his rent, or a state and federal taxpayer contributing to the approximately 85% of the Taliaferro County annual school budget derived from sources other than the board of education's own levy on real property.

27. Nor does the lack of ownership of realty establish a lack of attachment to the community and its educational values. However reasonable the assumption that those who own realty do possess such an attachment, Georgia may not rationally presume that that quality is necessarily wanting in all citizens of the county whose estates are less than freehold.(xxix) Whatever objectives Georgia seeks to obtain by its "freeholder" requirement must be secured, in this instance at least, by means more finely tailored to achieve the desired goal.(xxx) [Without excluding the possibility that other circumstances might present themselves in which a property qualification for office-holding could survive constitutional scrutiny, we cannot say, on the record before us, that the present freeholder requirement for membership on the county board of education amounts to anything more than invidious discrimination.

(xxviii) Language to such effect may be found in Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 US 303, 310, 25 Law Ed 664, 666. But the passage relied upon by Georgia is no more than dictum. Wisconsin*, 217 US 590, 54 Law Ed 895, 30 S Ct 694, is hardly apposite; there we dismissed an appeal for want of a meritorious question in a case where the appellant challenged a judgment of conviction arising from an indictment returned by a grand jury selected by commissioners required by statute to be freeholders.

Anthony G. Amsterdam, for Petitioners; H. Edgar Lentz, for Respondent.

SUMMARY

The defendants participated in an anti-Vietnam War demonstration in front of a United States Army recruiting station in downtown Baltimore, Maryland. As a result of their conduct in connection with this demonstration, they were prosecuted for disorderly conduct, tried before a jury in the Baltimore City Criminal Court, and convicted on the basis of the jury's general verdict of guilty. Among the trial judge's instructions to the jury was one which authorized them to return a guilty verdict if they found that the defendants had engaged in "the doing or saying or both of that which offends, disturbs, incites or tends to incite a number of people gathered in the same area." The Maryland Court of Special Appeals affirmed the convictions, rejecting the defendants' contention that their conduct was constitutionally protected under the First and Fourteenth Amendments (3 Md App 626, 240 A 2d 623), and the Maryland Court of Appeals denied certiorari.

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court reversed and remanded the case. In an opinion by Brennan, J., expressing the unanimous views of the court, it was held that (1) if the jury believed the prosecution's evidence, the defendants' convictions could constitutionally have rested on a finding that they sat or lay across a public sidewalk with the intent of fully blocking passage along it, or that they refused to obey police commands to stop obstructing the sidewalk in this manner and move on, but it was impossible to say that either of these grounds was the basis for the verdict, and it was equally likely that the verdict resulted merely because the defendants' views about the Vietnam War, though not constituting "fighting words," were offensive to some of the onlookers, and (2) since the defendants' convictions might have rested on an unconstitutional ground, they had to be set aside.

OPINION OF THE COURT

Mr. JUSTICE BRENNAN delivered the opinion of the Court.

A jury in Baltimore City Criminal Court convicted petitioners of violating Md Code Ann. Art. 27, S. 123 (1967), (i) which prohibits "acting in a disorderly manner to the disturbance of the public peace, upon any public street . . . in any [Maryland] city . . ." (ii) The prosecution arose out of a demonstration protesting the Vietnam War which was staged between 3 and shortly after 5 O'clock on the afternoon of March 28, 1966, in front of a United States Army recruiting station located on a downtown Baltimore street. The Maryland Court of Special Appeals rejected petitioners' contention that their conduct was constitutionally protected under the First and Fourteenth Amendments and affirmed their convictions. (1968) 3 Md App 626 = 240 A2d 623. The Court of Appeals of Maryland denied certiorari in an unreported order. We granted certiorari. (1969) 396 US 816

(i) The trial in the Criminal Court was de novo upon appeal from a conviction in the Municipal Court of Baltimore. The Criminal Court judge sentenced each petitioner to 60 days in jail and a $50 fine.

(ii) The statute was amended in 1968 but without change in the operative language involved in this case. See Md Code Ann. Art. 27, S. 123(c) (1969 Supp).

=24 Law Ed 2d 68=90 S Ct 109. We reverse.

2. The trial judge instructed the jury that there were alternative grounds upon which petitioners might be found guilty of violating S. 123. The judge charged, first, that a guilty verdict might be returned if the jury found that petitioners had engaged in "the doing or saying or both of that which offends, disturbs, incites or tends to incite a number of people gathered in the same area." The judge also told the jury that "[a] refusal to obey a policeman's command to move on when not to do so may endanger the public peace, may amount to disorderly conduct." (iii) So instructed, the jury returned a general verdict of guilty against each of the petitioners.

3. Since petitioners argue that their conduct was constitutionally protected, we have examined the record for ourselves. When "a claim of constitutionally protected right is involved, it

(iii) Both elements of the instruction were based on the Maryland Court of Appeals' construction of S. 123 in Drews v. Maryland, 224 Md 186, 192, 167 A2d 341, 343-344 (1961), vacated and remanded on other grounds, 378 US 547, 12 Law Ed 2d 1032, 84 S Ct 1900 (1964), reaffirmed on remand, 236 Md 349, 204 A2d 64 (1964), appeal dismissed and cert denied, 381 US 421, 14 Law Ed 2d 693, 85 S Ct 1576 (1965). The instruction was "that disorderly conduct is the doing or saying or both of that which offends, disturbs, incites or tends to incite a number of people gathered in the same area. It is conduct of such nature as to affect the peace and quiet of persons who may witness it and who may be disturbed or provoked to resentment because of it. A refusal to obey a policeman's command to move on when not to do so may endanger the public peace, may amount to disorderly conduct."

The trial judge refused to grant petitioners' request that the jury be charged to disregard any anger of onlookers that arose from their disagreement with petitioners' expressed views about Vietnam. For example, the Judge refused to instruct the jury that "if the only threat of public disturbance arising from the actions of these defendants was a threat that arose from the anger of others who were made angry by their disagreement with the defendants' expressed views concerning Viet Nam, or American involvement in Viet Nam, you must acquit these defendants. And if you have a reasonable doubt whether the anger of those other persons was occasioned by their disagreement with defendants' views on Viet Nam, rather than by the conduct of defendants in sitting or staying on the street, you must acquit these defendants."

'remains our duty . . . to make an independent examination of the whole record.' Cox v. Louisiana (I), (1965) 379 US 536, 545 n 8 = 13 Law Ed 2d 471, (478)=85 S Ct 453. We shall discuss first the factual situation that existed until shortly before 5 o'clock on the afternoon of the demonstration, since the pattern of events changed after that time. There is general agreement regarding the nature of the events during the initial period.

4. Baltimore law enforcement authorities had advance notice of the demonstration, and a dozen or more police officers and some United States marshals were on hand when approximately 15 protesters began peacefully to march in a circle on the sidewalk in front of the station. The marchers carried or wore signs bearing such legends as: "Peasant Emancipation, Not Escalation," "Make Love not War," "Stop in the Name of Love," and "Why are We in Viet Nam?" The number of protesters increased to between 30 and 40 before the demonstration ended. A crowd of onlookers gathered nearby and across the street. From time to time some of the petitioners and other marchers left the circle and distributed leaflets among and talked to persons in the crowd. The lieutenant in charge of the police detail testified that he "overheard" some of the marchers debate with members of the crowd about "the Viet Cong situation," and that a few in the crowd resented the protest; [o]ne particular one objected very much to receiving the circular." However, the lieutenant did not think that the situation constituted a disturbance of the peace. He testified that "[a]s long as the peace was not disturbed I wasn't doing anything about it."

5. Clearly the wording of the placards was not within that small class of "fighting words" which, under Chaplinsky v. New Hampshire, (1942) 315 US 568, 574=86 Law Ed 1031, (1036)=62 S Ct 766, are "likely to provoke the average person to retaliation, and thereby cause a breach of the peace," nor is there any evidence that the demonstrators' remarks to the crowd constituted "fighting words." Any shock effect caused by the placards, remarks, and peaceful marching must be attributed to the content of the ideas being expressed, or to the onlookers' dislike of demonstrations as a means of expressing dissent. But "[i]t is firmly settled that under our Constitution the public expression of ideas may not be prohibited merely because the ideas are themselves offensive to some of their hearers," Street v. New York, (1969) 394 US 576, (592)=22 Law Ed 2d 572, (585)=89 S Ct 1354; see also (1965) 379 US 536=13 Law Ed 2d 471=85 S Ct 453, (supra); Edwards v. South Carolina, (1963) 372 US 229=9 Law Ed 2d 697=83 S Ct 680; Terminiello v. Chicago, (1949) 337 US 1=93 Law Ed 1131=69 S Ct 894, or simply because bystanders object to peaceful and orderly demonstrations. Plainly nothing that occurred during this period could constitutionally be the grounds for conviction under S. 123. Indeed, the State makes no claim that S. 123 was violated then.

6. We turn now to the events which occurred shortly before and after 5 o'clock. The petitioners had left the marchers after half past 3 to enter the recruiting station. There they had attempted to persuade the sergeant in charge to permit them to display their anti-war materials in the station or in its window fronting on the sidewalk. The sergeant had told them that Army regulations forbade him to grant such permission. The six thereupon staged a sit-in on chairs and a couch in the station.(iv) A few minutes before 5 o'clock the sergeant asked them to leave, as he wanted to close the station for the day. When petitioners refused, the sergeant called on United States marshals who were present in the station to remove them. After deputizing several police officers to help, the marshals undertook to eject the petitioners.(v)

7. There is irreconcilable conflict in the evidence as to what next occurred. The prosecution's witnesses testified that the marshals and the police officers "escorted" the petitioners outside, and that the petitioners thereupon sat or lay down, "blocking free passage of the sidewalk." The police lieutenant in charge stated that he then took over and three times ordered the petitioners to get up and leave. He testified that when they remained sitting or lying down he had each of them picked up bodily and removed to a patrol wagon. In sharp contrast, defense witnesses said that each petitioner was thrown bodily out the door of the station and landed on his back, that petitioners were not positioned so as to block the sidewalk completely, and that no police command was given to them to move away; rather, on the contrary, that as some of them struggled to get to their feet, they were held down by the police officers until they were picked up and thrown into the patrol wagon. The evidence is clear, however, that while

(iv) Petitioners' conduct in the station is not at issue in this case, since the State did not prosecute them for their conduct in that place.

(v) The local police officers were deputized as marshals because their local police powers did not extend to the federally operated recruiting station.

petitioners were on the sidewalk, they began to sing "We Shall Overcome" and that they were surrounded by other demonstrators carrying anti-war placards. Thus, petitioners remained obvious participants in the demonstration even after their expulsion from the recruiting station. (vi) A crowd of 50-150 people, including the demonstrators, was in the area during this period.

8. The reaction of the onlookers to these events was substantially the same as that to the earlier events of the afternoon. The police lieutenant added only that two uniformed marines in the crowd appeared angry and that a few other bystanders "were debating back and forth about Bomb Hanoi and different things and I had to be out there to protect these people because they wouldn't leave." Earlier too, however, some of the crowd had taken exception to the petitioners' protest against the Vietnam war.

9. On this evidence, in light of the instructions given by the trial judge, the jury could have rested its verdict on any of a number of grounds. The jurors may have found that petitioners refused "to obey a policeman's command to move on when not to do so [might have endangered] the public peace." Or they may have relied on a finding that petitioners deliberately obstructed the sidewalk, thus offending, disturbing and inciting the bystanders.(vii) Or the jurors may have credited petitioners' testimony that they were thrown to the sidewalk by the police and held there, and yet still have found them guilty of violating S. 123 because their anti-Vietnam protest amounted to "the doing or saying . . . of that which offends, disturbs, incites, or tends to incite a number of people gathered in the same area." Thus, on this record, we find that petitioners may have been found guilty of violating S. 123 simply because they advocated unpopular

(vi) The defense evidence indicated that petitioners were on the sidewalk after their removal from the recruiting station for only five minutes. A prosecution witness testified that they were there for 15 or 20 minutes.

(vii) Maryland states in its brief, at 41-42, that "[o]bstructing the sidewalk had the legal effect under these circumstances of not only constituting a violation . . . S. 123 . . . but also of Article 27, S. 121 of the Maryland Code, obstructing free passage." Had the State wished to ensure a jury finding on the obstruction question, it could have prosecuted petitioners under S. 121, which specifically punishes "[a]ny person who shall wilfully obstruct or hinder the free passage of persons passing along or by any public street or highway . . ."

ideas. Since conviction on this ground would violate the Constitution, it is our duty to set aside petitioners' convictions.

10. Stromberg v. California, (1931) 283 US 359=75 Law Ed 1117=51 S Ct 532=73 ALR 1484, is the controlling authority. There the jury returned a general verdict of guilty against an appellant charged under a California statute making it an offense publicly to display a red flag (a) "as a sign, symbol or emblem of opposition to organized government," (b) "as an invitation or stimulus to anarchistic action," or (c) "as an aid to propaganda that is of a seditious character." This Court held that clause (a) was unconstitutional as possibly punishing peaceful and orderly opposition to government by legal means and within constitutional limitations. The Court held that, even though the other two statutory grounds were severable and constitutional, the conviction had to be reversed, because the verdict did not specify the ground upon which it rested. As there were three purposes set forth in the statute, and the jury were instructed that their verdict might be given with respect to any one of them, independently considered, it is impossible to say under which clause of the statute the conviction was obtained. If any one of these clauses, which the State court has held to be separable, was invalid, it cannot be determined upon this record that the appellant was not convicted under that clause [The necessary conclusion from the manner in which the case was sent to the jury is that, if any of the clauses in question is invalid under the Federal Constitution, the conviction cannot be upheld.] (1931) 283 US 359 at p. 368=75 Law Ed 1117 at p. 1122. See also Williams v. North Carolina, (1942) 317 US 287=87 Law Ed 279=63 S Ct 207=143 ALR 1273; (supra), (1949) 337 US 1=93 Law Ed 1131=69 S Ct 894; Fates v. United States, (1967) 354 US 298=1 Law Ed 2d 1356=77 S Ct 1064; (1969) 394 US 576=22 Law Ed 572=89 S Ct 1354 (supra).

11. On this record, if the jury believed the State's evidence, petitioners' convictions could constitutionally have rested on a finding that they sat or lay across a public sidewalk with the intent of fully blocking passage along it or that they refused to obey police commands to stop obstructing the sidewalk in this manner and move on. See, e. g., Cox v. Louisiana (I), (1965) 379 US 536 at pp. 554-555=13 Law Ed 2d 471 at pp. 483, 484; Shuttlesworth v. Birmingham, (1965) 382 US 87, 90-91=15 Law Ed 2d 176, (179, 180)=86 S Ct 211. It is impossible to say, however, that either of these grounds was the basis for the verdict. On the contrary, so far as we can tell,

SUMMARY

A non-profit, mutual insurance corporation, chartered in 1962 by the Maryland Legislature for the purpose of insuring the accounts of share-holders of member savings and loan associations, instituted an action to recover federal income taxes in the United States District Court for the District of Maryland, attacking the constitutionality of the cutoff date of September 1, 1957, found in Section 501 (c) (14) (B) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (26 USC S. 501 (c) (14) (B)), which grants an exemption from the payment of income taxes to organizations similar to the plaintiff corporation, but only if they were organized before the cutoff date provided in the statute. The District Court allowed recovery, holding that the statutory cutoff date was arbitrary and violative of the plaintiff's right to due process under the Fifth Amendment (308 F Supp 761).

On direct appeal, the United States Supreme Court reversed. In a per curiam opinion expressing the view of eight members of the court, it was held that the cutoff date provided in S. 501 (c) (14) (B) was not arbitrary or unconstitutional, since Congress had a rational basis relating to the protection of federal programs for its refusal to broaden the exemption by extending the cutoff date.

HARLAN, J., would have set the case for argument on the ground that the issues deserved plenary consideration.

OPINION OF THE COURT

Per Curiam.

This is a direct appeal by the United States from a district court judgment holding unconstitutional S. 501 (c) (14) (B) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, 26 USC S. 501 (c) (14) (B), on the ground that it arbitrarily discriminates between Maryland Savings-Share Insurance Corporation (MSSIC), the appellee, and other similar non-profit, mutual insurers.

2. MSSIC was established by the Maryland Legislature with the object of insuring the accounts of shareholders of member savings and loan associations. Although first chartered in 1962, it seeks the benefit of S. 501 (c) (14) (B), which exempts from tax non-profit corporations such as petitioner but only if organized before September 1, 1957. (i) MSSIC's position is that September 1, 1957 is an arbitrary and unconstitutional cutoff date which must be excised from the section, leaving the section applicable to all corporations of the same nature as itself regardless of the date of their creation. We do not agree.

3. Prior to 1951, all savings and loan associations were exempt from taxation of income derived from their operations. Also exempt were non-profit corporations which insured the savings banks. In 1951, the savings bank exemption was discontinued, on findings that the industry had developed to a point comparable to that of commercial banks. The exemption for insurers, however, was continued, provided they were already in existence as of September 1, 1951. See Revenue Act of 1951, S. 313 (b), 65 Stat 490; S Rep No. 781, 82d Cong., 1st Sess, 2 US Code, Cong & Ad News 1969, 1991-1997 (1951). As of that date, three private insurers fell within the scope of the section—two of them in Massachusetts and one in Connecticut. Then, in 1956, a fourth such corporation was organized in Ohio, and four years later Congress moved the cutoff date forward to September 1, 1957. Act of April 22, 1960, 74 Stat 54.

4. In 1963, a similar bill, HR 3297, 88th Cong, 1st Sess, which would have moved the cutoff date forward to January 1, 1963, for the benefit of MSSIC, passed the House, but was never reported out by the Senate Finance Committee. Testimony before the committee indicated that continued forward movement of the date might lead to proliferation of state insurers that could hinder the operations and threaten the financial stability of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation. See Hearing before Senate Committee on Finance on H. R. 3297, 88th Cong., 2d Sess., 9-10 (1964).

5. Against this background, the District Court's invalidation of S. 501 (c) (14) (B) was error. The fact that Cong-

(i) Internal Revenue Code S. 501 (c) (14) (B), 26 USC S. 501 (c) (14) (B) provides:

"(B) Corporations or associations without capital stock organized before September 1, 1957, and operated for mutual purposes and without profit for the purpose of providing reserve funds for, and insurance of shares or deposits in—

"(i) domestic building and loan associations,

"(ii) co-operative banks without capital stock organized and operated for mutual purposes and without profit, or

"(iii) mutual savings banks not having capital stock represented by shares."

ress enacts a statute containing a "grandfather clause," which exempts from the general income-tax certain corporations organized prior to a specified date, does not of itself indicate that Congress has made an arbitrary classification. Cf. Stanley v. Public Utilities Comm'n, (1935) 295 US 76 = 79 L Ed 1311 = 55 S Ct 628; Sperry and Hutchinson Co. v. Rhodes, (1911) 220 US 502 = 55 L Ed 561 = 31 S Ct 490; Watson v. Maryland, (1910) 218 US 173 = 54 L Ed 987 = 30 S Ct 644; Sampere v. New Orleans, (1928) 166 La 776 = 117 So 827, aff'd per curiam, (1929) 279 US 812 = 73 L Ed 971 = 49 S Ct 262. Normally, a legislative classification will not be set aside if any state of facts rationally justifying it is demonstrated to or perceived by the courts. McDonald v. Board of Election Comm'rs, (1969) 394 US 802, 809 = 22 L Ed 2d 739, 745 = 89 S Ct 1404; McGowan v. Maryland, (1961) 366 US 420, 426 = 6 L Ed 2d 393, 399 = 81 S Ct 1101; Standard Oil Co. v. City of Marysville, (1929) 279 US 582, 586-587 = 73 L Ed 856, 860 = 49 S Ct 430. See also (1910) 218 US 173 supra, at 178 = 54 L Ed 987 at 990 = 30 S Ct 644. Here the legislative history of H. R. 3297 affirmatively discloses that Congress had a rational basis for declining in 1963 to broaden the exemption by extending the cutoff date of S. 501 (c) (14) (B). Just as a State may provide that after a specified date newly established common carriers must obtain state approval before entering into business so as to prevent proliferation of such carriers and excessive use of the State's highways, see Stanley v. Public Utilities Comm'n, supra, similarly Congress does not exceed its power to tax nor does it violate the Fifth Amendment when it refuses to exempt from tax newly formed corporations, the multiplication of which might burden otherwise valid federal programs. (ii)

Having noted probable jurisdiction by order of October 12, 1970, we now reverse the judgment of the District Court. So ordered.

(ii) The District Court's reliance on Mayflower Farms, Inc. v. Ten Eyck, 297 US 266, 80 L Ed 675, 56 S Ct 457 (1936), was misplaced, since, according to the Court in that case, the legislative record contained no affirmative showing of a valid legislative purpose. We thus need not pass upon the continuing validity of Mayflower's holding. We also find unpersuasive MSSIC's remaining argument that it is an instrumentality of the State and hence entitled to exemption from federal taxation under the doctrine of intergovernmental immunity and under S. 115 (a) (1) of the Code, 26 USC § 115 (a) (1). The District Court properly rejected these arguments.

Mr. JUSTICE HARLAN, considering that the issues in this case are deserving of plenary consideration, would set the case for argument.

SUMMARY
An indigent who had been convicted in an Illinois court for petty theft, and who had received the maximum sentence of 1 year's imprisonment and a $500 fine plus $5 in court costs, filed a post-conviction petition with the sentencing judge to vacate that portion of the judgment of conviction which, as permitted by state statute, directed that if the defendant was in default of the monetary payment at the expiration of his imprisonment term, he should remain in jail to "work off" the monetary obligations at the statutory rate of $5 per day. The trial court denied the petition, and the Supreme Court of Illinois affirmed, holding that there was no denial of equal protection of the law by continuation of imprisonment upon the indigent's inability to pay the fine and court costs (41 Ill 2d 511, 244 NE2d 197, 31 ALR3d 920).
On appeal, the Supreme Court of the United States vacated the judgment and remanded the case. In an opinion by Burger, Ch. J., expressing the view of seven members of the court, it was held that there was an impermissible discrimination, violative of the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, when the aggregate imprisonment of an indigent state prisoner exceeded the maximum period fixed by the statute governing the offense involved, and resulted directly from an involuntary non-payment of a fine or court costs.
HARLAN, J., concurred in the result, but stated that the matter should be governed by due process standards rather than by equal protection standards, and that when a state declared that its penal interest could be satisfied by a fine or a forfeiture in combination with a jail term, the administrative inconvenience in a judgment collection procedure providing for instalment payments did not, as a matter of due process, justify sending to jail or extending the jail term of individuals who possessed no accumulated assets.

BLACKMUN, J., did not participate.

OPINION OF THE COURT

Mr. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER delivered the opinion of the Court.

1. This appeal from Illinois presents an important question involving a claim of discriminatory treatment based upon financial inability to pay a fine and court costs imposed in a criminal case. The narrow issue raised is whether an indigent may be continued in confinement beyond the maximum term specified by statute because of his failure to satisfy the monetary provisions of the sentence. We noted probable jurisdiction (i) and set the case for oral argument with Morris v. Schoonfield, (1970) 26 L Ed 2d 773.

2. On August 15, 1967, appellant was convicted of petty theft and received the maximum sentence provided by state law; one year imprisonment and a $500 fine (ii). Appellant was also taxed $5 in court costs. The judgment directed, as permitted by statute that if appellant was in default of the payment of the fine and court costs at the expiration of the one-year sentence, he should remain in jail pursuant to S. 1-7. (k) of the Ill Crim Code to "work off" the monetary obligations at the rate of $5 per day (iii). Thus, whereas the maximum

(ii) Ill Rev Stat 1967, c 38, p 13-I, which proscribes theft of property not from the person and not exceeding $150 in value.

(iii) Section 1-7(k) of the Criminal Code of 1961 provides:

"Working out Fines.

"A judgment of a fine imposed upon an offender may be enforced in the same manner as a judgment entered in a civil action; provided, however, that in such judgment imposing the fine the court may further order that upon non-payment of such fine, the offender may be imprisoned until the fine is paid, or satisfied at the rate of $5.00 per day of imprisonment; provided, further, however, that no person shall be imprisoned under the first proviso hereof for a longer period than 6 months."

1971 U.S.S.C./5 X G—15A

term of imprisonment for petty theft was one year, the effect of the sentence imposed here required appellant to be confined for 101 days beyond the maximum period of confinement fixed by the statute since he could not pay the fine and costs of $505.

3. On November 29, 1967, appellant, while still an inmate in the county jail, petitioned the sentencing judge (iv) to vacate that portion of the order requiring that he remain imprisoned upon expiration of his one year sentence because of non-payment of the fine and court costs. Appellant alleged that he was indigent at all stages of the proceedings, was without funds or property to satisfy the money portion of the sentence and that he would "be able to get a job and earn funds to pay the fine and costs if... released from jail upon expiration of his one year sentence." The State did not dispute the factual allegations (v) and the trial court granted the State's motion to dismiss the petitioner "... for the reason that [appellant] was not legally entitled at that time to the relief requested ... because he still has time to serve on his jail sentence and when that sentence has been served financial ability to pay a fine might not be the same as it was of the date [of sentencing]."

4. Appeal was taken directly to the Supreme Court of Illinois, which appears to have rejected any suggestion by the trial court that the petition was premature and wert on to decide appellant's constitutional claim on the merits. It held that "there is no denial of equal protection of the law when an indigent defendant is imprisoned to satisfy payment of the fine." People v. Williams (1969) 41 Ill 2d 511, 517 = 244 NE 2d 197, 200 (vi).

(iv) The post-conviction petition was filed pursuant to S. 72 of the Illinois Civil Practice Act.

(v) Parenthetically we note that appellant was unable to post pretrial bail of $2,000 and was therefore required to remain in custody.

On May 23, 1968 appellant completed service of his one year sentence less time off for time spent in custody prior to trial. He then began serving the period of incarceration required to satisfy the $505 fine and cost. On May 28, 1968 however, the Supreme Court of Illinois, on motion of appellant's counsel, set bail pending appeal at $500; the 10 % deposit was posted by the Civil Legal Aid Service. Appellant is free on bond, and since he has not yet served the full period of incarceration to satisfy the fine and costs the case is not moot.

5. In addition to renewing the constitutional argument rejected by the state courts, appellant advances a host of other claims(vii) which, in light of our disposition, we find unnecessary to reach or decide. Appellant challenges the constitutionality of S. 1-7 (k) of the Illinois Criminal Code and argues primarily that the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment prohibits imprisonment of an indigent beyond the maximum term authorized by the statute governing the substantive offense when that imprisonment flows directly from his present inability to pay a fine and court costs. In response the State asserts its interest in the collection of revenues produced by payment of fines and contends that a "work off" system, as provided by S. 1-7 (k), is a rational means of implementing that policy. That interest is substantial and legitimate but for present purposes it is not unlike the State's interest in collecting a fine from an indigent person in circumstances where no imprisonment is included in the judgment. The State argues further that the statute is not constitutionally infirm simply because the legislature could have achieved the same result by some other means. With that general proposition we have no quarrel but that generality does not resolve the issue.

6. As noted earlier, appellant's incarceration beyond the statutory maximum stems from separate albeit related reasons: nonpayment of a fine

(vi) The Supreme Court of Illinois dealt exclusively with that portion of the unpaid sum stemming from the fine. Its opinion contains no discussion of the constitutionality of incarceration arising from failure to pay court costs even though the issue was tendered.

(vii) Appellant also argues that every instance of default imprisonment violates either the Equal Protection and/or Due Process Clause (s) of the Fourteenth Amendment. He also asserts that the $5.00 per diem figure is unreasonable and irrational.

and nonpayment of court costs. We find that neither of those grounds can constitutionally support the type of imprisonment imposed here, but we treat the fine and costs together because disposition of the claim on fines governs our disposition on costs (viii).

7. The custom of imprisoning a convicted defendant for nonpayment of fines dates back to medieval England(ix) and has long been practiced in this country. At the present time all States and the Federal Government have statutes authorizing incarceration under such circumstances. Most States permit imprisonment beyond the maximum term allowed by law, and in some there is no limit on the length of time one may serve for nonpayment (x). While neither the antiquity of a practice nor the fact of steadfast legislative and judicial adherence to it through the centuries insulates it from constitutional attack, these factors should be weighed in the balance(xi). Indeed, in prior cases this Court seems to have tacitly approved incarceration

(x) The National Legal Aid and Defender Association, as Amicus Curiae, has filed a brief containing an extensive appendix which includes all the state statutes with helpful annotations. We have reproduced this portion of their brief as an appendix to this opinion. The corresponding federal statutes are 18 USC Ss. 3565, 3569 (1964). "(I)f a thing has been practised for two hundred years by common consent, it will need a strong case for the Fourteenth Amendment to affect it." (Jackman v. Rosenbaum, 260 US 22, 31, (67 L Ed 107, 112, 43 S Ct 9) (1922)."

to "work off" unpaid fines. See Hill v. United States, 298 US 460, 80 L Ed 1283, 56 S Ct 760 (1936); Ex parte Jackson, (1877) 96 US 727 = 24 L Ed 877(xii).

8. The need to be open to reassessment of ancient practices other than those explicitly mandated by the Constitution is illustrated by the present case since the greatly increased use of fines as a criminal sanction has made nonpayment a major cause of incarceration in this country(xiii). Default imprisonment has traditionally been justified on the grounds that it is a coercive device to ensure obedience to the judgment of the court(xiv). Thus, commitment for failure to pay has not been viewed as a part of the punishment or as an increase in the penalty; rather, it has been viewed as a means of enabling the court to enforce collection of money which a convicted defendant was obligated by the sentence to pay. The additional imprisonment, it has been said, may always be avoided by payment of the fine(xv).

9. We conclude that when the aggregate imprisonment exceeds the maximum period fixed by the statute and results directly from an involuntary nonpayment of a fine or court costs we are confronted with an impermissible discrimination which rests on ability to pay, and accordingly, we reverse.

10. Griffin v. Illinois, (1956) 351 US 12 = 100 L Ed 891 = 76 S Ct 585 = 55 ALR 2d 1055 marked a significant effort to alleviate discrimination against those who are unable to meet the costs of litigation in the administration of criminal justice. In holding the failure to provide an indigent criminal defendant with a trial transcript at public expense in order to prosecute te an appeal was a violation of the Equal Protection Clause, this Court declared that "(t)here can be no equal justice where the kind of trial a man gets depends on the amount of money he has." Id., at 19 = 100 L Ed at 899 = 55 ALR 2d 1055. In the years since the Griffin case the Court has had frequent occasion to reaffirm allegiance to the basic command that justice be applied equally to all persons (xvi). Subsequent decisions of this Court have pointedly demonstrated that the passage of time has heightened rather than weakened the attempts to mitigate the disparate treatment of indigents in the criminal process (xvii). Applying the teaching of the Griffin case here, we conclude that an indigent criminal defendant may not be imprisoned in default of payment of a fine beyond the maximum authorized by the statute regulating the substantive offense.

(xii) We note, however, that neither in those cases, nor at any other time, were the constitutional issues flowing from lack of funds presented to this Court for resolution.

11. A State has wide latitude in fixing the punishment for state crimes. Thus, appellant does not assert that Illinois could not have appropriately fixed the penalty, in the first instance, at one year and 101 days. Nor has the claim been advanced that the sentence imposed was excessive in light of the circumstances of the commission of this particular offense. However, once the State has defined the outer limits of incarceration necessary to satisfy its penological interests and policies, it may not then subject a certain class of convicted defendants to a period of imprisonment beyond the statutory maximum solely by reason of their indigency.

12. It is clear, of course, that the sentence was not imposed upon appellant because of his indigency but because he had committed a crime. And the Illinois statutory scheme does not distinguish between defendants on the basis of ability to pay fines. But, as we said in (1956) 351 US 12 = 100 L Ed 891 supra, "a law nondiscriminatory on its face may be grossly discriminatory in its operation." Id., at 17, n 11 = 100 L Ed at 898 = 55 ALR 2d 1055. Here the Illinois statute as applied to Williams works an invidious discrimination solely because he is unable to pay the fine. On its face the statute extends to all defendants an apparently equal opportunity for limiting confinement to the statutory maximum simply by satisfying a money judgment. In fact, this is an illusory choice for Williams or any indigent who, by definition, is without funds(xviii). Since only a convicted person, with access to funds can avoid the increased imprisonment the Illinois statute in operative effect exposes only indigents to the risk of imprisonment beyond the statutory maximum. By making the maximum confinement contingent upon one's ability to pay, the State has visited different consequences on two categories of persons since the result is to make incarceration in excess of the statutory maximum applicable only to those without the requisite resources to satisfy the money portion of the judgment(xix).

13. The mere fact that an indigent in a particular case may be imprisoned for a longer time than is a non-indigent convicted of the same offense does not, of course, give rise to a violation of the Equal Protection Clause. Sentencing judges are vested with wide discretion in the exceedingly difficult task of determining the appropriate punishment in the countless variety of situations which appear. The Constitution permits qualitative differences in meting out punishment and there is no requirement that two persons convicted of the same offense receive identical sentences. Thus it was that in Williams v. New York, (1949) 337 US 241, 247, 93 L Ed 1337, 1342, 69 S Ct 1079 we said "The belief no longer prevails that every offense in a like legal category calls for an identical punishment without regard to the past life and habits of a particular offender."

(xix) We wish to make clear that nothing in our decision today precludes imprisonment for willful refusal to pay a fine or court costs. See Ex parte Smith, 97 Utah 280, 92 P 2d 1098 (1939). Cf. Illinois v. Allen, 397 US 337, 25 L Ed 2d 353, 90 S Ct 1057 (1970).

14. Nothing in today's decision curtails the sentencing prerogative of a judge because, as noted previously, the sovereign's purpose in confining an indigent beyond the statutory maximum is to provide a coercive means of collecting or "working out" a fine. After having taken into consideration the wide range of factors underlying the exercise of his sentencing function, nothing we now hold precludes a judge from imposing on an indigent, as on any defendant, the maximum penalty prescribed by law.

15. It bears emphasis that our holding does not deal with a judgment of confinement for non-payment of a fine in the familiar pattern of alternative sentence of "$30 or 30 days." We hold only that a State may not constitutionally imprison beyond the maximum duration fixed by statute a defendant who is financially unable to pay a fine. A statute permitting a sentence of both imprisonment and fine cannot be parlayed into a longer term of imprisonment than is fixed by the statute since to do so would be to accomplish indirectly as to an indigent that which cannot be done directly. We have no occasion to reach the question whether a State is precluded in any other circumstances from holding an indigent accountable for a fine by use of penal sanction. We hold only that the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment requires that the statutory ceiling placed on imprisonment for any substantive offense be the same for all defendants irrespective of their economic status(xx).

(xx) What we have said regarding imprisonment for involuntary nonpayment of fines applies with equal force to imprisonment for involuntary nonpayment of court costs. Although the actual amounts prescribed for fines and court costs reflect quite different considerations, see generally, Litigation Costs: The Hidden Barrier to the Indigent, 56 Geo LJ 516 (1968), the purpose of incarceration appears to be the same in both instances: ensuring compliance with a judgment. Thus inability to pay court costs cannot justify imprisoning an indigent beyond the maximum statutory term since the Equal Protection Clause prohibits expanding the maximum term specified

16. The State is not powerless to enforce judgments against those financially unable to pay a fine; indeed, a different result would amount to inverse discrimination since it would enable an indigent to avoid both the fine and imprisonment for nonpayment whereas other defendants must always suffer one or the other conviction.

17. It is unnecessary for us to canvass the numerous alternatives to which the State by legislative enactment—or judges within the scope of their authority—may resort in order to avoid imprisoning an indigent beyond the statutory maximum for involuntary nonpayment of a fine or court costs. Appellant has suggested several plans, some of which are already utilized in some States, while others resemble those proposed by various studies(xxi). The State is free to choose from among the variety of solutions already proposed and, of course, it may devise new ones.(xxi)

18. We are not unaware that today's holding may place a further burden on States in administering criminal justice. Perhaps a fairer and more accurate statement would be that new cases expose old infirmities which apathy or absence of challenge have permitted to stand. But the constitutional imperatives of the Equal Protection Clause must have priority over the comfortable convenience of the status quo. "Any supposed administrative inconvenience would be by the statute simply because of inability to pay.

(xxi) Appellant has suggested that the fine and costs could be collected through an installment plan as is currently used in several States. E. g., Cal Pen Code S. 1205; Mich Stats Ann S 28.1075 (1959); Pa Stat Ann tit 19, Ss. 953-956 (1964). See also A. B. A. Minimum Standards for Criminal Justice, Sentencing Alternatives and Procedures (Approved Draft, 1968) S. 27 (b), pp. 117-123.

Appellant also suggests that the trial judge could impose a parole requirement on an indigent that he do specified work during the day to satisfy the fine. Cf. 50 USC App 456.

See also Model Penal Code S. 7.02 (3) (a). (Proposed Official Draft 1965).

(xxii) Cf. United States v. Wade, 388 US 218, 239, 18 L Ed 2d 1149, 1164, 87 S Ct 1926 (1967).

minimal since... [the unpaid portion of the judgement] could be reached through the ordinary processes of garnishment in the event of default". Rinaldi v. Yeager, (1966) 384 US 305, 310 = 16 L Ed 2d 577, 581 = 86 S Ct 1497.

19. Nothing we hold today limits the power of the sentencing judge to impose alternative sanctions permitted by Illinois law; the definition of such alternatives, if any, lies with the Illinois courts. We therefore vacate the judgment appealed from and remand to the Supreme Court of Illinois for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

Mr. Justice Blackmun took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

APPENDIX

STATE STATUTORY PROVISIONS CONCERNING INCARCERA- TION FOR FAILURE TO PAY FINE

xx xx xx SEPARATE OPINION

MR. JUSTICE HARLAN, concurring in the result.

20. I concur in today's judgment, but in doing so wish to dissociate myself from the "equal protection" rationale employed by the Court to justify its conclusions.

21. The "equal protection" analysis of the Court is, I submit, a "wolf in a sheep's clothing," for that rationale is no more than a masquerade of a supposedly objective standard for 'subjective' judicial judgment as to what state legislation offends notions of "fundamental fairness." Under the rubric of "equal protection" this Court has in recent times effectively substituted its own "enlightened" social philosophy for that of the legislature no less than did in the older days the judicial adherents of the now discredited doctrine of "substantive" due process. I, for one, would prefer to judge the legislation before us in this case in terms of due process, that is to determine whether it arbitrarily infringes a constitutionally protected interest of this petitioner. Due process, as I noted in my dissenting opinion in Poe v. Ullman, (1961), 367 US 497, 522 = 6 L Ed 2d 989, 1007 = 81 S Ct 1752 is more than merely a procedural safeguard; it is also a "bulwar[k] . . . against arbitrary legislation.' " Hurtado v. California, 110 US 516, 532 = 28 L Ed 232, 237 = 4 S Ct 111. See Flemming v. Nestor, (1960) 363 US 603 = 4 L Ed 2d 1435 = 80 S Ct 1367 and my dissenting opinion in Shapiro v. Thompson, (1969) 394 US 618, 655 = 22 L Ed 2d 600, 627 = 89 S Ct 1322.

22. The matrix of recent "equal protection" analysis is that the "rule that statutory classifications which either are based upon certain 'suspect' criteria, or affect 'fundamental rights' will be held to deny equal protection unless justified by a 'compelling' governmental interest," Shapiro v. Thompson, supra, (1969) 394 US 618 at 658 = 22 L Ed 2d 600 at 629 (Harlan, J., dissenting). In Shapiro, Harper v. Board of Elections, (1966) 383 US 663, 680 = 16 L Ed 2d 169, 180 = 86 S Ct 1079, and Williams v. Rhodes, (1968) 393 US 23, 41 = 21 L Ed 2d 24, 37 = 89 S Ct 5. I attempted, in dissent, to expose the weakness in the precedential and jurisprudential foundation upon which the current doctrine of "equal protection" sits. See also (1956) 351 US 12, 29, at 34-36 = 100 L Ed 891, 904, at 906-908 = 76 S Ct 585 = 55 ALR 2d 1055 (dissenting opinion); Douglas v. California, (1963) 372 US 353, 360 = 9 L Ed 2d 811, 816 = 83 S Ct 814 (dissenting opinion). I need not retrace the views expressed in these cases, except to object once again to this rhetorical preoccupation with "equalizing" rather than analyzing the 'rationality' of the legislative distinction in relation to legislative purpose.

23. An analysis under due process standards, correctly understood, is, in my view, more conducive to judicial restraint than an approach couched in slogans and ringing phrases, such as "suspect" classification or "invidious" distinctions, or "compelling" state interest, that blur analysis by shifting the focus away from the nature of the individual interest affected, the extent to which it is affected, the rationality of the connection between legislative means and purpose, the existence of alternative means for effectuating the purpose, and the degree of confidence we may have that the statute reflects the legislative concern for the purpose that would legitimately support the means chosen. Accordingly, I turn to the case at hand.

24. The State of Illinois has made the unquestionably legitimate determination that the crime of petty larceny should be punished by a jail term of days, up to one year, in combination with a fine of a dollar amount. Anyone who, in the judgment of the trial judge, should receive the stiffest penalty known to Illinois law for this crime may, if he possesses funds, satisfy the demands of the criminal law by paying the fine superimposed on the jail term. If he cannot pay his debt to society, it is surely not unequal, but, to the contrary, most equal, that some substitute sanction be imposed lest the individual of means be subjected to a harsher penalty than one who is impoverished. If equal protection implications of the Court's opinion were to be fully realized, it would require that the consequence of punishment be comparable for all individuals; the State would be forced to embark on the impossible task of developing a system of individualized fines, such that the total disutility of the entire fine, or the marginal disutility of the last dollar taken, would be the same for all individuals. Cf. Michelman, Foreword: On Protecting the Poor Through the Fourteenth Amendment, 83 Harv L Rev 7 (1969). Today's holding, and those in the other so-called "equal protection" decisions, e.g., (1963) 372 US 353 = 9 L Ed 2d 811 = 83 S Ct 814 Anders v. California, (1967) 386 US 738 = 18 L Ed 2d 493 = 87 S Ct 1396 offer no pretense to actually providing such equal treatment. It cannot be argued that the requirement of counsel on appeal is the right to the most skilled advocate who is theoretically at the call of the defendant of means. However desirable and enlightened a theory of social and economic equality may be, it is not a theory that has the blessing of the Fourteenth Amendment. Not "every major social ill in this country can find its cure in some constitutional 'principle; and... this Court (is not equipped to) take the lead' in promoting reform when other branches fail to act. The Constitution is not a panacea for every blot upon the public welfare, nor should this Court, ordained as a judicial body, be thought of as a general haven for reform movements." See Reynolds v. Sims, (1964) 377 US 533, 589, at 624, 625, = 12 L

25. The reluctance of the Court to carry its "equal protection" approach to its most logical consequences accents what I deem to be the true considerations involved in this case, namely, whether the legislature has impermissibly affected an individual right or has done so in an arbitrary fashion. Cf. Michelman, supra. While legislation usually will not be deemed arbitrary if its means can arguably be supposed to be related to a legitimate purpose, see my dissenting opinion in (1969) 394 US 618 = 22 L Ed 2d 600, supra, and generally the burden of demonstrating the existence of a rational connection between means and ends is not borne by the State, see (1960) 363 US 603 = 4 L Ed 2d 1435 = 80 S Ct 1367 and my dissenting opinion in Swann v. Adms., (1967) 385 US 440 447 = 17 L Ed 2d 501, 506 = 87 S Ct 569 the presumption of regularity that comes with legislative judgment is one that is not equally acceptable in all instances, blind to the nature of the interests affected.

26. Thus, as a due process matter I have subscribed to the admonition of Skinner v. Oklahoma, (1942) 316 US 535, 541 = 86 L Ed 1655, 1660 = 62 S Ct 1110, where the Court cautioned that "there are limits to the extent to which the presumption of constitutionality can be pressed" where a "basic liberty" is concerned. (1942) 316 US 535, 541, = 86 L Ed 1655, 1660 = 62 S Ct 1110. See my dissenting opinion in 1961 367 US 497, 522, at 543 = 6 L Ed 2d 989, 1007, at 1019 = 81 S Ct 1752. The same view point was implicit in (1960) 363 US 603 = 4 L Ed 2d 1435 = 80 S Ct 1367 where the Court remarked the breadth of latitude to be accorded to a legislative judgment when the interest was that of a "noncontractual benefit under a social welfare program." 363 US, at 611, 4 L Ed 2d at 1445. Thus while that "interest . . . is of sufficient substance to fall within the protection from arbitrary governmental action afforded by the Due Process Clause," when that interest is the "withholding of a noncontractual benefit under a social welfare program. . . .", we must recognize that the Due Process Clause can be thought to interpose a bar only if the statute manifests a patently arbitrary classification, utterly lacking in rational justification." 363 US, at 611, 4 L Ed 2d at 1445.

27. The implication of Fleming is, however, that the deference owed to legislative judgment is not the same in all cases. Thus legislation that regulates conduct but incidentally affects freedom of expression may, although it is a rational choice to effectuate a legitimate legislative purpose, be invalid because it imposes a burden on that right, or because other means, entailing less imposition, may exist. See NAACP v. Alabama, (1958) 357 US 449 = 2 L Ed 2d 1488 = 78 S Ct 1163 Lovell v. City of Griffin (1938) 303 US 444, 82 L Ed 949, 58 S Ct 666 Garner v. Louisiana, (1961) 368 US 157, 185 = 7 L Ed 2d 207, 226 = 82 S Ct 248 (concurring opinion); United States v. O'Brien, (1968) 391 US 367, 388, 20 L Ed 2d 672, 686, 88 S Ct 1673 (concurring opinion).

28. These decisions, by no means dispositive of the case before us, unquestionably show that this Court will squint hard at any legislation that deprives an individual of his liberty—his right to remain free. Cf. my dissenting opinion in (1961) 367 US 497, 6 L Ed 2d 989 supra. While the interest of the State, that of punishing one convicted of crime is no less substantial, cf. concurring opinion of Mr. Justice Brennan in Illinois v. Allen, (1970) 397 US 337 = 25 L Ed 2d 353 = 90 S Ct 1057 the "balance which our Nation, built upon postulates of respect for the liberty of the individual, has struck between that liberty and the demands of organized society" (1961) 367 US 337 at 542 = 6 L Ed 2d 989 at 1019, "having regard for what history teaches" is such that the State's interest here does not outweigh that of the individual's such as to bring into full play the application of the usual salutary presumption of rationality.

29. The State, by this statute, or any other statute fixing a penalty of a fine, has declared its penological interest—deterrence, retribution and rehabilitation — satisfied by a monetary payment, and disclaimed, as serving any penological purpose in such cases, a term in jail. While there can be no question that the State has a legitimate concern with punishing an individual who cannot pay the fine, there is serious question in my mind whether, having declared itself indifferent to fine and jail, it can consistently with due process refrain from offering some alternative for payment on the installment plan.

30. There are two conceivable justifications for not doing so. The most obvious and likely justification for the present statute is administrative convenience. Given the interest of the individual affected, I do not think a State may, after declaring itself indifferent between a fine and jail, rely on the convenience of the latter as a constitutionally acceptable means for enforcing its interest, given the existence of less restrictive alternatives. Cf. Mullane v. Central Hanover Trust Co. (1950) 339 US 306 = 94 L Ed 865 = 70 S Ct 652.

31. The second conceivable justification is that the jail alternative serves a penological purpose that cannot be served by collection of a fine over time. It is clear that having declared itself satisfied by a fine, the alternative of jail to a fine serves neither a rehabilitative or retributive interest. The question is, then, whether the requirement of a lumpsum payment can be sustained as a rational legislative determination that deterrence is effective only when a fine is exacted at once after sentence and by lump sum, rather than over a term. This is a highly doubtful proposition, since, apart from the mere fact of conviction and the humiliation associated with it and the token of punishment evidenced by the forfeiture, the deterrent effect of a fine is apt to derive more from its pinch on the purse than the time of payment.

32. That the Illinois statutes represent a considered judgment, evincing the belief that jail is a rational and necessary trade-off to punish the individual who possesses no accumulated assets seems most unlikely, since the substitute sentence provision, phrased in terms of a judgment collection statute, does not impose a discretionary jail term as an alternative sentence, but rather equates days in jail with a fixed sum. Thus, given that the only conceivable justification for this statute that would satisfy due process—that a lump-sum fine is a better deterrent than one payable over a period of time — is the one that is least likely to represent a considered legislative judgment, I would hold these statutes invalid.

33. The conclusion I reach is only that when a State declares its penal interest may be satisfied by a fine or a forfeiture in combination with a jail term the administrative inconvenience in a judgment collection procedure does not, as a matter of due process, justify sending to jail or extending the jail term of individuals who possess no accumulated assets.* I would reserve the question as to whether a considered legislative judgment that a lump-sum fine is the only effective kind of forfeiture for deterrence and that the alternative must be jail. It follows, a fortiori, that no conclusion reached herein casts any doubt on the conventional "$30 or 30 days" if the legislature decides that should be the penalty for the crime. Note, Discriminations Against the Poor and the Fourteenth Amendment, 81 Harv L Rev 435 (1967). Such a statute evinces the perfectly rational determination that some individuals will be adequately punished by a money fine, and others, indifferent to money—whether by virtue of indigency or other reasons — can only be punished by a jail term. Still more patently nothing said herein precludes the State from punishing ultimately by jail individuals who fail to pay fines or imprisoning immediately individuals who, in the judgment of a court, will not undertake to pay their fines.

34. On these premises I join the Court's judgment vacating appellant's sentence and remanding to the Supreme Court of Illinois to afford it an opportunity to instruct the sentencing judge as to any permissible alternatives under Illinois law. It may be that Illinois courts have the power to fashion a procedure pending further consideration of this problem by the state legislature. Cf. Rosado v. Wyman, (1970) 397 US 397, 421, 422 =

*In this regard, unlike the Court, I see no distinction between circumstances where the State through its judicial agent determines that effective punishment requires less than the maximum prison term plus a fine, or a fine alone, and the circumstances of this case.

25 L Ed 2d 442, 460, 461, 90 S Ct 1207 and my concurring opinion in Welsh v. United States, (1970) 26 L Ed 2d 308, 321.

BLACKMUN, BLACK, DOUGLAS, MARSHALL AND BRENNAN JJ.

William P. Rogers, Secretary of State, Appellant v. Aldo Mario Bellei, Respondent.

(No. 24) Decided on 5-4-1971.

†Constitution of India, Arts. 5, 10 — Citizenship Act (1955), Ss. 4, 6, 9 — (U. S. A. Case) Constitution of United States of America — Fourteenth Amendment — (U. S. A.) Immigration and Nationality Act (1952). (8 U.S.C. S. 1401 (b) S. 301 (a) (7) and (b)) — Citizenship by birth and by naturalisation — Birth outside United States in Italy — Mother American national and father Italian — Prerequisites of S. 301 (b) not complied with — Such person loses American Citizenship — S. 301 (b) is constitutionally valid.

(Per Majority (Blackmun J. and 4 more)):

'B' a person born in Italy of an American mother and Italian father stayed in Italy for almost twenty-three years with occasional visits to United States for short periods. By virtue of S. 301 (a) (7) he had become a national and a citizen of the United States. Under the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution (U.S.A.) all persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are Citizen of the United States. 'B' being a foreign born child of an American parent not having complied with the condition of 5 years residence in the United States between the ages 14 and 28 under section 301 (b) had forfeited his American citizenship. 'B' therefore moved the Court that (1) the Secretary of the State be enjoined from carrying out and enforcing S. 301 (b) and (2) a declaratory judgment that S. 301 (b) is unconstitutional and that (3) he is and has always been a native born United States Citizen.

Held, that the American law accepts the English concepts that the place of birth governs citizenship status except as modified by Statute. The definition envisaged by the 14th Amendment does not apply to acquisition of Citizenship by being born abroad of an American parent. Case of a person born abroad of an American parent and such other cases not covered by 14th Amendment were left to proper congressional action. The imposition of the condition of compulsory residence in the United States under S. 301 (b) was an exercise of the congressional power and the conditions imposed are neither unreasonable, arbitrary nor unlawful. Section 301 (b) has no constitutional infirmity. (Paras 31, 35, 46)

Per Contra (Douglas J. and 3 more):

The tests of "arbitrary" "unreasonable" or "unfair" nature do not appear in the Constitution. The Constitution written for ages, cannot rise or fall with a Court's notion of what is unfair, unreasonable or arbitrary. B no doubt had not acquired citizenship by birth but he certainly had acquired it by naturalisation. All means of acquiring citizenship which are dependant upon congressional enactment are forms of naturalisation. Once a person has become a citizen either by birth or by naturalisation he cannot be thrown out from citizenship unless he himself wants to give it up. Congressional enactment by imposing conditions of residence on a naturalized citizen cannot take away his citizenship. S. 301 (b) is therefore unconstitutional. (Paras 49, 50, 58)

OPINION OF THE COURT

Mr. Justice BLACKMUN delivered the opinion of the Court.

2. Under constitutional challenge here, primarily on Fifth Amendment due process grounds, but also on Fourteenth Amendment grounds, is
S. 301 (b) of the Immigration and Nationality Act of June 27, 1952, 66
Stat 163, 236, 8 USC S. 1401 (b).

3. Section 301 (a) of the Act,
8 USC S. 1401 (a), defines those persons who "shall be nationals and citizens of the United States at birth." Paragraph (7) of S. 301 (a) includes in that definition a person born abroad
"of parents one of whom is an alien, and the other a citizen of the United States" who has met specified conditions of residence in this country. Section 301 (b), however, provides that one who is a citizen at birth under
S. 301 (a) (7) shall lose his citizenship unless, after age 14 and before age 28, he shall come to the United States and be physically present here continuously for at least five years. We quote the statute in the margin (i).

4. The plan thus adopted by Congress with respect to a person of this classification was to bestow citizenship at birth but to take it away upon the person's failure to comply with a post-age-14 and pre-age-28 residential requirement. It is this deprivation of citi-

(i) "Sec. 301. (a) The following shall be nationals and citizens of the United States at birth:

"(1) a person born in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof;

.....
"(7) a person born outside the geographical limits of the United States and its outlying possessions of parents one of whom is an alien, and other a citizen of the United States who, prior to the birth of such person, was physically present in the United States or its outlying possessions for a period or periods totaling not less than ten years, at least five of which were after attaining the age of fourteen years; Provided. . .

"(b) Any person who is a national and citizen of the United States at birth under paragraph (7) of sub-section (a) of this section, shall lose his nationality and citizenship unless he shall come to the United States prior to attaining the age of twentythree years and shall immediately following zenship, once bestowed, that is under attack here.

5. The facts are stipulated:

1. The appellee, Aldo Mario Bellei (hereinafter the plaintiff), was born in Italy on December 22, 1939. He is now 31 years of age.

2. The plaintiff's father has always been a citizen of Italy and never has acquired United States citizenship. The plaintiff's mother, however, was born in Philadelphia in 1915 and thus was a native-born United States citizen. She has retained that citizenship. Moreover, she has fulfilled the requirement of S. 301 (a) (7) for physical presence in the United States for 10 years, more than five of which were after she attained the age of 14 years. The mother and father were married in Philadelphia on the mother's 24th birthday. March 14, 1939. Nine days later, on March 23, the newly-weds departed for Italy. They have resided there ever since.

3. By Italian law the plaintiff acquired Italian citizenship upon his birth in Italy. He retains that citizenship. He also acquired United States citizenship at his birth under RS S. 1993, as amended by the act of May 24, 1934, S. 1, 48 Stat 797, then in effect. (ii) That version of the statute, any such coming be continuously physically present in the United States] for at least five years: Provided, That such physical presence follows the attainment of the age of fourteen years and precedes the age of twenty-eight years.

"(c) Sub-section (b) of this section shall apply to a person born abroad subsequent to May 24, 1934. . . ."

Section 301 (a) (7) was amended November 6, 1966, by Pub L 89-770, 80 Stat 1322, by way of additions to the proviso, omitted above; these have no relevancy here. Pub L 85-316, S. 16, 71 Stat 639, 644, 8 USC S. 1401b, enacted in September 1957, provides that absences of less than 12 months in the aggregate "shall not be considered to break the continuity of [the] physical presence" required by S. 301 (b).

(ii) "Any child hereafter born out of the limits and jurisdiction of the United States, whose father or mother or both at the time of birth of such child is a citizen of the United States, is declared to be a citizen of the Uni-as does the present one, contained a residence condition applicable to a child born abroad with one alien parent.

4. The plaintiff resided in Italy from the time of his birth until recently. He currently resides in England, where he has employment as an electronics engineer with an organization engaged in the NATO defense program.

5. The plaintiff has come to the United States five different times. He was physically present here during the following periods:

April 27 to July 31, 1948

July 10 to October 5, 1951

June to October 1955

December 18, 1962 to February 13, 1963

May 26 to June 13, 1965.

On the first two occasions, when the plaintiff was a boy of eight and 11, he entered the country with his mother on her United States passport. On the next two occasions, when he was 15 and just under 23, he entered on his own United States passport and was admitted as a citizen of this country. His passport was first issued on June 27, 1952. His last application approval, in August 1961, contains the notation "Warned abt. 301 (b)." The plaintiff's United States passport was periodically approved to and including December 22, 1962, his 23rd birthday.

6. On his fifth visit to the United States, in 1965, the plaintiff entered with an Italian passport and as an alien visitor. He had just been married and he came with his bride to visit his maternal grandparents.

ted States; but the rights of citizenship shall not descend to any such child unless the citizen father or citizen mother, as the case may be, has resided in the United States previous to the birth of such child. In cases where one of the parents is an alien, the right of citizenship shall not descend unless the child comes to the United States and resides therein for at least five years continuously immediately previous to his eighteenth birthday, and unless, within six months after the child's twenty-first birthday, he or she shall take an oath of allegiance to the United States of America as prescribed by the Bureau of Naturalization."

7. The plaintiff was warned in writing by United States authorities of the impact of S. 301 (b) when he was in this country in January 1963 and again in November of that year when he was in Italy. Sometime after February 11, 1964, he was orally advised by the American Embassy at Rome that he had lost his United States citizenship pursuant to S. 301 (b). In November 1966 he was so notified in writing by the American Consul in Rome when the plaintiff requested another American passport.

8. On March 28, 1960, plaintiff registered under the United States Selective Service laws with the American Consul in Rome. At that time he already was 20 years of age. He took in Italy, and passed, a United States Army physical examination. On December 11, 1963, he was asked to report for induction in the District of Columbia. This induction, however, was then deferred because of his NATO defense program employment. At the time of deferment he was warned of the danger of losing his United States citizenship if he did not comply with the residence requirements. After February 14, 1964, Selective Service advised him by letter that, due to the loss of his citizenship, he had no further obligation for United States military service.

6. Plaintiff thus concededly failed to comply with the conditions imposed by S. 301 (b) of the Act.

7. The plaintiff instituted the present action against the Secretary of State in the Southern District of New York. He asked that the Secretary be enjoined from carrying out and enforcing S. 301 (b), and also requested a declaratory judgment that S. 301 (b) is unconstitutional as violative of the Fifth Amendment's Due Process Clause, the Eighth Amendment's Punishment Clause, and the Ninth Amendment, and that he is and always has been a nativeborn United States citizen. Because, under 28 USC S. 1391 (e), the New York venue was improper, the case was transferred to the District of Columbia. 28 USC S. 1406 (a).

8. A three-judge District Court was convened. With the facts stipulated, cross motions for summary judgment were filed. The District Court ruled that S. 301 (b) was unconstitutional, citing Afroyim v. Rusk, (1967) 387 US 253 = 18 L Ed 2d 757 = 87 S Ct 1660 and Schneider v. Rusk, (1964) 377 US 163 = 12 L Ed 2d 218 = 84 S Ct 1187 and sustained the plaintiff's summary judgment motion. Bellei v. Rusk, 296 F Supp 1247 (DC 1969). This Court noted probable jurisdiction, Rogers v. Bellei, (1969) 396 US 811 = 24 L Ed 2d 64 = 90 S Ct 69 and, after argument at the 1969 Term, restored the case to the calendar for reargument. (1970) 397 US 1060 = 26 L Ed 2d 267 = 90 S Ct 1834.

9. The two cases primarily relied upon by the three-judge District Court are, of course, of particular significance here.

10. (1964) 377 US 163 = 12 L Ed 2d 218 = 84 S Ct 1187. Mrs. Schneider, a German national by birth, acquired United States citizenship derivatively through her mother's naturalization in the United States. She came to this country as a small child with her parents and remained here until she finished college. She then went abroad for graduate work, was engaged to a German national, married in Germany, and stayed in residence there. She declared that she had no intention of returning to the United States. In 1959, a passport was denied by the State Department on the ground that she had lost her United States citizenship under the specific provisions of S. 352 (a) (1) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, 8 USC S. 1484 (a) (1), by continuous residence for three years in a foreign state of which she was formerly a national. The Court, by a five-to-three vote, held the statute violative of Fifth Amendment due process because there was no like restriction against foreign residence by native-born citizens.

11. The dissent (Mr. Justice Clark, joined by Justices Harlan and White) based its position on what it regarded as the long acceptance of expatriating naturalized citizens who voluntarily return to residence in their native lands; possible international complications; past decisions approving the power of Congress to enact statutes of that type; and the Constitution's distinctions between native-born and naturalized citizens.

12. (1967) 387 US 253, 18 L Ed 2d 757, 87 S Ct 1660. Mr. Afroyim, a Polish national by birth, immigrated to the United States at age 19 and after 14 years here acquired United States citizenship by naturalization. Twenty-four years later he went to Israel and voted in a political election there. In 1960 a passport was denied him by the State Department on the ground that he had lost his United States citizenship under the specific provisions of S. 349 (a) (5) of the Act, 8 USC S. 1481 (a) (5), by his foreign voting. The Court by a five-to-four vote, held that the Fourteenth Amendment's definition of citizenship was significant; that Congress has no "general power, express or implied, to take away an American citizen's citizenship without his assent," (1967) 387 US, at 257 = 18 L Ed 2d at p. 761; that Congress' power is to provide a uniform rule of naturalization and, when once exercised with respect to the individual, is exhausted, citing Mr. Chief Justice Marshall's well-known but not uncontroversial dictum in Osborn v. Bank of the United States, (1824) 9 Wheat 738, 827, 6 L Ed 204, 225 and that the "undeniable purpose" of the Fourteenth Amendment was to make the recently conferred "citizenship of Negroes permanent and secure" and "to put citizenship beyond the power of any governmental unit to destroy," (1967) 387 US, at p. 263 = 18 L Ed 2d at p. 764. Perez v. Brownell (1958) 356 US 44 = 2 L Ed 2d 603 = 78 S Ct 568 a five-to-four holding within the decade and precisely to the opposite effect, was overruled.

13. The dissent (Mr. Justice Harlan, joined by Justices Clark, Stewart, and White) took issue with the Court's claim of issue with the legislative history, would elucidate the Marshall dictum, and observed that the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment did not deprive Congress of the power to expatriate on permissible grounds consistent with "other relevant commands" of the Constitution. (1967) 387 US at p. 292 = 18 L Ed 2d at p. 780.

14. It is to be observed that both Mrs. Schneider and Mr. Afroyim had resided in this country for years. Each had acquired United States citizenship here by the naturalization process (in one case derivative and in the other direct) prescribed by the National Legislature. Each, in short, was covered explicitly by the Fourteenth Amendment's very first sentence: "All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside." This of course accounts for the Court's emphasis in Afroyim upon "Fourteenth Amendment citizenship." (1967) 387 US, at p. 262 = 18 L Ed 2d at p. 763.

15. The statutes culminating in S. 301 merit review:

1. The very first Congress, at its Second Session, proceeded to implement its power, under the Constitution's Article I, S. 8, cl. 4, to "establish a uniform rule of Naturalization" by producing the Act of March 26, 1790, 1 Stat 103. That statute, among other things, stated, "And the children of citizens of the United States, that may be born beyond sea, or out of the limits of the United States, shall be considered as natural born citizens: Provided, That the right of citizenship shall not descend to persons whose fathers have never been resident in the United States. . . ."

2. A like provision, with only minor changes in phrasing and with the same emphasis on paternal residence, was continuously in effect through three succeeding naturalization Acts. Act of January 29, 1795, S. 3, 1 Stat 414, 415; Act of April 14, 1802, S. 4, 2 Stat 153, 155; Act of February 10, 1855, S. 1, 10 Stat 604. The only significant difference is that the 1790, 1795, and 1802 Acts read retrospectively, while the 1855 Act reads prospectively as well. See Weedin v. Chin Bow (1927) 274 US 657, 664 = 71 L Ed 1284, 1287 = 47 S Ct 772 and Montana v. Kennedy (1961) 366 US 308, 311 = 6 L Ed 2d 313, 315 = 81 S Ct 1336.

3. Section 1 of the 1855 Act, with changes unimportant here, was embodied as S. 1993 of the Revised Statutes of 1878 (iii).

4. The Act of March 2, 1907, S. 6, 34 Stat 1228, 1229, provided that all children born abroad who were citi-

(iii) "All children heretofore born or hereafter born out of the limits and jurisdiction of the United States, whose fathers were or may be at the time of their birth citizens thereof, are declared to be citizens of the United States; but the rights of citizenship shall not descend to children whose fathers never resided in the United States."

zens under Rev Stat S. 1993 and who continued to reside elsewhere, in order to receive governmental protection, were to record at age 18 their intention to become residents and remain citizens of the United States and were to take the oath of allegiance upon attaining their majority (iv).

5. The change in S. 1993 effected by the Act of May 24, 1934, is reflected in n. 2, supra. This eliminated the theretofore imposed restriction to the paternal parent and prospectively granted citizenship, subject to a five-year continuous residence requirement and an oath, to the foreign-born child of either a citizen father or a citizen mother. This was the form of the statute at the time of plaintiff's birth on December 22, 1939.

6. The Nationality Act of 1940, S. 201, 54 Stat 1137, 1138-1139, contained a similar condition directed to a total of five years' residence in the United States between the ages of 13 and 21. (v)

(iv) "That all children born outside the limits of the United States who are citizens thereof in accordance with the provisions of section nineteen hundred and ninety-three of the Revised Statutes of the United States and who continue to reside outside the United States shall, in order to receive the protection of this Government, be required upon reaching the age of eighteen years to record at an American consulate their intention to become residents and remain citizens of the United States and shall be further required to take the oath of allegiance to the United States upon attaining their majority."

(v) "Sec. 201. The following shall be nationals and citizens of the United States at birth:

"(g) A person born outside the United States and its outlying possessions of parents one of whom is a citizen of the United States who, prior to the birth of such person, has had ten years residence in the United States or one of its outlying possessions, at least five of which were after attaining the age of sixteen years; the other being an alien; Provided, That in order to retain such citizenship, the child must reside in the United States or its outlying possessions for a period or periods totaling five years between the ages of thirteen and twenty-one years:

7. The Immigration and Nationality Act, by its S. 407, 66 Stat 281, became law in December 1952. Its Section 301 (b) contains a five years' continuous residence condition (alleviated, with the 1957 amendment, see n. 1, by an allowance for absences less than 12 months in the aggregate) directed to the period between 14 and 28 years of age.

16. The statutory pattern, therefore, developed and expanded from (a) one, established in 1790 and enduring through the Revised Statutes and until 1934, where citizenship was specifically denied to the child born abroad of a father who never resided in the United States; to (b), in 1907, a governmental protection condition for the child born of an American citizen father and residing abroad, dependent upon a declaration of intent and the oath of allegiance at majority; to (c), in 1934, a condition, for the child born abroad of one United States citizen parent and one alien parent, of five years' continuous residence in the United States before age 18 and the oath of allegiance within six months after majority; to (d), in 1940, a condition, for that child, of five years' residence here, not necessarily continuous, between ages 13 and 21; to (e), in 1952, a condition, for that child, of five years' continuous residence here, with allowance, between ages 14 and 28.

17. The application of these respective statutes to a person in plaintiff Bellei's position produces the following results:

1. Not until 1934 would that person have had any conceivable claim to United States citizenship. For more than a century and a half no statute Provided further, That if the child has not taken up a residence in the United States or its outlying possessions by the time he reaches the age of sixteen years, or if he resides abroad for such a time that it becomes impossible for him to complete the five years' residence in the United States or its outlying possessions before reaching the age of twenty-one years, his American citizenship shall thereupon cease.

"(h) The foregoing provisions of sub-section (g) concerning retention of citizenship shall apply to a child born abroad subsequent to May 24, 1934."

was of assistance. Maternal citizenship afforded no benefit. One may observe, too, that if Mr. Bellei had been born in 1933, instead of in 1939, he would have no claim even today. (1961) 366 US 308 = 6 L. Ed. 2d 313 supra.

2. Despite the recognition of the maternal root by the 1934 amendment, in effect at the time of plaintiff's birth, and despite the continuing liberalization of the succeeding statutes, the plaintiff still would not be entitled to full citizenship because, although his mother met the condition for her residence in the United States, the plaintiff never did fulfill the residential condition imposed for him by any of the statutes.

3. This is so even though the liberalizing 1940 and 1952 statutes, enacted after the plaintiff's birth, were applicable by their terms to one born abroad subsequent to May 24, 1934, the date of the 1934 Act, and were available to the plaintiff. See nn. 5 and 1, supra.

18. Thus, in summary, it may be said fairly that, for the most part, each successive statute, as applied to a foreign-born child of one United States citizen parent moved in a direction of leniency for the child. For plaintiff Bellei the statute changed from complete disqualification to citizenship upon a condition subsequent, with that condition being expanded and made less onerous, and, after his birth, with the succeeding liberalizing provisions made applicable to him in replacement of the stricter statute in effect when he was born. The plaintiff nevertheless failed to satisfy any form of the condition.

19. It is evident that Congress felt itself possessed of the power to grant citizenship to the foreign-born and at the same time to impose qualifications and conditions for that citizenship. Of course, Congress obviously felt that way, too, about the two expatriation provisions invalidated by the decisions in Schneider and Afroyim.

20. We look again, then, at the Constitution and further indulge in history's assistance:

21. Of initial significance, because of its being the foundation stone of the Court's decisional structure in Afroyim, and, perhaps by a process of after-the-fact osmosis, of the earlier Schneider as well, is the Fourteenth Amendment's opening sentence:

"All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside."

22. The central fact, in our weighing of the plaintiff's claim to continuing and therefore current United States citizenship, is that he was born abroad. He was not born in the United States. He was not naturalized in the United States. And he has not been subject to the jurisdiction of the United States. All this being so, it seems indisputable that the first sentence of the Fourteenth Amendment has no application to plaintiff Bellei. He simply is not a Fourteenth-Amendment-first sentence citizen. His posture contrasts with that of Mr. Afroyim, who was naturalized in the United States, and with that of Mrs. Schneider, whose citizenship was derivative by her presence here and by her mother's naturalization here.

23. The plaintiff's claim thus must center in the statutory power of Congress and in the appropriate exercise of that power within the restrictions of any pertinent constitutional provisions other than the Fourteenth Amendment's first sentence.

24. The reach of congressional power in this area is readily apparent:

25. 1. Over 70 years ago the Court, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Gray, reviewed and discussed early English statutes relating to rights of inheritance and of citizenship of persons born abroad of parents who were British subjects. United States v. Wong Kim Ark, (1898) 169 US 649, 668-671 = 42 L. Ed. 890, 897, 898 = 18 S. Ct. 456. The Court concluded that "naturalization by descent" was not a common law concept but was dependent instead, upon statutory enactment. The statutes examined were 25 Edw. III (1350); 29 Car. II (1677), c. 6 S. 1; 7 Anne (1708), c. 5, S. 3; 4 Geo. II (1731), c. 21; and 13 Geo. III (1773), c. 21. Later Mr. Chief Justice Taft, speaking for a unanimous Court, referred to this "very learned and useful opinion of Mr. Justice Gray" and observed "that birth within the limits of the jurisdiction of the Crown, and of the United States, as the successor of the Crown, fixed nationality, and that there could be no change in this rule of law except by statute. . . . "Weedin v. Chin Bow, supra, (1927) 274 US 657, 660 = 71 L Ed 1284, 1285 = 47 S Ct 772. He referred to the cited English statutes and stated, "These statutes applied to the colonies before the War of Independence."

26. We thus have an acknowledgment that our law in this area follows English concepts with an acceptance of the jus soli, that is, that the place of birth governs citizenship status except as modified by statute.

27. 2. The Constitution as originally adopted contained no definition of United States citizenship. However, it referred to citizenship in general terms and in varying contexts: Article I, S. 2, cl. 2, qualifications for members of the House; Article I, S. 3; cl. 3, qualifications for Senators; Article II, S. 1, cl. 4, eligibility for the office of President; Article III, S. 2, cl. 1, citizenship as affecting judicial power of the United States. And, as has been noted, Article I, S. 8, cl. 4, vested Congress with the power to "establish a uniform Rule of Naturalization." The historical reviews in the Afroyim opinions provide an intimation that the Constitution's lack of definitional specificity may well have been attributable in part to the desire to avoid entanglement in the then existing controversy between concepts of state and national citizenship and with the difficult question of the status of Negro slaves.

28. In any event, although one might have expected a definition of citizenship in constitutional terms, none was embraced in the original document or, indeed, in any of the amendments adopted prior to the War Between the States.

29. 3. Apart from the passing reference to the "natural born Citizen" in the Constitution's Article II, S. 1, cl. 4, we have, in the Civil Rights Act of April 9, 1866, 14 Stat 27, the first statutory recognition and concomitant formal definition of the citizenship status of the native-born: "[A]ll persons born in the United States and not subject to any foreign power, excluding Indians not taxed, are hereby declared to be citizens of the United States. . . ." This, of course, found immediate expression in the Fourteenth Amendment, adopted in 1868, with expansion to "All persons born or naturalized in the United States. . . ." As has been noted above, the Amendment's "undeniable purpose" was "to make citizenship of Negroes permanent and secure" and not subject to change by mere statute. Afroyim v. Rusk, supra, (1967) 387 US, at p. 263 = 18 L Ed 2d at p. 764. See Flack, Adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment 88-94 (1908).

30. Mr. Justice Gray has observed that the first sentence of the Fourteenth Amendment was "declaratory of existing rights, and affirmative of existing law," so far as the qualifications of being born in the United States, being naturalized in the United States, and being subject to its jurisdiction are concerned. United States v. Wong Kim Ark, supra, (1898) 169 US, at p. 688 = 42 L Ed at p. 905. Then follows a most significant sentence.

"But it [the first sentence of the Fourteenth Amendment] has not touched the acquisition of citizenship by being born abroad of American parents; and has left that subject to be regulated, as it had always been, by Congress, in the exercise of the power conferred by the Constitution to establish a uniform rule of naturalization."

31. Thus, at long last, there emerged an express constitutional definition of citizenship. But it was one restricted to the combination of three factors, each and all significant: birth in the United States, naturalization in the United States, and subjection to the jurisdiction of the United States. The definition obviously did not apply to any acquisition of citizenship by being born abroad of an American parent. That type, and any other not covered by the Fourteenth Amendment, was necessarily left to proper congressional action.

32. 4. The Court has recognized the existence of this power. It has observed, "No alien has the slightest right to naturalization unless all statutory requirements are complied with. . . ." United States v. Ginsberg, (1917) 243 US 472, 475 = 61 L Ed 853, 856 = 37 S Ct 422 See United States v. Ness, (1917) 245 US 319, = 62 L Ed 321 = 38 S Ct 118, Maney v. United States, (1928) 278 US 17, = 73 L Ed 156 = 49 S Ct 15. And the Court has specifically recognized the power of Congress not to grant a United States citizen the right to transmit citizenship by descent. As hereinabove noted, persons born abroad, even of United States citizen fathers who, however, acquired American citizenship after the effective date of the 1802 Act, were aliens. Congress responded to that situation only by enacting the 1855 statute. Montana v. Kennedy, supra, (1961) 366 US at p. 311 = 6 L Ed 2d at p. 315. But more than 50 years had expired during which, because of the withholding of that benefit by Congress, citizenship by such descent was not bestowed. United States v. Wong Kim Ark, supra (1898) 169 US at pp. 673-674 = 42 L Ed at p. 899. Then, too, the Court has recognized that until the 1934 Act the transmission of citizenship to one born abroad was restricted to the child of a qualifying American father, and withheld completely from the child of a United States citizen mother and an alien father. Montana v. Kennedy, supra.

33. Further, it is conceded here both that Congress may withhold citizenship from persons like plaintiff Bellei (vi) and may prescribe a period of residence in the United States as a condition precedent without constitutional question. (vii)

34. Thus we have the presence of congressional power in this area, its exercise, and the Court's specific recognition of that power and of its having been properly withheld or properly used in particular situations.

35. This takes us, then, to the issue of the constitutionality of the exercise of that congressional power when it is used to impose the condition subsequent that confronted plaintiff Bellei. We conclude that its imposition is not unreasonable, arbitrary, or unlawful, and that it withstands the present constitutional challenge.

(vi) At oral argument plaintiff's counsel conceded that "Congress need not vest a person in his position with citizenship if it chooses not to do so." Transcript of Oral Argument, p. 27. Counsel for the amici sympathetic with the plaintiff's cause made a like concession. Id., p. 36.

(vii) Transcript of Oral Argument, p. 26.

36. The Congress has an appropriate concern with problems attendant on dual nationality. Sarongnan v. United States, (1950) 338 US 491, 500 = 94 L Ed 287, 295 = 70 S Ct 292 = 15 ALR 2d 538 Bar-Yaacov, Dual Nationality, xi and 4 (1961). These problems are particularly acute when it is the father who is the child's alien parent and the father chooses to have his family reside in the country of his own nationality. The child is reared, at best, in an atmosphere of divided loyalty. We cannot say that a concern that the child's own primary allegiance is to the country of his birth and of his father's allegiance is either misplaced or arbitrary.

37. The duality also creates problems for the governments involved. Mr. Justice Brennan recognized this when, concurring in Kennedy v. Mendoza-Martinez, (1963) 372 US 144, 187 = 9 L Ed 2d 644, 671 = 83 S Ct 554, a case concerning nativeborn citizens, he observed: "We have recognized the entanglements which may stem from dual allegiance. . . ." In a famous case Mr. Justice Douglas wrote of the problem of dual citizenship. Kawakita v. United States, (1952) 343 US 717, 723-736 = 96 L Ed 1249, 1257 to 1264 = 72 S Ct 950. He noted that "[o]ne who has a dual nationality will be subject to claims from both nations, claims which at times may be competing or conflicting," p. 733; 96 L Ed p. 1263; that one with dual nationality cannot turn that status "into a fair-weather citizenship," p. 736 = 96 L Ed p. 1264; and that "[c]ircumstances may compel one who has a dual nationality to do acts which would not be compatible with the obligation of American citizenship," p. 736 = 96 L Ed p. 1264. The District Court in this very case conceded:

"It is a legitimate concern of Congress that those who bear American citizenship and receive its benefits have some nexus to the United States." (1969) 296 F Supp, at 1252.

38. There are at least intimations in the decided cases that a dual national constitutionally may be required to make an election. In Perkins v. Elg, (1939) 307 US 325, 329 = 83 L Ed 1320, 1323 = 59 S Ct 884 the Court observed that a native-born citizen who had acquired dual nationality during minority through his parents' foreign naturalization abroad did not lose his United States citizenship "provided that on attaining majority he elects to retain that citizenship and to return to the United States to resume its duties." In supra, (1952) 343 US, at p. 734 = 95 L Ed at p. 1263, the Court noted that a dual national "under certain circumstances" can be deprived of his American citizenship through an Act of Congress. In Mandoli v. Acheson, (1952) 344 US 133, 138 = 97 L Ed 146, 150 = 73 S Ct 135 the Court took pains to observe that there was no statute in existence imposing an election upon that dual national litigant.

39. These cases do not flatly say that a duty to elect may be constitutionally imposed. They surely indicate, however, that this is possible, and in Mandoli the holding was based on the very absence of a statute and not on any theory of unconstitutionality, and all three of these cases concerned persons who were born here, that is, persons who possessed Fourteenth Amendment citizenship they did not concern a person, such as plaintiff Bellei, whose claim to citizenship is wholly, and only, statutory.

40. The statutory development outlined in part IV above, by itself and without reference to the underlying legislative history, committee reports, and other studies, reveals a careful consideration by the Congress of the problems attendant upon dual nationality of a person born abroad. This was purposeful and not accidental. It was legislation structured with care and in the light of then apparent problems.

41. The solution to the dual nationality dilemma provided by the Congress by way of required residence surely is not unreasonable. It may not be the best that could be devised, but here, too, we cannot say that it is irrational or arbitrary or unfair. Congress first has imposed a condition precedent in that the citizen parent must have been in the United States or its possessions not less than 10 years, at least five of which are after attaining age 14. It then has imposed, as to the foreign-born child himself, the condition subsequent as to residence here. The Court already had emphasized the importance of residence in this country as the talisman of dedicated attachment, supra, (1927) 274 US, at

pp. 666-667 = 71 L Ed at p. 1288, and said:

"It is not too much to say, therefore, that Congress at that time [when Rev Stat S. 1993 was under consideration] attached more importance to actual residence in the United States as indicating a basis for citizenship than it did to descent from those who had been born citizens of the colonies or of the states before the Constitution. As said by Mr. Fish, when Secretary of State, to Minister Washburn, June 28, 1873, in speaking of this very proviso, 'the heritable blood of citizenship was thus associated unmistakably with residence within the country which was thus recognized as essential to full citizenship.' Foreign Relations of the United States, Pt. 1, 1873, p. 259." (1927) 274 US, at pp. 665-666 = 71 L Ed at pp. 1287, 1288. The same policy is reflected in the required period of residence here for aliens seeking naturalization. 8 USC S. 1427 (a).

42. We feel that it does not make good constitutional sense, or comport with logic, to say, on the one hand, that Congress may impose a condition precedent, with no constitutional complication, and yet be powerless to impose precisely the same condition subsequent. Any such distinction, of course, must rest, if it has any basis at all, on the asserted "premise that the rights of citizenship of the native born and of the naturalized person are of the same dignity and are coextensive," supra, (1964) 377 US, at p. 165 = 12 L Ed 2d at p. 220, and on the announcement that Congress has no "power, express or implied, to take away an American citizen's citizenship without his assent," supra (1967) 387 US, at p. 257 = 18 L Ed 2d at p. 761. But, as pointed out above, these were utterances bottomed upon Fourteenth Amendment citizenship and that Amendment's direct reference to "persons born or naturalized in the United States." We do not accept the notion that those utterances are now to be judicially extended to citizenship not based upon the Fourteenth Amendment and to make citizenship an absolute. That it is not an absolute is demonstrated by the fact that even Fourteenth Amendment citizenship by naturalization, when unlawfully procured, may be set aside. Afroyim v. Rusk, supra (1967) 387 US, at p. 267 n. 23 = 18 L Ed 2d at p. 766.

43. A contrary holding would convert what is congressional generosity into something unanticipated and obviously undesired by the Congress. Our National Legislature indulged the foreign-born child with presumptive citizenship, subject to subsequent satisfaction of a reasonable residence requirement, rather than to deny him citizenship outright, as concededly it had the power to do, and relegate the child, if he desired American citizenship, to the more arduous requirements of the usual naturalization process. The plaintiff here would force the Congress to choose between unconditional conferment of United States citizenship at birth and deferment of citizenship until a condition precedent is fulfilled. We are not convinced that the Constitution requires so rigid a choice. If it does, the congressional response seems obvious.

44. Neither are we persuaded that a condition subsequent in this area impresses one with "second-class citizenship." That cliché is too handy and too easy, and, like most clichés, can be misleading. That the condition subsequent may be beneficial is apparent in the light of the conceded fact that citizenship to this plaintiff was fully deniable. The proper emphasis is on what the statute permits him to gain from the possible starting point of noncitizenship, not on what he claims to lose from the possible starting point of full citizenship to which he has no constitutional right in the first place. His citizenship, while it lasts, although conditional, is not "secondclass."

45. The plaintiff is not stateless. His Italian citizenship remains. He has lived practically all his life in Italy. He has never lived in this country; although he has visited here five times, the stipulated facts contain no indication that he ever will live here. He asserts no claim of ignorance or of mistake or even of hardship. He was warned several times of the provision of the statute and of his need to take up residence in the United States prior to his 23d birthday.

46. We hold that S. 301 (b) has no constitutional infirmity in its application to plaintiff Bellei. The judgment of the District Court is reversed.

SEPARATE OPINIONS

Mr. Justice Black, with whom

Mr. Justice Douglas and Mr. Justice Marshall join, dissenting.

47-48. Less than four years ago this Court held that "the Fourteenth Amendment was designed to, and does, protect every citizen of this Nation against a congressional forcible destruction of his citizenship, whatever his creed, colour, or race. Our holding does no more than to give to this citizen that which is his own, a constitutional right to remain a citizen in a free country unless he voluntarily relinquishes that citizenship." (1967). 387 US 253, 268 = 18 L Ed 2d 757 767=87 S Ct 1660.

The holding was clear. Congress could not, until today, consistently with the Fourteenth Amendment enact a law stripping an American of his citizenship which he has never voluntarily renounced or given up. Now this Court, by a vote of five to four through a simple change in its composition, overrules that decision.

49. The Court today holds that Congress can indeed rob a citizen of his citizenship just so long as five members of this Court can satisfy themselves that the congressional action was not "unreasonable, arbitrary," ante, (1971) 28 L Ed 2d at p. 510 = (AIR 1971 US SC at pp. 81, 82) "misplaced or arbitrary," ante, 28 L Ed 2d at 510 or "irrational or arbitrary or unfair," ante, (1971) 23 L Ed 2d at p. 511 = (AIR 1971 USSC at p. 82) My first comment is that not one of these "tests" appears in the Constitution. Moreover, it seems a little strange to find such "tests" as these announced in an opinion which condemns the earlier decisions it overrules for their resort to clichés, which it describes as "too handy and too easy, and, like most clichés, can be misleading." Ante, (1971) 28 L Ed at p. 512 = (AIR 1971 USSC at p. 83) That description precisely fits those words and clauses which the majority uses, but which the Constitution does not.

50. The Constitution, written for the ages, cannot rise and fall with this Court's passing notions of what is "fair," or "reasonable," or "arbitrary." The Fourteenth Amendment commands:

"All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside."

Speaking of this very language, the Court held in Afroyim that no American can be deprived of his citizenship without his assent. Today, the Court overrules that holding. This precious Fourteenth Amendment American citizenship should not be blown around by every passing political wind that changes the composition of this Court. I dissent.

51. Bellei became an American citizen under the terms of S. 1993 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, (i) and he has neither renounced his American citizenship nor voluntarily assented to any governmental act terminating it. He has never given any indication of wanting to expatriate himself but, rather, has consistently maintained that he wants to keep his American citizenship. In my view, the decision in Afroyim, therefore, requires the Court to hold here that Bellei has been unconstitutionally deprived by S. 301 (b) of the Immigration and Nationality Act of 1952 (ii) of his right to be an American citizen. Since S. 301 (b) does not take into account in any way whether the citizen intends or desires to relinquish his citizenship, that section is inevitably inconsistent with the constitutional principles declared in Afroyim.

52. The Court today holds that the Citizenship Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment has no application to Bellei. The Court first notes that Afroyim was essentially a case construing the Citizenship Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Since the Citizenship Clause declares that "All persons born or naturalized in the United States... are citizens of the United States.....," the Court reasons that the protections against involuntary expatriation declared in Afroyim do not protect all American citizens, but only those "born or naturalized in the United States." Afroyim, the argument runs, was naturalized in this country so he was protected by the Citizenship Clause, but Bellei, since he acquired his American citizenship at birth in Italy as a foreign-born child of an American citizen, was neither born nor naturalized in the United States and, hence, falls outside the scope of the Fourteenth Amendment guarantees declared in Afroyim. One could hardly call this a generous reading of the great purposes the Fourteenth Amendment was adopted to bring about.

(ii) 8 USC S. 1401. (b).

53. While conceding that Bellei is an American Citizen, the majority states: "He simply is not a Fourteenth-Amendment — first — sentence citizen." Therefore, the majority reasons, the congressional revocation of his citizenship is not barred by the Constitution. I cannot accept the Court's conclusion that the Fourteenth Amendment protects the citizenship of some Americans and not others.

54. Indeed, the concept of a hierarchy of citizenship, suggested by the majority opinion, was flatly rejected in (1964) 377 US 163 = 12 L Ed 2d 218 = 84 S Ct 1187 "We start from the premise that the rights of citizenship of the native born and of the naturalized person are of the same dignity and are coextensive." Id., at 165, 12 L Ed 2d at 220. The Court there held that Congress could not deprive Mrs. Schneider of her citizenship, which she, like Mr. Bellei in the present case, acquired derivatively through her citizen mother. Consequently, the majority in its rush to overrule Afroyim must also, in effect, overrule Schneider as well.

55. Under the view adopted by the majority today, all children born to Americans while abroad would be excluded from the protections of the Citizenship Clause and would instead be relegated to the permanent status of second-class citizenship, subject to revocation at the will of Congress. The Court rejected such narrow, restrictive, and super-technical interpretations of the Citizenship Clause when it held in Afroyim that that Clause "was designed to, and does, protect every citizen of this Nation"(1967) 387 US, at pp. 267-268 = 18 L Ed 2d at pp. 766-767.

56. Afroyim's broad interpretation of the scope of the Citizenship Clause finds ample support in the language and history of the Fourteenth Amendment. Bellei was not "born in the United States," but he was, constitutionally speaking, "naturalized in the United States." Although those Americans who acquire their citizenship under statutes conferring citizenship on the foreign-born children of citizens are not popularly thought of as naturalized citizens, the use of the word "naturalize" in this way has a considerable constitutional history. Congress is empowered by the Constitution to "establish an uniform Rule of Naturalization," Art. I, S. 8. Anyone acquiring citizenship solely under the exercise of this power is, constitutionally speaking, a naturalized citizen. The first congressional exercise of this power, entitled "An Act to establish an uniform rule of naturalization," was passed in 1790 at the Second Session of the First Congress. It provided in part:

"And the children of citizens of the United States, that may be born beyond the sea, or out of the limits of the United States, shall be considered as natural-born citizens: Provided, that the right of citizenship shall not descend to persons whose fathers have never been resident in the United States." 1 Stat 103, 104. This provision is the earliest form of the statute under which Bellei acquired his citizenship. Its enactment as part of a "rule of naturalization" shows, I think, that the First Congress conceived of this and most likely all other purely statutory grants of citizenship as forms or varieties of naturalization. However, the clearest expression of the idea that Bellei and others similarly situated should for constitutional purposes be considered as naturalized citizens is to be found in (1898) 169 US 649 = 42 L Ed 890 = 18 S Ct 456:

"The Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution . . . contemplates two sources of citizenship, and two only: birth and naturalization. Citizenship by naturalization can only be acquired by naturalization under the authority and in the forms of law. But citizenship by birth is established by the mere fact of birth under the circumstances defined in the Constitution. Every person born in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, becomes at once a citizen of the United States, and needs no naturalization. A person born out of the jurisdiction of the United States can only become a citizen by being naturalized, either by treaty, as in the case of the annexation of foreign territory; or by authority of Congress, exercised either by declaring certain classes of persons to be citizens, as in the enactments conferring citizenship upon foreign-born children of citizens, or by enabling foreigners individually to become citizens by proceedings in the judicial tribunals, as in the ordinary provisions of the naturalization acts." 169 US, at 702-703 = 42 L Ed at 909; 910. The Court in Wong Kim Ark thus stated a broad and comprehensive definition of naturalization. As shown in Wong Kim Ark, naturalization when used in its constitutional sense is a generic term describing and including within its meaning all those modes of acquiring American citizenship other than birth in this country. All means of obtaining American citizenship which are dependent upon a congressional enactment are forms of naturalization. This inclusive definition has been adopted in several opinions of this Court besides (1893) 169 US 649 = 42 L Ed 890, supra. Thus in Minor v. Happersett, (1874) 88 US 162, 167 = 22 L Ed 627, 628 the Court said: "Additions might always be made to the citizenship of the United States in two ways: first, by birth, and second, by naturalization. . . [N]ew citizens may be born or they may be created by naturalization." And in Elk v. Wilkins, (1884) 112 US 94, 28 L Ed 643, 5 S Ct 41 the Court took the position that the Fourteenth Amendment "contemplates two sources of citizenship and two sources only: birth and naturalization. . . . Persons not . . . subject to the jurisdiction of the United States at the time of birth cannot become so afterwards, except by being naturalized, either individually, as by proceedings under the naturalization acts, or collectively, as by force of a treaty by which foreign territory is acquired." 112 US, at pp. 101-102 = 28 L Ed at p. 646.

Moreover, this concept of naturalization is the only one permitted by this Court's consistent adoption of the view that the Fourteenth Amendment was intended to supply a comprehensive definition of American citizenship. In an opinion written shortly after the Fourteenth Amendment was ratified, the Court stated that one of the primary purposes of the Citizenship Clause was "to establish a clear and comprehensive definition of citizenship which should declare what should constitute citizenship of the United States, and also citizenship of a State." Slaughter-House Cases, (1872) 83 US

36, at p. 73 = 21 L Ed 394, at p. 407. In his study, The Adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment, Professor Flack similarly concluded that the Citizenship Clause "put beyond doubt and cavil in the original law who were citizens of the United States." H. Flack, The Adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment 89 (1908). And in Afroyim both majority and dissenting Justices appear to have agreed on the basic proposition that the scope of the Citizenship Clause, whatever its effect, did reach all citizens. The opinion of the Court in Afroyim described the Citizenship Clause as "... calculated completely to control the status of citizenship." (1967) 387 US, at p. 262 = 18 L Ed 2d at p. 763. And the dissenting Justices agreed with this proposition to the extent of holding that the Citizenship Clause was a "declaration of the classes of individuals to whom citizenship initially attaches." Id. at 292, 18 L Ed 2d at 780.

57. The majority opinion appears at times to rely on the argument that Bellei, while he concededly might have been a naturalized citizen, was not naturalized "in the United States." This interpretation obviously imposes a limitation on the scope of the Citizenship Clause which is inconsistent with the conclusion expressed above that the Fourteenth Amendment provides a comprehensive definition of American citizenship, for the majority's view would exclude from the protection of that Clause all those who acquired American citizenship while abroad. I cannot accept the narrow and extraordinarily technical reading of the Fourteenth Amendment employed by the Court today. If, for example, Congress should decide to vest the authority to naturalize aliens in American embassy officials abroad rather than having the ceremony performed in this country, I have no doubt that those so naturalized would be just as fully protected by the Fourteenth Amendment as are those who go through our present naturalization procedures. Rather than the technical reading adopted by the majority, it is my view that the word "in" as it appears in the phrase "in the United States" was surely meant to be understood in two somewhat different senses: one can become a citizen of this country by being born within it or by being naturalized into it. This interpretation is supported by the legislative history of the Citizenship Clause. That clause was added in the Senate rather late in the debates on the Fourteenth Amendment, and as originally introduced its reference was to all those "born in the United States or naturalized by the laws thereof." Cong Globe, 39th Cong, 1st Sess, at 2768. (Emphasis added.) The final version of the Citizenship Clause was undoubtedly intended to have this same scope. See H. Flack, The Adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment, 88-89 (1908).

58. The majority takes the position that Bellei, although admittedly a citizen of this country, was not entitled to the protections of the Citizenship Clause. I would not depart from the holding in Afroyim that every American citizen has Fourteenth Amendment citizenship. Bellei, as a naturalized American, is entitled to all the rights and privileges of American citizenship, including the right to keep his citizenship until he voluntarily renounces or relinquishes it.

59. The Court today puts aside the Fourteenth Amendment as a standard by which to measure congressional action with respect to citizenship, and substitutes in its place the majority's own vague notions of "fairness." The majority takes a new step with the recurring theme that the test of constitutionality is the Court's own view of what is "fair, reasonable, and right." Despite the concession that Bellei was admittedly an American citizen, and despite the holding in Afroyim that the Fourteenth Amendment has put citizenship, once conferred, beyond the power of Congress to revoke, the majority today upholds the revocation of Bellei's citizenship on the ground that the congressional action was not "irrational or arbitrary or unfair." The majority applies the "shock-the-conscience" test to uphold, rather than strike, a federal statute. It is a dangerous concept of constitutional law that allows the majority to conclude that, because it cannot say the statute is "irrational or arbitrary or unfair," the statute must be constitutional.

60. Of course the Court's construction of the Constitution is not a "strict" one. On the contrary, it proceeds on the premise that a majority of this Court can change the Constitution day by day, month by month, and year by year, according to its shifting notions of what is fair, reasonable, and right. There was little need for the founders to draft a written constitution if this Court can say it is only binding when a majority finds it fair, reasonable, and right to make it so. That is the loosest construction that could be employed. It is true that England has moved along very well in the world without a written constitution. But with complete familiarity with the English experience, our ancestors determined to draft a written constitution which the members of this Court are sworn to obey. While I remain on the Court I shall continue to oppose the power of judges, appointed by changing administrations, to change the Constitution from time to time according to their notions of what is "fair" and "reasonable." I would decide this case not by my views of what is "arbitrary," or what is "fair", but rather by what the Constitution commands.

61. I dissent.

Mr. Justice Brennan, with whom Mr. Justice Douglas, joins, dissenting.

62-63. Since the Court this Term has already downgraded citizens receiving public welfare, Wyman v. James, (1971) 400 US 309, 27 L Ed 2d 408, 91 S Ct 381 and citizens having the misfortune to be illegitimate, Labine v. Vincent, (1971) 28 L Ed 2d 288, I suppose today's decision downgrading citizens born outside the United States should have been expected. Once again, as in James and Labine, the Court's opinion makes evident that its holding is contrary to earlier decisions. Concededly petitioner was a citizen at birth not by constitutional right, but only through operation of a federal statute. In the light of the complete lack of rational basis for distinguishing among citizens whose naturalization was carried out within the physical bounds of the United States, and those, like Bellei, who may be naturalized overseas, the conclusion is compelled that the reference in the Fourteenth Amendment to persons "born or naturalized in the United States" includes those naturalized through operation of an Act of Congress, wherever they may be at the time. Congress was therefore powerless to strip Bellei of his citizenship;

he could lose it only if he voluntarily renounced or relinquished it. (1967), 387 US 253, 18 L Ed 2d 757, 87 S Ct 1660. I dissent.

AIR 1971 U. S. SUPREME COURT 87
(V 58 C 15)
(1971-28 L. Ed. 2d. 519)

James Melvin Kitchens, Petitioner v. S. Lamont Smith, Warden, Respondent.

No. 6131, Decided on 5-4-1971.

Constitution of India, Art 22 — (American Case) — Constitution of U. S. A. — Sixth Amendment — Right to be furnished counsel — Where the assistance of counsel is a constitutional requisite the right to be furnished counsel does not depend on a request by the accused for such assistance. This applies to guilty pleas as well as to trials. Of course to establish his right to appointed counsel at the time of his trial the accused has the burden of proving his inability at that time to hire an attorney — Where the accused in his petition for habeas corpus specifically averred that he was unable to obtain counsel because of his impoverished condition at the time of his trial and the State denied the allegation but made no effort whatever to contradict the testimony of the accused that he was indigent it must be held that the accused proved that he was without counsel due to indigency at the time of his conviction. (Paras 2, 3, 4)

SUMMARY

An accused who pleaded guilty to robbery in a Georgia State Court in 1944, when he was not represented by counsel, who escaped while serving his sentence, and who was returned to Georgia in 1969 to finish his sentence, brought a habeas corpus action in a Georgia County Court, alleging that his conviction was void under Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 US 335, 9 L Ed 2d 799, 83 S Ct 792, 93 ALR 2d 733, since he was not provided with counsel at the time of his conviction although he was too poor to hire a lawyer. At his habeas corpus hearing his uncontradicted testimony was that at the time of his conviction "I was a lot younger and I didn't have any money and I didn't have a lawyer." The county Court denied relief on the ground that the Gideon decision is not retroactive. The Georgia Supreme Court affirmed on the ground that the accused did not testify at the habeas corpus hearing that at the time of his conviction he wanted a lawyer, asked for one, or was unable to hire a lawyer because of his poverty.

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court reversed. In a per curiam opinion expressing the unanimous view of the Court, it was held that (1) the Gideon decision is fully retroactive; (2) the right to counsel, whether on a guilty plea or at a trial, does not depend on a request for counsel, and (3) the accused proved that he was without counsel due to indigency at the time of his conviction.

OPINION OF THE COURT Per Curiam.

1. Petitioner pleaded guilty to robbery in a Georgia State Court in 1944. He was not represented by counsel at any time. While serving his sentence, petitioner escaped and did not return to Georgia until 1969, when he was returned to finish the remainder of his sentence. He then brought this habeas corpus action in county Court, alleging that his conviction was void under Gideon v. Wainwright, (1963) 372 US 335 = 9 L Ed 2d 799 = 83 S Ct 792 = 93 ALR 2d 733. The county Court denied relief because Gideon was "recent law and under the law at the time of his sentence, the sentence met the requirements of the law at that time." This was error since as we have often noted, Gideon is fully retroactive. See, e.g., Linkletter v. Walker, (1965) 381 US 618, 639 = 14 L Ed 2d 601, 614 = 85 S Ct 1731; Desist v. United States, 394 US 244 = 22 L Ed 2d 248 = 89 S Ct 1030, n. 15; McConnell v. Rhay, (1968) 393 US 2, 3 = 21 L Ed 2d 2, 3 = 89 S Ct 32; Stovall v. Denno, (1967) 388 US 293, 297-298 = 18 L Ed 2d 1199, 1203, 1204 = 87 S Ct 1967.

On appeal, the Georgia Supreme Court affirmed the denial of habeas corpus on different grounds, saying that petitioner did not testify at the habeas corpus hearing that he "wanted a lawyer, asked for one, or made any effort to get one" or that "because of his poverty, or any other reason, he was unable to hire a lawyer."

2. As this Court has said, however, "[I]t is settled that where the assistance of counsel is a constitutional requisite, the right to be furnished counsel does not depend on a request." Carnley v. Cochran, (1962) 369 US 506, 513, 8 L Ed 2d 70, 76, 82 S Ct 884. This applies to guilty pleas as well as to trials. Uveges v. Pennsylvania, (1948) 335 US 437, 441, 93 L Ed 127, 131, 69 S Ct 184.

3. Of course, to establish his right to appointed counsel in 1944, petitioner had the burden of proving his inability at that time to hire an attorney. His petition for habeas corpus specifically averred that he was unable to obtain counsel "because of his impoverished condition" at that time. The respondent denied this allegation and thus put the matter in issue. At the hearing, petitioner testified, "I was a lot younger and I didn't have any money and I didn't have a lawyer....." (Emphasis added). The State made no effort whatever to contradict petitioner's testimony that he was indigent; no part of its case went to the issue of indigency. In this light, the Georgia Supreme Court's finding that petitioner "did not testify that because of his poverty, or for any other reason, he was unable to hire a lawyer" is explicable only under the most rigid rules of testimonial construction. Though petitioner did not precisely testify that his failure to obtain a lawyer was a result of his indigency, this was the undeniable implication of his testimony, especially in view of the habeas corpus petition's allegation that petitioner was unable to hire an attorney "because of" his indigency. The hearing below as the transcript shows, was conducted informally. Petitioner had no lawyer, and introduced no evidence other than his own testimony. He testified discursively; no objections were made by the State, nor did it cross-examine petitioner on the issue of indigency.

4. It is our view that on this record petitioner proved he was without counsel due to indigency at the time of his conviction. The petition for certiorari is granted, the judgment of the Georgia Supreme Court is reversed and the case remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.
